Jobs hard to find for homeless

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

This is the fourth part of a series about the people that live and work at the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

Gary Harris never expected to be homeless.

Harris, 21, came to Kansas to find work and to visit his 2-year-old daughter.

When he arrived in Kansas, he couldn't find either. His daughter and her mother had moved back to California.

Harris bounced around from city to city looking for work, a place to stay and something to eat.

"At first, I was nervous," he said. "I didn't know what to do, so I concentrated on living one day at a time."

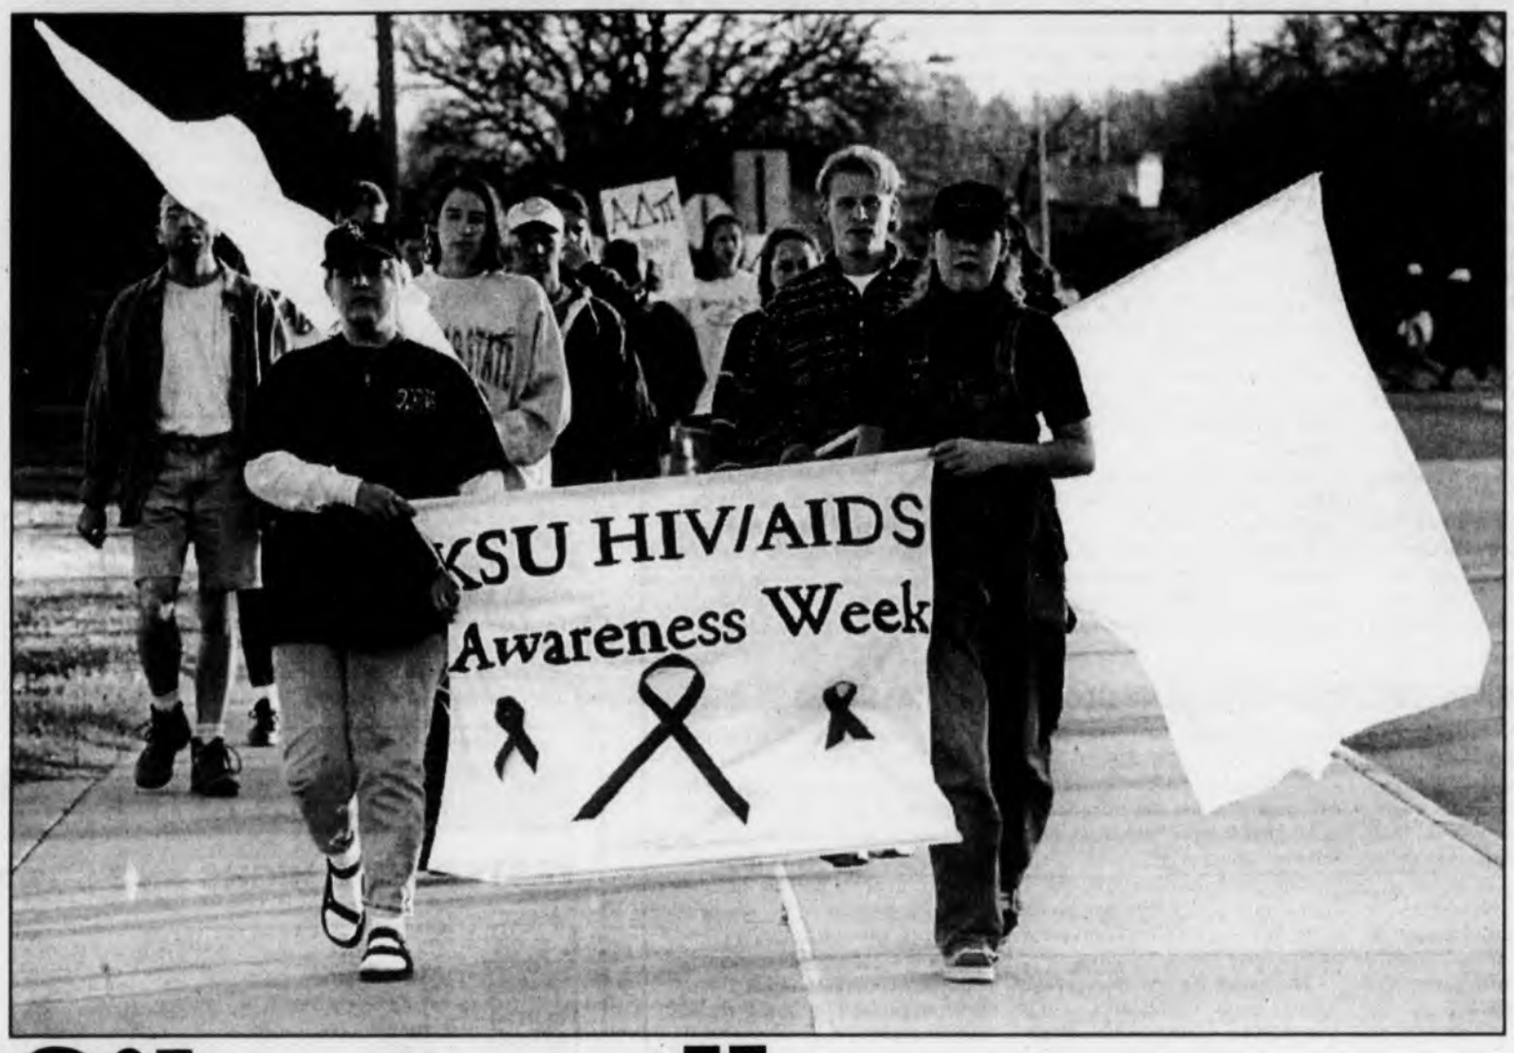
Harris said he was suprised by the kindness of the people of Kansas. Life is a lot different in California.

"I was hitchhiking. I would stop in a town and go to the police station. They would usually find me a place to stay," he said. "I stayed in a couple of missions. Suprisingly, I never had to sleep outside," he said.

Harris said he never thought he would be homeless. He said he didn't know exactly what to expect when he stayed in a misson for the first time.

"When I first stayed in the mission, it was scary at first. I didn't know anyone or what they were like," he said. "It was a new experience. I met some nice people. They're like any other person. They just don't have a home."

Harris slept at the missions and spent his days looking for work. He said employers were not receptive to the fact he was homeless.



"It shouldn't make any difference. The worst part was that they won't hire me," he said.

Harris finally settled in Manhattan and was accepted to train at the Flint Hills Job Corps. But misfortune struck again. Harris started

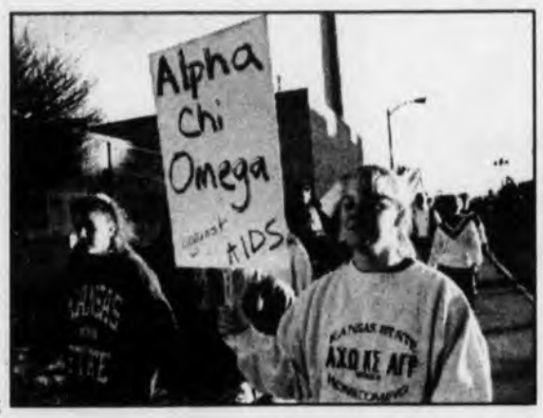
Silent walk

Community remembers AIDS victims

STEFFANY CARREL
Collegian

About 200 K-State students, members of the Manhattan community and grade-school children came together on World AIDS Day to participate in the K-State Salute to Life Walk Thursday evening.

The walk began at 4:30 at Ahearn Field House and concluded the activities and events of the AIDS Awareness Week here on campus.



A brief moment of silence was observed before the walk. All of the walkers carried glowsticks, and some chose to carry signs with statements like, "Fight AIDS, Not People With AIDS — Goodnow Hall."

Reita Currie, health educator at Lafene Health Center, said the walk was in memory and in support of those who are affected by this disease.

"This walk is also to help promote awareness of the disease," Currie said. "We want for people to open up and talk about the disease — to realize this can happen to anyone."

Currie said she believed making people aware and encouraging them not to be afraid to talk about HIV and AIDS was very important in the Midwest.

"Too often, especially out here in the rural communities, we tend to bury our heads in the sand and say, 'It can't happen to me. I'm not gay, I don't use drugs,'" Currie said.

Through this walk and other events, Currie said she hopes the stigma will be removed from HIV and AIDS as more people begin to talk about it.

The walk itself took about 30 minutes, as the walkers walked in silence around the perimeter of the K-State campus. After the walk, the group joined in Ahearn to listen to poetry.

Marcia McCoy, psychology intern for University Counseling Services, shared in the reading of the poetry and said the purpose was to draw the walkers together after the walk.

"We wanted to kind of tie together in a meaningful way some of the thoughts and emotions some of the people might be having because of the walk and their participation in it," she said.

McCoy said she was really impressed by the students who took part in the walk.

"It was really moving to see the mood of the students that participated," McCoy said. "It was serious and thoughtful."

Gina Engel, freshman in psychology, said she got involved in this event as an act of community service for her sorority, Chi Omega.

"This event interested me," Engel said. "I feel like most people don't know much about HIV and AIDS, and I wanted to get involved."

Engel said she thought people took note of the AIDS walk.

"The cars had to stop and see us pass. They had to," Engel said.

Eileen Meyer, store manager of Streetside Records, also participated in the walk and said she was impressed by the respect shown by the students the walkers passed on the walk.

"I wasn't sure how they would react," Meyer said. "But they were silent, not loud or rude."

Meyer said she has personally tried to help those affected by HIV and AIDS through her store.

"We've got a gift-wrapping booth up, and the proceeds will benefit both the AIDS Project and Crisis Center," she said. "It's these kinds of events that help. The more people that are here for these events, the more others will see and not be afraid to join in."

NEWS DIGEST

▶AGGRAVATED SEXUAL BATTERY UNDER INVESTIGATION

An aggravated sexual battery in the basement of Haymaker Hall was reported to K-State Police Wednesday night.

Investigator Richard Herrman said the battery occurred about 6:30 p.m. and was reported at 8:53 p.m.

"I have talked to the victim, one possible witness and a possible suspect," he said. Neither the victim's nor the suspect's names were released.

Herrman said the victim was getting off the elevator in the basement of Haymaker as several people were getting on. The suspect made a lewd remark to the victim and touched her in a sexual way.

No physical harm was done to the victim, but Herrman said he is investigating the incident as an aggravated sexual battery.

Sexual battery is the intentional touching of a person by another person, who does not consent to the touching, with the intent to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of the offender or another, Herrman said.

"If you are coming down the stairway, and I intentionally brush my hand across your backside or breast, that's sexual battery," he said.

"Aggravated sexual battery is where more force is used."

Herrman said the victim, who lives in the Derby Complex, identified the suspect, a resident of Haymaker, but no arrests will be made until the county attorney reviews the evidence and decides whether the case is prosecutable.

A person found guilty of aggravated sexual battery could receive a maximum sentence of one to two years in prison or a minimum of a fine and probation.

▶2ND MANHATTAN BANK ROBBED SINCE OCTOBER

For the second time since October, a bank was robbed in Manhattan.

At 11:11 a.m. Thursday, a lone black male suspect walked into the Kansas State Bank at 1101 Bluemont Ave. He handed the teller a bag and requested she fill it.

Suspecting the man carried a weapon, the teller complied.

Lt. Gary Grubbs, Riley County Police Department, said the robber had his right hand in his pocket. The robber did not brandish a weapon or threaten with one.

He walked out the north front door, the same door he had entered.

A problem with the alarm system was being worked on at the time of the robbery, Grubbs said.

Suspect

The suspect is described as a light-skinned black male subject, 5 feet 7 inches, 170-180 pounds, with a clear complexion and a well-trimmed mustache.

He wore a baseball cap described as having a solid-colored bill and a two-toned pattern on the crown. The left side of the crown was of solid color, and the right side had vertical light-colored lines.

"It was an unusual hat," Grubbs said. "I haven't seen many like that."

The suspect also was identified as wearing a blue and white plaid waist-length coat, predominately blue, and black tennis shoes.

It is not known if the robber left on foot or by vehicle.

Computer information damaged

Files removed, vulgar messages left in accounts

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Two computing and information sciences students' computer accounts were attacked Wednesday.

"The actual attacks occurred early in the morning on the 30th," Harvard Townsend, CIS systems manager, said.

The break-in occured around 2 a.m., but the perpetrators did their damage around noon, he said.

"The perpetrator had removed files from a couple of our students' accounts," Townsend said.

The students discovered the problem and contacted CIS.

"There was a specific hole in the operating system that they exploited," Townsend said. "We've closed that hole."

The perpetrators first broke into the Computing and Network Services and from there broke into the CIS accounts, Townsend said.

"They removed all the files that the students had done and left some vulgar messages," he said.

Since CIS had the files on tape backup, they were able to restore the students' accounts. The students are back up and running, Townsend said.

"The way it stands now, we're still trying to trace them," he said.

CIS and CNS don't know yet if the perpetrators were on or off campus.

"They utilized the Internet to move around and attack more than one place," Townsend said.

Attacks like this one are one of the vulnerabilities of being on the Internet, he said.

Tracing the problem, restoring deleted files and closing holes in the system takes a lot of time, he said.

"We shouldn't have to close holes, because they shouldn't be exploiting them," Townsend said.

Students in CIS received e-mail requesting they change their passwords immediately. Students are also being urged to notify the department immediately if they notice anything out of the ordinary.

CIS has placed more restrictions on password use from computers outside the CIS department. Some users have their accounts linked so they can log onto the CIS account from another account without having to use their password. Now they will have to use their password to go back and forth.

CIS remote login and remote shell have been limited to CIS hosts only. Telnet and remote transfer protocol are still operational from the outside, however.

"We shouldn't have to close holes, because they shouldn't be exploiting them."

▶ RESIDENTS SELL T-SHIRTS, SWEATSHIRTS TO SUPPORT FORT RILEY

JUNCTION CITY (AP) — A campaign to support the 1st Infantry Division at Fort Riley prompted residents in this east-central Kansas town to sell T-shirts and sweatshirts as a fundraiser for the base.

The shirts, decorated with the division logo, and similar specialty license plates are part of an effort organized by Howlette Kleiner, of Junction City.

"I have lived here all of my life, and I do not wish to see the area change," she said.

"I believe in strong defense and also don't want to see the $585 million per year, which is Fort Riley's direct economic impact on Kansas, leave us."

Pentagon officials said Wednesday that the Army has proposed deactivating the division's headquarters at Fort Riley, where it has been since 1955, and moving it to Germany.

The money from Kleiner's campaign, which began in June, will be donated to the Governor's Task Force in Support of Fort Riley to help pay for its lobbying work during the period of military downsizing.

Kleiner has declined to say how much money the campaign has raised so far but plans to discuss the results when she makes a presentation to the governor's task force on Dec. 22.

The Support Fort Riley Fund is intended to continue as long as there is any threat of the fort closing, Kleiner said.

▶ CESSNA EXECUTIVE TOURS 3 CITIES ON FINAL SITE LIST FOR NEW PLANT

WICHITA (AP) — Cessna executive Russ Meyer's visits to Hays, Manhattan and Independence were so low-key most people in the cities that are finalists for an assembly plant probably didn't know he'd been there.

The tour Wednesday by Meyer, Cessna's chairman and chief executive officer, didn't include the other two finalist cities — Emporia and Pittsburg — but he may still visit those communities, a company spokesman said.

Sometime during the first two weeks of December, Cessna is expected to announce where it has decided to build a new plant where single-engine, piston-powered planes will be assembled. The plant is expected to employ 1,000 people and have an annual payroll of $20 million.

John Moore, a Cessna senior vice president who heads the site selection committee, accompanied Meyer on Wednesday.

The visits weren't announced in advance, and there weren't any news conferences. Few details were available.

Meyer toured downtown Hays, the Fort Hays State University campus and the city's airport.

In Manhattan, he took a low-profile tour of the city and property adjacent to the Manhattan Municipal Airport, according to Randy Martin, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce president.

There have been other visits by Moore and other executives, Martin said.

"This is the last one we know of by Cessna before they make a decision about the plant," he said.

The Independence visit was low-key, according to Shirley Hanson, Independence Area Chamber of Commerce president. It lasted between an hour and 90 minutes. Hanson said it was intended to give Meyer the flavor of the community.

In addition to the airport and the Arco Pipe Line building, Meyer toured Riverside Park and some of Independence's industrial sites.

▶ SENATE APPROVES SWEEPING REWRITE OF GLOBAL TRADING RULES IN GATT

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate overwhelmingly approved a historic 124-nation, tariff-slashing trade agreement Thursday night, bringing to a close a strife-filled 103rd Congress with a rare note of bipartisan unity.

President Clinton called the vote a "victory for America" and said he hopes it is a harbinger of cooperation between his administration and Republicans who soon will assume control of Congress.

Final congressional approval to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) came on a 76-24 vote in the Senate. The House on Tuesday had approved the accord, the most sweeping rewrite of global trading rules in four decades.

Congressional leaders, Democrats and Republicans alike, joined Clinton at a victory celebration on the South Lawn of the White House.

"Let's make the GATT vote the first vote of a new era of cooperation," said Clinton. "America's best days are ahead of us."

The president said the GATT agreement would increase world trade, bringing new, high-wage jobs to the United States.

Departing Senate Democratic Leader George Mitchell said the vote sends a signal to the world that America and its workers remain the world's leaders. "We do not fear competition; we welcome it. We do not shrink from the future; we welcome that," Mitchell said.

Republican Leader Sen. Bob Dole, who will assume Mitchell's post as majority leader in January, said the vote was an example of how bipartisanship can work.

"This was not about some new world order," Dole said. "This was about jobs and opportunities for Americans. It was all about trade. All about the future. All about America. And all about our place in the world."

Just minutes before the final vote, the Senate voted 68-32 to waive its on-budget rules and remove the last procedural standing in the way of GATT's passage. Sixty votes were needed for the crucial budget waiver.

On it, the accord was supported by 31 Republicans and 37 Democrats and was opposed by 15 Republicans and 17 Democrats.

Clinton, badly in need of a congressional victory to lift his battered fortunes following the November elections, had worked throughout the day to convince wavering lawmakers to support the deal.

Fans clapping, music roaring and a rush of adrenaline.

Welcome to life in the shoes of a local Manhattan band.

Coolerspoon, a six-member band of K-State students, came together as a band a month and a half ago because of their love for music.

"When we got the band together, everyone thought it was a joke. I brought my drums up here, but I never thought we would get a band going," Kris Seymour, freshman in business, said.

Eric Stonestreet, senior in sociology, said some of the band members met each other as Pike pledges, and others had known each other for years.

"Two of the guys knew each other from high school, and three other guys were friends, and when they got together and realized they all played different instruments, they got together as a band," Stonestreet said.

The band started out practicing on its own, and it quickly gained exposure through performances at local Manhattan bars.

"Everything is going good. There are a lot of open doors for our band right now," Stan Castaneda, freshman in graphic design, said.

Stonestreet said all of the Coolerspoon band members have some type of musical background.

"They've all been playing since they were little kids," Stonestreet said.

Stonestreet said he is amazed at the band's growth in such a short time.

CONCERT INFO

Coolerspoon will be playing at 10:30 p.m. Saturday at Bombers.

"It's impressive that within a month they got their things together," Stonestreet said.

Seymour said all the band members have past musical experience and with more practices and live performances, their reputation will grow throughout the community.

"We have a lot of freakin' talent to deal with. If we keep playing like we do, we have a shot somewhere," Seymour said.

The band is known for its cover songs from Pearl Jam, Nirvana, Stone Temple Pilots, Green Day, Candlebox and Tool.

"They play the covers like the original songs, stick to the lines and don't change it too much. They have four originals, and they're good, but I'm not sure if

Five-gallon jugs of coffee and iced tea were the fuel that kept student Senators awake through the night as they made the final decision on how to spend money in the Student Life Enrichment Account.

Clayton Wheeler, Senate chair, arranged for the refreshments outside the Big Eight Room during Thursday night's meeting.

"It's going to be a long night," Wheeler said. "But we have plenty of coffee."

Shannon Alford, agriculture senator, said because of many different suggestions, it would take until the early morning hours Friday to decide how to spend the money.

"Everyone has an idea of how to spend the money," Alford said. "I expect there will be at least 10 amendments made to the current bill."

Blue Key Senior Honorary hopes an amendment is made to fund its proposal. Group members spoke during open period to ask for funding of a leadership resource center and a community service information center.

Three speakers also supported Access the Future, which is requesting a share of the Student Life Enrichment Account. Access the Future is an effort to keep tuition low at state universities and continue open admission for all Kansas high-school graduates.

Bob DeBruyn, member of KSU Foundation executive board, said he would have been denied admission under the standards proposed by the Kansas Board of Regents.

"My life would have been changed forever," DeBruyn said. "One of us is no better than anyone else. Who are we to play God with people's lives?"

DeBruyn said the Kansas Board of Regents should not follow the other 49 states to qualified admissions. He said the quality of academics at K-State shows the excellent performance of students.

Qualified admissions would lead to decreased enrollment in state universities, DeBruyn said. This decrease in enrollment would lead to an increase in tuition.

DeBruyn said support for open admissions must come from the students. He said students should support open admissions because it is a fair policy.

"All I want is for students to have a chance to try," DeBruyn. "It is my fault if I flunk out after one semester, but at least I tried."

Senators also heard from Bill Fateley, professor of chemistry, and Nate Scott, sophomore in secondary education. They both would have also been denied admission to K-State under the current proposal.

Access the Future, Blue Key and other groups are competing for $16,656 that was overcharged students, said Aaron Otto, head of Student Affairs and Social Services Committee.

Otto said this money must be spent by the end of the semester, according to senate guidelines. Otherwise, the money goes into a reserve account, and all campus groups may request allocations from it. No decision had been reached by press time.

In other business, Michele Meier, Parking and Campus Safety Committee Chair, said results from the campus parking survey will be available Dec. 12.

President Jon Wefald's administrative committee will then review the report and make a decision. This decision will then be discussed at a Kansas Board of Regents meeting in January for further approval.

Senate also reestablished the Holton Hall Advisory Council by unanimous consent. This council, which disbanded in 1991 due to lack of guidelines, oversees all student services in Holton Hall.

Otto said this committee is needed because students paid for the Renovation of Holton Hall, and students should be allowed to express their opinion on student services.

Fan Appreciation Night needs to have fans

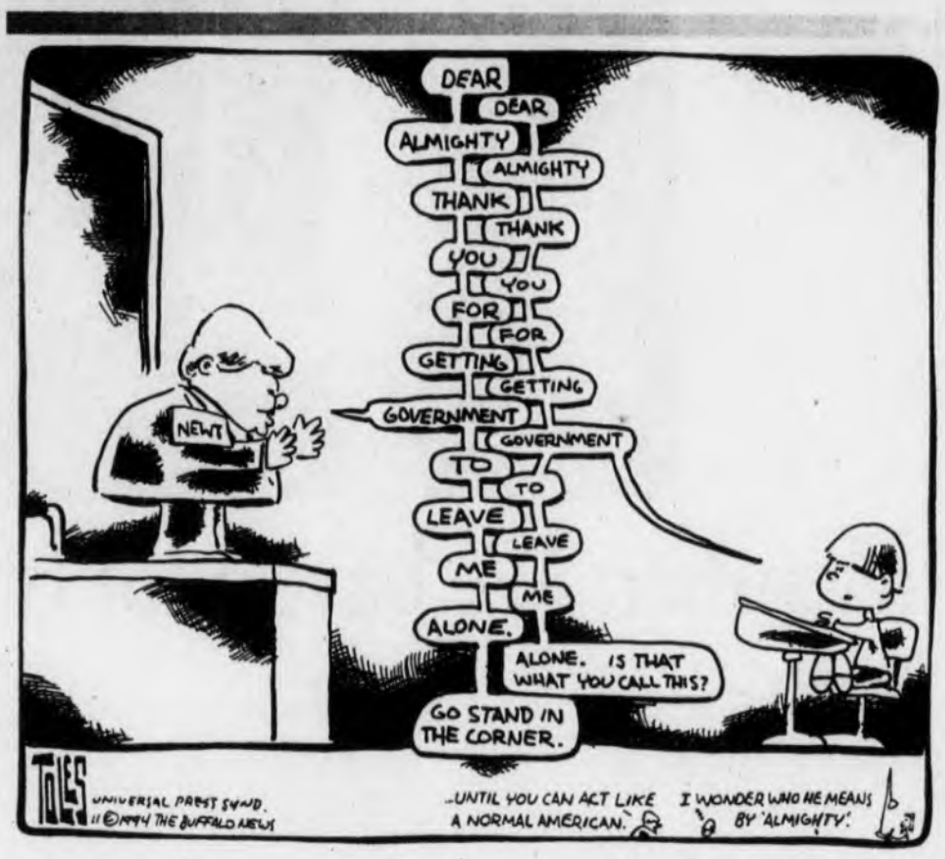
Attendance was poor at Tuesday's basketball game. A big crowd helps the Cats. Go out and support them.

K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury and the Wildcats deserve support at home games.

At the Cats' last game in Bramlage Coliseum, there was only about 4,000 fans in attendance, and the student section wasn't even close to being full.

Even though this is Asbury's first season as the Cats' coach and K-State is expected to finish near the bottom of the Big Eight Conference, the fans still need to be there in Bramlage.

They need to be there because a rockin' Bramlage Coliseum can have an effect on the Cats, and on the game.



A loud crowd can often intimidate teams and cause them trouble when the game is on the line. The crowd can also cause the Cats to get hyped and play with more even more enthusiasm.

The fans also used to gripe about the Cats' non-conference home schedule, but Asbury beefed K-State's schedule with Illinois and Washington.

Just remember about six years ago, when a coach came here and inherited a losing football program. Through support by the fans, Bill Snyder built a winning football program. Asbury can do the same, but he's going to need the support from the students, alumni and other friends of the University.

The Cats play UMKC at 7 p.m. today, and it is Fan Appreciation Night. Wouldn't it be ironic if there were no fans there to be appreciated?

Living with HIV

▶ GUEST

STEPHEN TAYLOR

Editor's note: Today is the last day of HIV/AIDS Awareness Week.

When I receive the phone call at work from my doctor in March of 1986 announcing that I was HIV-positive, I began immediately to question who I was and what life was all about.

The common wisdom at the time being that no one survived HIV, I did what any human being would do: I cried and wondered what I had done to deserve such a fate.

Only one thing was wrong: somewhere inside of me was the knowledge that I was not going to develop AIDS, that I would not be dead in five years. This knowledge came quickly to me, though I did not discuss it with others until some time later.

Living with HIV asymptomatically is my experience. Of course, I recognize that I am not the only healthy HIV-positive person. The experts believe us to represent about 5 percent of all HIV-infected persons. I learned early, however, that one cannot blindly accept the wisdom or advice of the experts. In 1988, I suggested to my doctor that someone study me to determine why my body was reacting differently to the virus, and why I was not dying. He did not take me seriously for it was not until the 1993 AIDS Conference in Berlin that the experts determined that there were "long-term survivors" of HIV.

No one possesses anything greater than the most cursory knowledge of this virus. This is primarily due to the fact that so little pure research has been done on the virus itself. There is considerable money to be made in the short term dealing with the symptoms of HIV and AIDS. There is little financial incentive to complete the analysis required to find a cure.

Perhaps I am cynical. I have watched two partners suffer the effects of AZT only to learn that it had no positive effect on them or perhaps anyone. I watched one partner die, realizing that no matter how much I screamed and cried, there was nothing on the market to save him. I have seen pain, suffering, wasting and death. These no longer frighten me. What disturbs me is our attitude towards the living.

How does HIV affect an asymptomatic person? On a societal level, an HIV-positive person is classified the same as someone with AIDS. We are unable to obtain medical insurance because of our pre-existing condition. We may be denied employment if a prospective employer learns of our HIV status and its potential to inflate the company's insurance premiums. We are not permitted to enter certain countries, including the United States, if we are not citizens. In many states, we must live with the threat that someone might not possibly accuse us of infecting them, for which we could be imprisoned.

But the most challenging aspect of being HIV-positive is in the area of intimate relationships. How do you convince someone that you are not going to die in the short term? How do you convince someone in our death-denying culture that everyone is going to die, and that the proverbial bus may strike us dead tomorrow, with or without the aid of an opportunistic infection? How do you build intimacy with someone who fears that you could infect them with a virus that could result in their own death? How do you go on having your dreams of intimate love when people continue to abandon you before you can, through death, abandon them?

The answer is that you begin to look at people differently. You begin to recognize the fragility of human beings, and how ill-equipped we are at dealing with reality. We prefer to believe that everything is eternal, and we are shocked when tragedy dares to strike us. We refuse to accept the possibility of loss.

The reality is that I may not die of AIDS. I may enjoy a long life. But my life will be inseparable from thoughts of sickness, tragedy and death because few are willing to believe that HIV is not terminal. I long for a cure for HIV/AIDS to stop the tragic loss of souls who have only begun to experience life.

And I long for a cure that will allow me once again to be accepted as a living, vital human being who does not have one foot in the grave.

Teacher harassment went too far one night

CHRISTY LITTLE

On Halloween night, some high-school students visited a teacher they had been harassing for months.

Although they claimed to be trick-or-treating, they were visiting him way out of the district on a secluded, hard-to-find road. That was after police traced a threatening phone call to the teacher from one of the students' houses.

When he came to the door to greet them, he had a gun.

My former math teacher had resorted to what he had to so that he could be left alone.

My math teacher was and still is a favorite at Shawnee Mission West High School. He was a laid-back kind of guy. He had to be, to teach my math class. Pushing him over the edge would take a lot.

Newspapers reported that some students who had a few "run-ins" with the teacher had been harassing him and his family all semester with phone calls and pranks. On Halloween night, they thought they'd pay him a visit at home. He greeted them with a .44-caliber gun that he said contained blanks and asked them to leave. He shot twice into the ground, and they finally left.

The students called the police, and my former teacher was arrested and spent the night in jail. He was released and had no charges pressed against him. But local residents weren't through with him. Many a letter to the editor and angry phone call questioned his ability as a teacher to be shooting a gun around students — students who were not only harassing him and scaring his wife and small children, but trespassing.

For now, the matter is over — he is still teaching, still in the same building with the students he saw at his house Halloween night. The district is taking no action against him. It hasn't quieted the community down entirely, though.

Some think he overreacted. But my teacher was the victim of harassment last year as well — allegedly by students from another school. One night last March, he got out of bed to watch television downstairs, and when he returned a few hours later, he had a shattered window and a bullet in his wall. It became another unsolved Kansas City drive-by shooting.

The community has forgotten that he is a person as well as a teacher — a person who would react strongly to threatening phone calls only months after a drive-by shooting. But because he is a teacher, some people believe that incident shouldn't have been enough to scare him into protecting himself against students who are becomingly increasingly dangerous — one student associated with the group sent a special education teacher to the hospital last spring.

People still believe that teachers should be able to rely upon classroom management skills to defend themselves from students they have no control over off of school property. They believe that a reprimand will stop phone calls, that detention will stop pranks.

They believe my former math teacher should have done other things than scare the kids. Yet calling the police hadn't stopped the harassment. Neither would consulting administration or parents. That teacher needed to level with those kids and let them know it was time to quit playing games. And he did.

Teachers are going into classrooms that are more and more dangerous — no one even wants to touch inner-city schools anymore, but even suburban districts like mine and smaller-town areas are getting kids who are beyond caring if you assign extra homework (they don't do it), give them detention (they don't show up) or call their parents (who don't care, either). Getting their respect is the key way to get them to cooperate — although my teacher was very well-respected.

CHRISTY LITTLE

"With their supposedly innate management skills, teachers are supposed to defend themselves without force under nearly every circumstance."

With their supposedly innate management skills, teachers are supposed to defend themselves without force under nearly every circumstance. Students can harass teachers to the edge in and out of the classroom, but teachers can't touch them, reprimand them too sharply (lest it hurt their dignity) or ignore them.

I don't advocate bringing an axe to class and swinging it around every time someone smarts off. In fact, my teacher's gun would have been way out of line anywhere on school property. Granted, it isn't necessarily the best choice off-property, either. But when you've got eight or 10 students who've been threatening you coming at you on your front yard, pulling out a gun and shooting at the ground with blanks may not seem like a bad idea at the time, even though it may seem a little drastic later.

But after months of harassment, those students' visit on Halloween meant serious business. And after a drive-by shooting and months of harassment, my teacher meant business, too. And his profession shouldn't stop him from defending himself and letting those kids know how things were going to be from now on.

▶ CROWD CONTROL

Bouncers were just doing their job

In response to Live-Music Review, by Nolan Schramm, I felt that there were several inaccurate depictions of decisions made by the bouncers. It is clearly evident that Mr. Schramm has a lack of knowledge of the responsibilities of a bouncer.

As a Snookie's bouncer, it is my responsibility to ensure a safe environment for all fans in attendance. What Mr. Schramm fails to realize is the dangers of "body passing" and "stage diving." If for some reason a person was dropped or otherwise injured, not only could the music fan be hurt by the incident, but possible lawsuits could arise, which are obviously not desired by any business.

The bouncers working that evening also worked the 311 concert a few weeks ago. The mosh pit for that concert was quite a bit larger and just as intense as the Stick concert. However, we had no problems with the crowd on that evening.

The crowd at the Stick concert was made of "good, friendly, violent, fun-loving people" as Mr. Schramm mentioned. However, there were a few people in attendance that continued to be a problem. For example, "the kid who got kicked out" assaulted one of the bouncers, which is more than enough reason to be removed from any establishment.

After several incidents with the crowd, the manager agreed to allow "body passing," but a stage dive would automatically result in removal from the building. Even after an announcement to the crowd, fans continued to abuse the policies of Snookie's. Two people were removed even after warnings were given. The bouncers "knew where to draw the line;" the fans just crossed it.

Mr. Schramm didn't seem to understand that we were just doing our job. Until I see a paycheck from him, he can keep all comments to himself.

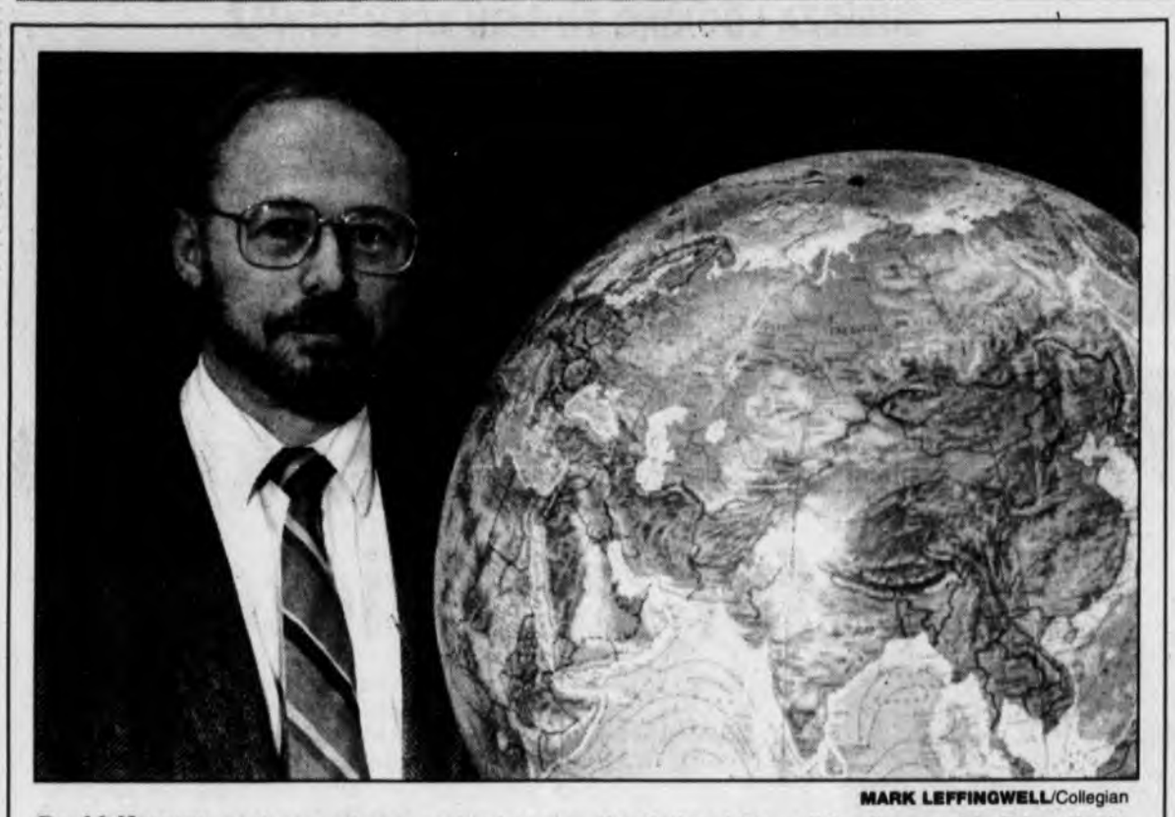
▶ PARKING

Students receive unjust treatment

I would like to make the student body aware of a discriminatory policy upheld by KSU Parking Services. It is not discrimination by race or sex, but by student status.



If you park in a reserved spot across from Eisenhower Hall, you may get towed. According to KSU Police, it just depends on whether you are a student or not.

I happen to be one, so when I parked there on Nov. 17, my car was towed. If I had been an alumnae or community member, on the other hand, they would have only left me a $30 parking ticket, instead of the ticket plus $55 towing fine I received. This is outright discrimination!

On top of that, a car was parked illegally in a handicapped spot the entire time. Nothing was done to that car, not even a ticket. Maybe if the owner of the spot I parked in really needed to park there, I would feel better, but no one was parked there when I returned to find my car missing.

This is a serious lack of respect for students, and I think students should be aware of it and let their SGA senators and Parking Services know how they feel about this policy. It is wrong to tow students and then look the other way for alumni and community members.

David Kromm, professor of geography, has won the National Council for Geographic Education's National Teaching Award in Geography.

Professor receives award

Geographer 1 of 8 to win national teaching honors

JOYCE LEFTOFF
Collegian

One of only eight national teaching awards has been given to a K-State geography professor.

David Kromm has been awarded the National Council for Geographic Education's National Teaching Award in Geography.

The award is given annually to eight college and university-level teachers from eight regions, who are chosen not just from the U.S. but all of North America.

Stephen White, head of the geography department, who also won the award in 1991, is the only other K-State professor to have ever received this prestigious recognition.

White said the award is given to people who have long, continuous service in teaching with outstanding accomplishments over a reasonable period of time.

"It's not one of those awards you just get when you get older," he said.

White said Kromm has been at K-State since 1967, and his enthusiasm and excitement for teaching have never been greater.

"After someone has taught for 20 years, they're usually just in the groove," he said.

"I've never known anyone who experiments so much in his teaching. He's always looking for ways to improve his lectures.

Duane Nellis, associate dean of arts and sciences, and former geography department head, nominated Kromm for the award.

"He has had a lot of international experiences, which adds to his ability to excite students to what he is discussing," Nellis said.

To be selected for the award, the teacher must first be nominated by his colleagues and students. Then he puts together a portfolio including class syllabi, a statement of his teaching philosophy and an extensive résumé.

Nellis said Kromm has also been awarded the University Distinguished Teaching Award.

"He is the kind of professor we like to emulate. Others can learn from the positive things he has done."

Kromm said the award gives him a great sense of pride.

"To be recognized by your peers is the greatest honor that can be given," he said.

Kromm said he thinks three factors led to his recognition — the first being his emphasis on engaging students in class.

"I bring them into the learning process," he said. "I've found methods to do it in larger classes."

The second factor, Kromm said, was in how he always tries to present alternative points of view.

"In lecture classes, I present a diversity of views," he said. "In upper-level classes, I assign readings that represent differing viewpoints."

Relating class discussions to what students read or what they see on CNN is the third factor Kromm said led to his award.

"Every day in every class, to the degree I can do it, I relate class material to the real world," he said. "I think all of us would like to think what we're doing means something."

After receiving this award, Kromm said is goal is to sustain a quality of teaching that engages students and keeps them excited.

"I can't go any higher. This is the highest award in the field. But I can sustain the same level of excellence."

Experiences, reputation attract worldwide students to K-State

JULIE KRAMER
Collegian

K-State students can be found worldwide.

This fall, K-State enrolled 1,096 international students representing 98 nations.

International students make up about 5 percent of the student body. There are more than twice as many male students than female, with 758 men and 338 women now studying.

Almost three-fourths of the students are working on graduate-level degrees. Undergraduate students total 258.

Eighty-seven fewer students enrolled this year than last year, Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, said.

"That decrease probably reflects changes in political and economic situations worldwide," she said.

Davis said K-State's reputation is the main recruiting tool for international students.

"Graduates go home and tell their families and friends about their experiences in school here and in Manhattan, and so, informally, new students are being attracted to K-State's programs," she said.

Davis said she thinks other University-wide efforts will help increase enrollment numbers in the future. For example, the Office of International Programs is establishing alumni outreach activities.

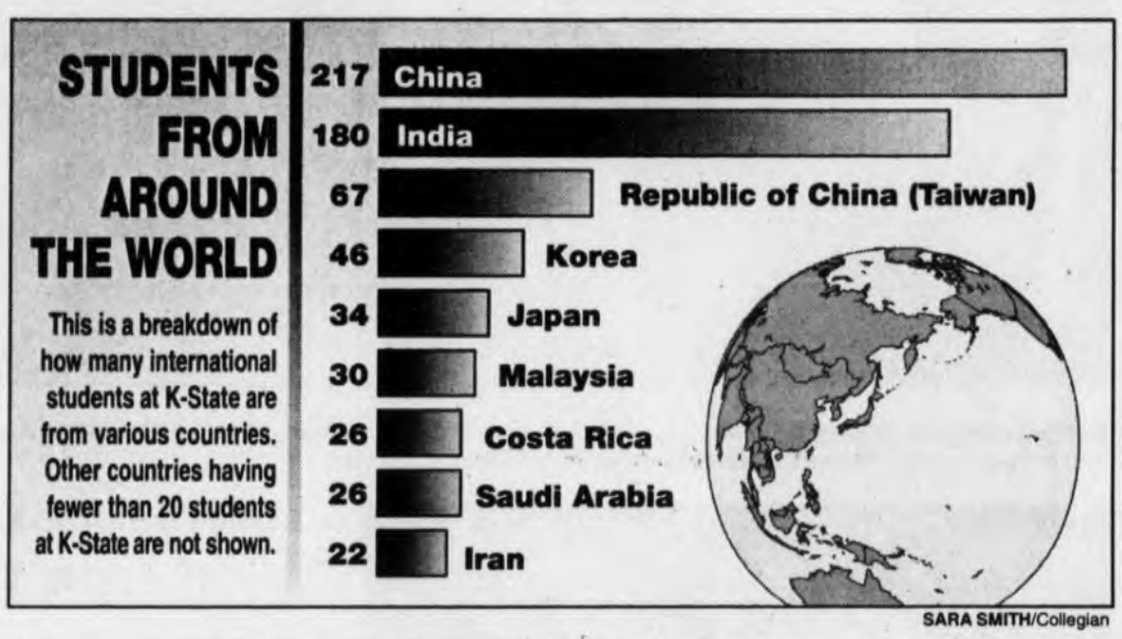
"I think we will see the results of that outreach in a few years as more K-State international alumni are kept in contact with the University," Davis said.

Srini Sundhararajan, graduate student in electrical engineering and president of the International Coordinating Council, said he came to K-State because a friend going to school here told him about it.

Sundhararajan is from India and said he has been home once in his five years at K-State.

He said the International Coordinating Council helps students adjust to K-State and to college life.

"We want to expose different cultures," he said.



Sundhararajan said there are 18 different international student groups.

Each group sends a representative to the council. A student in the council is selected to represent them at Student Senate to promote international students and get funding for activities.

Some activities offered by international students are India Night, International Night, Africa Night, Chinese and Vietnamese cultural nights and an International Week. Students also sponsor movies and musical performances by renowned artists from their home countries.

This year, a new activity, Indonesian Night, was offered.

"We are hoping the success of Indonesian Night — the work of just 19 Indonesian students with the help of Indian students — will encourage other smaller student groups to try a cultural event, too," Davis said.

English instructor helps organize civil-rights group

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

It all began with the murder of two gay men in central Mississippi and a judge who said their deaths may have been justified if they were infected with HIV.

A K-State instructor said she hopes it doesn't end with a justice system that makes gays and lesbians responsible for their own murders.

To avoid that ending, Deb Taylor, instructor of English, has helped to organize supporters in 20 states and two countries.

The result is more than 2,000 letters sent to Mississippi Gov. Kirk Fordice urging that he investigate the murders and uphold the civil liberties of gays, lesbians and people infected with HIV.

Taylor said she first learned of the Laurel, Miss., murders when she attended a conference of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force in Dallas, Tx.

She roomed with April Richards, president of G.L. Friendly, a gay and lesbian community center in Biloxi, Miss.

Richards told Taylor about the execution-style murder of two gay men, Robert Walters and Joseph Shomake, and the questionable investigation by the local police.

A 16-year-old black male was arrested and later confessed to the crime.

The local gay and lesbian community was concerned that the confession had been coerced because the first motive given for the murders was robbery, despite the fact that a gold watch, diamond ring and credit cards were left behind.

Mattina said G.L. Friendly did not have actual evidence, just strong suspicions.

The motive was changed two more times and included the suspect's fear that the two men were going to rape him.

The attorney for the defendant made a motion to have the dead men's blood tested for HIV. Municipal Judge Billy Jo Landrum granted the motion, saying that if the men were infected, it was like carrying a loaded gun.

"The judge has tried to make it admissible evidence that the two men be tested for HIV," Brandy Mattina, member of G.L. Friendly, said.

"The defense attorney said that if the two men were found to be infected with HIV, the murders were justifiable homicide," Mattina said.

What Richards, Taylor and other gays and lesbians fear is that if the blood tests are found admissible as evidence, it will set a dangerous legal precedent for testing murder

GUBICZA LOOKING TO SIGN WITH ROYALS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The last active member of Kansas City's 1985 World Series team expects to wear a Royals uniform again next year — provided there is baseball in 1995.

Righthander Mark Gubicza told the Kansas City Star that a deal with the Royals "looks to be imminent."

The deal would be another one-year contract worth slightly more than the $550,000 base salary Gubicza signed for in 1994, the Star said.

K-State looking for 2nd victory

NICOLE POELL

The K-State basketball team could improve its record to 2-1 when it plays the Kangaroos of UMKC at 7 p.m. Friday at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats are coming off a 92-75 win in Tuesday night's contest against Wisconsin-Parkside. But senior Demond Davis said the 'Roos will give the Cats a bigger challenge.

"Playing Parkside helped us a lot — we were able to pick up our defense a little bit, but we'll have more of a test on Friday," Davis said.

K-State coach Tom Asbury said he agreed.

"UMKC is definitely a better team than Parkside," Asbury said. "I hope they're not as good as Alabama. They'll be well-coached. They lost a premier player from a year ago, and it will probably take awhile for them to adjust."

"But they'll be well-coached and ready to play. That much we know."

UMKC is 0-2 on the season, suffering a 57-70 loss in its home opener against Southwest Missouri State and dropping a close one against conference foe Buffalo on Tuesday night, 67-68.

While Asbury said he was pleased with certain aspects of Tuesday night's game, he said that his team is still not where he'd like it to be.

"Our pass and shot selection was markedly different, but we needed to defend more," he said. "Our defense is not where I'd like it, especially our perimeter defense."

"But we're still feeling our way through — there's no question about that. We need to take better shots."

Asbury said that Tuesday night's victory did give him a chance to gauge the performances of most of his players and give him some indication of who can compete in game situations.

"There's not one player on this team that isn't going to play," he said. "The rotation is going to be who's playing well that night. Do I like that? Not really."

"But I'm playing a lot of guys. I just need to figure out who can play and who can't."

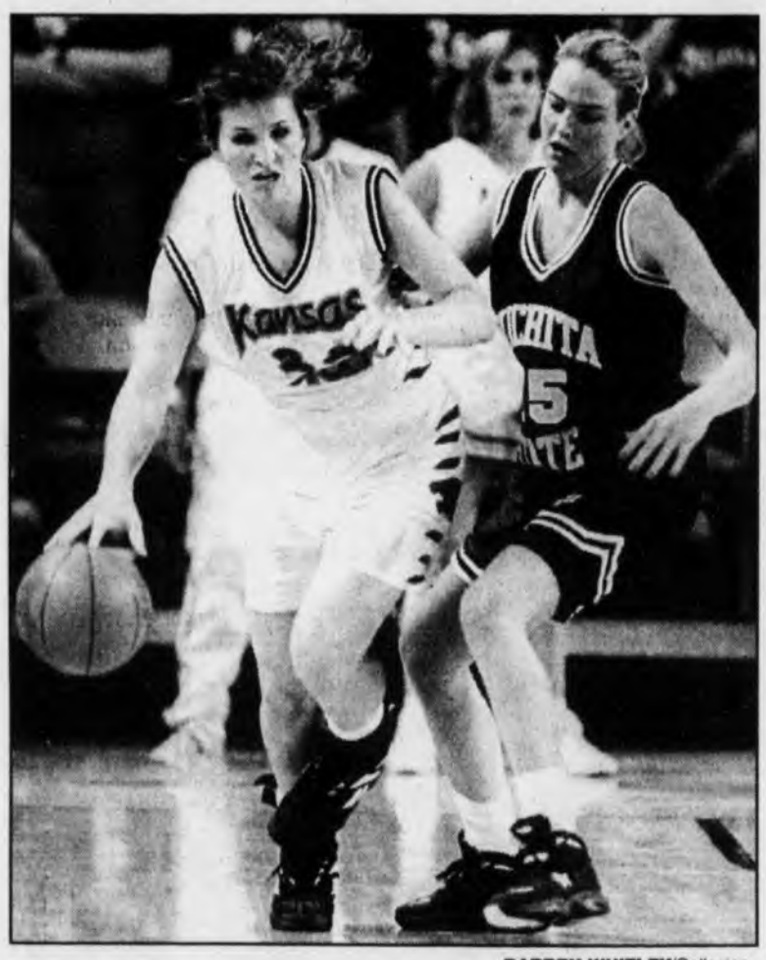
Among those players who Asbury praised after Tuesday's game included freshman Mark Young and junior Brian Gavin.

"I want the people we play to throw everything imaginable at us in November and December."
TOM ASBURY
K-State basketball coach

"Mark Young played a very solid game," Asbury said. "We've been riding him hard in practice, so I was really pleased with how he played."

Gavin responded well in just his second game as a starter, recording 10 points and four rebounds.

"Gav's had to really improve significantly on team leadership," Asbury said. "He's done that, and I was happy with how he played."



While Asbury said he doesn't know much about most of these early opponents, that's not as important as preparing his own team for them.

"We absolutely cannot gauge the level of our competition at this point in time," he said.

"We've got to get ready each and every single night. We can't put any more or any less emphasis on any team."

But Asbury said he wants his Cats to face different game situations against every opponent.

"I want the people we play to throw every single thing imaginable at us in November and December," he said. "That can only help us."

CRESTON KUENZI

The K-State women's basketball team will attempt to keep the ball rolling tonight against Minnesota.

The game follows the men's game at Bramlage Coliseum at approximately 9:15 p.m.

K-State is fresh off a victory against Wichita State.

"We found out a lot about ourselves at Wichita State," Coach Brian Agler said. "I know now how we respond to tough situations.

"We were down late, and we came back to win, so I feel much better about our team."

Agler said it will be another hard-fought game tonight.

"They're a Big Ten team, so they're going to be good," Agler said. "I know they're very athletic and have some good size."

The Golden Gophers have two starters returning from last year's squad: Shannon Loeblein, a senior guard, and Cara Pearson, a senior forward.

Agler said although the two are good players, they can't just focus on them.

"It's going to take our best effort to contain them, but with a team of that caliber, you can't really concentrate on two players," Agler said.

The Cats lost last year's meeting, 76-65.

"Last year, we played them up there, and they were a veteran team," Agler said. "They had been playing well and were coming off a big victory over Texas Tech."

Injuries have hobbled three of the Cats' starters: Shawnda DeCamp with an ankle injury, Amanda Chamberlain with a stress fracture of her femur and Brit Jacobson with a knee injury.

"Shawnda will be able to play, but Amanda's going be out for quite awhile," Agler said. "The doctors want to make sure it's healed completely before she gets playing on it again."

Agler said Jacobson's knee was examined on Wednesday and is questionable for the game.

Team robbed of opportunity by Coalition

Once again, the regular season in college football has been rendered meaningless by the annual farce-call bowl games.

This season, the tragedy has hit home as K-State was invited to the Aloha Bowl with little to gain and only money to lose.

Coach Bill Snyder did all he could by saying his team was disappointed not to get a Coalition bid, but he still has to maintain proper political relations with bowl representatives, because we obviously have little respect as it is.

The seniors on the team perhaps are suffering the greatest injustice because this is their last chance, and they have no chance of rising in the rankings with a win over the 25th-ranked team.

However, an even greater tragedy could be the alumni, which have suffered through decades of pitiful football.

I was visited by Kenneth Carter, an outraged 1973 graduate in the Collegian newsroom Thursday, and he told me of some of the suffering he endured while a student at K-State in the late 1960s and early '70s.

He said he and his friends used to make wagers the night before the game as to how many times the K-State quarterback would be sacked. Still, he faithfully attended the games.

Now that he finally gets to enjoy a top-10 team at K-State, they get sent halfway around the world to play the 6-4-1 Boston College Eagles.

WESS HUDELSON

My father, a 1960 graduate who attended every game during his college days from '56 to '60, got to watch the Wildcats post an 11-29 record during those years.

Last season, as K-State was beating Oklahoma for the first time in 24 seasons, he sat and watched both goal posts go down before he left the stadium even though his wife and family was already waiting in the car.

My alumnus visitor, being a student during the turbulent times of the late 60s, offered some suggestions for protesting college football and money-grubbing scum that run the business.

Since the seniors can gain little from whipping Boston College, he said they could get more recognition by walking out after the first three plays of the game.

Picture this: K-State takes the opening kickoff, lets J.J. Smith run, lets Leon Edwards run and Chad May throw one pass.

Then the freshmen, sophomores and juniors form a tunnel as the seniors ceremoniously leave the stadium and board a bus bound for the white, sandy beaches of Honolulu.

Best of all, the players would have the full attention of the national media to express their disgust with this gross example of college football's philosophy — "The team with the most money wins."

Why doesn't the Coalition just decide who is going to play in its games before the season even starts so no one is disappointed in December?

How great it must be to be a player for Notre Dame, knowing that if you win six games you get to go to a Coalition bowl. Even better to be a Notre Dame administrator knowing that your team is going to make at least a million dollars with six wins. (This season they'll get $3 million.)

All of this is possible for the Fighting Irish, who beat only one team with a winning record (Air Force) this season, not to mention the first time in 15 years that the Fiesta Bowl has invited an unranked team.

I thought the whole purpose of the Coalition was to eliminate deals with teams guaranteeing them bowl games.

The bottom line is K-State isn't going to get any respect until something outlandish is done. The Cats play in a small city, a small stadium and don't offer much financial reward to national TV companies as far as ratings go.

Never mind that K-State posted a 9-2 record and took Nebraska and Colorado, both ranked No. 2 in the country when they played, to the wire.

K-State's window of opportunity was slammed on their fingers this season by the Coalition.

■ Any further suggestions for protesting the Coalition will be readily accepted by Wess Hudelson at the Collegian Newsroom in Kedzie 116.

Salaam collects award, still undecided on NFL

ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRVING, Texas — Another award for Rashaan Salaam. And more pressure to leave Colorado for the NFL after the Fiesta Bowl game with Notre Dame.

Salaam won the Doak Walker Award as the nation's top running back on Thursday and said he would announce his decision in early January whether he will pass up his senior season.

Speaking from Boulder, Colo., Salaam said, "I'm thinking about Notre Dame until Jan. 2. Then I will make my decision on the fifth or sixth of January."

Salaam, who could be the first pick in the 1995 draft and become an instant millionaire, said earlier in the week he wants to stay at Colorado for his senior season.

After he won the Walter Camp Foundation Award, he said "It's hard to leave college football. It's a tough decision because I'm getting a lot of telephone calls (from NFL teams). My feelings are pretty steady and I just really want to stay here."

Salaam averaged 186.8 yards per game — fourth best in NCAA history. He rushed 298 times for 2,055 yards to become only the fourth player to gain 2,000 yards in a single season. He led the nation with 144 points.

Salaam was one of 47 candidates for the Doak Walker, named after the former All-American and All-Pro with the Detroit Lions.

Previous winners included Greg Lewis, Washington, 1990; Trevor Cobb, Rice, 1991; Garrison Hearst, Georgia, 1992; and Byron (Bam) Morris, Texas Tech, 1993.

Colorado coach Bill McCartney said Salaam's success didn't go to his head.

"He's never changed despite all the success," McCartney said. "He always deflected the praise to include his team. He has won over the affection of everyone around here including his teammates."

McCartney said Salaam isn't just a great running back.

"He's much more," McCartney said. "He blocks well. Catches the ball well. He has the speed to go outside and he can go inside and make the tacklers miss. He's always in great condition so he can go hard for four quarters."

Newt Gingrich involved in illicit sex scandal

Well, sort of. There are no tax cuts, just sex aplenty in Rep. Newt Gingrich's forthcoming novel, "1945."

"Suddenly the pouting sex kitten gave way to Diana the Huntress," Gingrich writes in a draft of the World War II thriller excerpted in The New York Times Sunday magazine. "She rolled onto him and somehow was sitting athwart his chest, her knees pinning his shoulders. 'Tell me or I will make you do terrible things,' she hissed."

Moments later, the hapless White House chief of staff succumbs to the German spy's spell, telling her: "We're making this new kind of bomb."

Gingrich's best-known written work to date is his Republican manifesto, "Contract With America," but he did try his hand at a novel once before, in 1977. But the next speaker of the House says the literary agent who looked at it told him: "It is clear that you shake hands better than you write fiction."

Of his new novel, Gingrich said he wants to "tone it down just enough so that it gets to be PG-13 and not R." His efforts are due to be published by Baen Books next summer.

Oh the humanity of it all ...

Eat 200 lab rats every day, and still lose weight

In findings that may help treatment of obesity, scientists have discovered a gene that makes mice fat when it is defective — and what is probably the human version of the gene.

Mice that lack a normal version of the gene become three times heavier than their siblings, said researcher Dr. Jeffrey Friedman.

In its normal form, the gene appears to let fat cells tell the brain how much fat the animal has, so that the mouse will adjust its feeding and activity to keep its weight normal. But that system goes awry when the gene is flawed, and apparently fools the brain into ordering mice to get fatter no matter how much they weigh.

"You have an animal who's massively obese who thinks he's starving," Friedman said.

In a Smatterings interview, Friedman said that he has found that mice that had the undamaged gene are 500 percent lower in fat than normal mice.

"We can breed those things and feed them to obese patients as a method to lose weight," he said.

Used CDs

Music can be cheaper the second time around

You can listen to them in your car, on a walk, in your room or anywhere you can imagine.

They are round laser discs that have the potential for hours of entertainment, but they can cost a pretty penny in the stores.

Compact discs. When they first came out, they were considered the wave of the future.

Their sound quality was far superior to cassettes and records, and they could be listened to one track at a time without the hassle of rewinding and fast forwarding.

With the outbreak of CDs came CD players, which cost far more than the ordinary tape decks and boom boxes of the past.

Although they were expensive, they were a hot item in the stores as well as the $15-to-$20 CDs that accompanied them in the racks nearby.

Tapes can still be found in music stores nationwide, but instead of being on prominent display, they are tucked away against the wall or stocked in a corner.

Like records, they have faded into the distance and have been replaced by the higher tech and higher quality product of CDs.

CDs have countless advantages over tapes and records, but they have one small problem — price.

Factories may use only a few dollars or possibly only a few cents to actually produce the CDs, but they are sold for five hundred times their production cost.

College students who are forced to gulp down ramen noodles and donate plasma to cover rent, rarely have enough extra cash to spend on CDs.

Used music stores have appeared all over America to fit the needs of the music lover with rock-bottom funds.

In Manhattan alone, there are six locations to buy, sell and trade CDs.

Second-hand stores, used CD stores and pawn shops have got into the CD business because of its profitability.

Bruce Michal, owner of the Manhattan Pawn Shop, said his store has been selling CDs since they first came out 10 years ago.

"Their popularity grows all the time as more and more people use them at home. There is definitely a market for them," Michal said.

Michal said his collection has also grown over time.

"We have around 300 CDs in stock and have quite a variety. We have the whole works," Michal said.

Michal said the pawn shop buys, sells, and trades CDs, and pays anywhere from 50 cents to $2 for a CD and sells them for as low as $3 and as high as $7.

Michal said the CDs bring customers into his store.

"A lot of people know I have used CDs and look through them. I sell several every day, " Michal said.

Used CDs are not only sold in area pawn shops, but they are also sold in stores in Aggieville.

Along the Aggieville strip, there are four stores which sell CDs, including Lair Gauche, Bonepile Records, Streetside Records, and a second-hand shop.

A year ago, Vital Vinyl kicked off the spread of CD stores by playing musical chairs in the Aggieville district.

Vital Vinyl used to be the prime location for recycled CDs because of its expansive collection of music and low prices.

After moving to another location, the entertainment recycling store, Lair Gauche, took its place.

Vital Vinyl then went out of business, and Bonepile Records filled in the location.

The two new stores, Lair Gauche, which opened last year, and Bonepile Records, which opened this year, specialize in recycling used CDs, records, and tapes.

In addition to these two stores, Streetside Records has also jumped on to the bandwagon.

Since Oct. 10, the store is now selling used CDs in addition to new releases.

"We got used CDs because of customer demand," Eileen Meyer, manager of Streetside Records, said.

Meyer said Streetside organized a grand opening of the used CD section on the day they first went on sale.

Streetside advertised in newspapers and on radio about the used CDs weeks before the event to attract customers and fuel excitement.

Meyer said she is pleased with the sales so far.

"During the first two weeks, the sales were spiked very high. My store is doing the best out of all the four stores, and it has been going better than projected," Meyer said.

Meyer said five stores across the nation were selected to carry a stock of used CDs.

"We're doing it in the stores where there is the most need for used CDs, like in college markets," Meyer said.

Meyer said the Streetside chain built up the collection of used CDs by giving employees new CDs in return for used CDs.

Meyer said the Manhattan Streetside now has near 1,000 CDs in its collection and has a buy-sell-trade policy.

The policy is designed to give a customer $1 more in trade than in cash.

The value of each CD is determined individually, instead of stating a set price for all CDs.

Meyer said the store takes many factors in consideration when purchasing a CD from a customer.

"The amount we pay for it depends on whether or not the CD is something that will sell in our store," Meyer said.

Meyer said the store has a computer system which can track how well the new CDs are selling in the market and if they're selling well, the customer will get more money for the used version of that CD.

"It's a very reliable system, because it uses sales from the past to put a value on the used CDs," Meyer said.

Meyer said another thing that they take into consideration when buying the CDs is its condition.

"We take money off if the case is cracked, or if the album cover is not intact. It definitely varies how much a customer will get in return for a used CD," she said.

Meyer said the CDs cost as low as $2.99, and the box sets can cost up to $30.

Meyer said the sections in the used CD collection parallel the ones in the new CD bins.

"Every category we have in the stores, we have in the used CDs. We have everything from classical to import to soundtrack to New Age," Meyer said.

Meyer said the sales have risen because Christmas is around the corner.

"Since the holiday season is coming on, I've been selling an increased amount of CDs," Meyer said.

Evgeny Tkachenko (left), minister of education of the Russian Federation and member of President Boris Yeltsin's cabinet, delivers a speech Thursday morning in the Union Little Theatre. Tkachenko spoke about the changes occurring in the Russian Federation's educational system. Russian observes Kansas

More than 60 people turned out at the K-State Union Little Theatre Thursday morning to hear Evgeny Tkachenko, a member of Boris Yeltsin's cabinet, speak on the development of the Russian Federation.

Tkachenko (pronounced Tuk-chink-o) is the minister of education in the Russian Federation and spoke for more than 45 minutes discussing "Russia at the Crossroads."

Tkachenko and his colleagues came to Kansas to observe and learn about U.S. educational philosophies, at both the university and public-school levels.

After being introduced, Tkachenko briefly spoke in English to the audience members, thanking them for making the speaking opportunity available.

For the rest of his speech, his soft-spoken Russian was interpreted by his colleague, Elena Lenskaya, head of the ministry department of international programs.

Throughout his speech, Tkachenko addressed the systems of education in both the United States and the Russian Federation and the potential for cooperation between the two.

"We have seen a lot of possibilities in your system of education that could benefit our system of education," he said. "We have seen very many experiences here in your country that we would like to carry back home with us."

Tkachenko said he saw much in common between the two countries.

"We are both struggling between a balance of decentralization and centralization in our systems," he said. "We are both trying to involve our communities in education, and we are both trying to promote innovative experiences for our schools."

Tkachenko said that modifying the educational system in the Russian Federation is a complex matter with many barriers working to slow this change. One of those barriers is the dramatic flux Russia is experiencing in all areas.

"The old moral and economic values are dying," he said. "If you look at public mentality, major values are being questioned. Major philosophies of the state are being reconsidered."

And while there are a great many political movements, political parties and trade unions all struggling for change, Tkachenko said consensus building is still lacking.

"In a country with over 120 ethnicities, all religions, covering a huge amount of land, with a huge variety of climates and many other differences, the changes that are being introduced are not happening very easily," he said.

Tkachenko also elaborated on the goals and objectives for the Russian Federation's educational system and the mechanisms that support these goals.

One of their goals is to help Russian teachers understand the ideas of freedom and the responsibility of individuality.

"Just a couple of years ago, we had a standardized curriculum for all. We had one prescribed textbook for each grade level in all regions of our country," he said. "Our students' uniforms were the same north to south and east to west. And even our school buildings were the same from region to region."

It was this kind of uniformity that prevented individuality, Tkachenko said, and independent decisions were not expected at the schools.

"A lot of our teachers have been in the old way of thinking, and these new ways are hard," he said. "These changes are very difficult for a people who have lived with a totalitarian system for so long."

Duo to perform Indian melodies

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Most of the artists who perform in Manhattan aren't known for making their own instruments.

Sometimes, they can't even play their instruments, but that's another story.

Very rarely do Manhattan audiences get to hear music that is spiritually engrossing, personal, and, best of all, individually distinctive.

A rare moment is upon us, when Navajo-Ute R. Carlos Nakai and native Nebraskan William Eaton will perform their unique blend of music tonight in concert at McCain Auditorium.

Nakai, a Native American and member of the Dine (Navajo) who grew up in Flagstaff, Arizona, began studying classical trumpet at Northern Arizona University. He then began playing the Native American flute and learning traditional melodies of Plains and Woodlands Indians.

Nakai's current style is inspired from his earlier traditional work, but in a very new, developed style.

Besides performing and touring across the nation, Nakai has released many albums of his work, including "Canyon Trilogy," "Weavings" and "Emergence." His albums with sometimes collaborator William Eaton include "Carry the Gift," "Winter Dreams" and "Ancestral Voices."

CONCERT

R. Carlos Nakai and William Eaton will present a concert of their own music at 8 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium. For tickets, call 532-6428.

In 1992, Nakai received the Governor of Arizona's Arts Award. He was the first Native American to be recognized with the award.

Nakai now resides in Tucson, Ariz. William Eaton grew up just a hair north of us in Lincoln, Neb.

Eaton has been performing ever since he was 7 years old, when his uncle Charlie gave him a ukelele.

After graduating from Arizona State University, Eaton went to school at Stanford University. After taking guitar lessons, Eaton became much more interested in guitars.

For his final project for his master's degree in business administration, Eaton developed the plan for the foundation of the Robert-Venn School of Luthiery, which has produced 500 graduates in the 18 years of its existence.

After developing the school, Eaton developed himself. Self-contemplation and thoughts on music inspired him to build his own instruments, each unique in their own way.

having blackouts. He had to leave Jop Corps in order to have some medical tests done. With nowhere else to go, Harris moved into the Manhattan Emergency Shelter in September.

Harris said people have lots of misconceptions about people who are homeless.

"People think homeless people are lazy and don't want to work," he said. "I stayed at some churches. I had people at the churches look at me funny. They judged me by my living conditions."

Harris said people don't choose to be homeless. They have just have bad luck.

"A lot of people don't understand that it can happen to anyone. We are like everyone who has problems. Ours are just a little more extreme."

Harris' blackouts have stopped, and he is trying to get back into the Job Corps program. He wants to train as an Emergency Medical Technician.

"There are a lot of shootings in Califronia, and I have some family members that have died of cancer. I would like to be able to help people," he said.

College is also an option Harris said he has considered.

"I want to make a better life for myself," he said.

Although Harris is eager to move on, he said he is thankful for the help he has received from the shelter.

"It has helped me get back on my feet. I have a bed, and that's not bad. It helps you out," he said.

Harris said he is eager to get back to California so he can watch his daughter grow up.

Reader thinks crush threatens relationship

Write to Cassie:
116 Kedzie Hall
Manhattan, KS

Dear Cassandra,

For the last three years, I have had a wonderful boyfriend. He is the sweetest, kindest, most hard-working person I know. When he moved away, we decided to keep dating.

We see each other as much as we can on the weekends or on days off. A while ago, I met this really nice guy. We hit it off really well, but I never saw him again, until recently. We were put in a situation where we had to spend time together. Now, that situation is over, and I find myself thinking about him. When I see him on campus, I just want to jump his bones!

He probably has no idea I feel this way, but I think that's good because I really love my boyfriend, and I just want to get over this overwhelming crush.

Sincerely,
Is this wrong?

Dear Is this wrong,

I think it's a misconception that once you become involved with someone, you are never supposed to notice other people of the opposite sex. Just because you have a serious boyfriend doesn't mean you aren't going to notice other men. There's nothing wrong with still finding other men attractive as long as you are happy with the man you are currently dating. All relationships run into something like this. As long as you're honest with yourself, there's no reason to feel guilty.

Creativity, originality define 'WinterDance'

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

The K-State dance department threw aside the traditional pink tutus and satin ballet slippers and presented two hours of modern dance Thursday at Nichols Theatre.

Graceful moves, outrageous costumes and charming music made for a delightful evening of dance.

The dance production thrived on creativity and new and original ways to express emotion through movement.

The opening piece, titled "Shedding Light #1," had a theme that carried out through the entire production.

The silence and darkness of the theater was broken with the recorded voice of Vera Orlock, assistant professor of dance.

Orlock then emerged from backstage barefoot wearing a flowing silk outfit and proceeded to present a playful and unique approach to dance.

As Orlock explained movement and her passion for dance, she tiptoed around the stage, flipped on lamps, covered up her face with her hands and blew kisses out into the audience.

The sensual and ecologically aware message playing in the background teamed with Orlock's movements was an unusual but striking combination.

In her interview, she talked about how she liked to mow the grass so she could be with the grass, trees, air and critters.

As she grabbed her ankles and hopped around and produced mime-type movements in the chair, she proved the message of the piece that everyone has a strong, developed sense of movement.

The following piece titled "In the Midst of Her Courtship," featured a brilliant work by eight dancers.

The performers, dressed in black-lace slips, acted the part of both young and old women suddenly caught by the call of death.

The drama and emotional strength of the piece came through as the dancers threw their hands up to the sky, collapsed onstage and fell into each others arms.

"Free Floating Anxiety" was a sharp contrast to the preceding ballet piece.

Seven dancers who radiated with energy turned up the heat with their imaginative performances.

The women came out into the spotlight one at a time, performed a brief dance piece, and then the dancers came together to perform a high-paced routine of sharp dance steps and graceful moves.

The next performance featured choreographer Naomi Goldberg, who acted out the story of a Caribbean folktale about a female spirit and a boy's search for mangos.

Goldberg's professional experience and extensive background in dance was evident with her clearly expressed emotions and crisp moves.

The final piece, titled "Miles of Respect," was the highlight of the night.

From the disco ball hanging down from the ceiling to the black and white '50s and '60s costumes, the piece was charming and a great way to cap off a creative night of modern dance.

Professors research MTV

Project created interest, found imagery in videos

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Research can be fun.

If you don't believe it, ask Carol Pardun, assistant professor of advertising at K-State.

Pardun and her colleague, Kathy McKee, assistant professor of communication arts at Berry College in Mount Berry, Ga., researched religious and sexual imagery and symbolism in MTV videos.

Pardun said the project has generated a lot of interest from both the media and her students.

"I think sometimes in academics, we take things too seriously," she said.

Pardun said the idea for her project really came from applying her undergraduate English classes to research.

"It's real easy for me to think of really weird things," she said.

In her undergraduate work, Pardun spent time reading and studying 17th-century metaphysical poets such as John Donne. Donne and his colleagues used the sexual-religious juxtaposition to shatter conventional thinking, she said.

MTV is the modern version of the metaphysical poets of the 17th century, she said.

"When Madonna came on the scene in the '80s, religious and sexual imagery wasn't new," Pardun said. "People have been putting sex and religion together for years."

Pardun said two videos she viewed really stand out in her mind. The first is "November Rain" by Guns-N-Roses.

"That video is just jam-packed with symbols," she said.

The video blatantly uses religious imagery unrelated to the song itself.

Pardun said the lyrics of the song portray love as a short-lived experience, so it should be enjoyed as long as it lasts.

Another weird video she said she encountered was by Shakespeare's Sister. Near the end of the video, the singer appeared onstage in a Little-Bo-Peep-like costume while a Salvation Army Band plays in the background.

"The song said 'I don't care. You stink,'" Pardun said.

Sometimes, the religious images presented in the video didn't tie in with the perceived theme of the song, she said.

In a Pearl Jam video, a Bible verse from Genesis was flashed across the screen. When Pardun looked it up, it appeared unrelated to the song, she said.

Other videos use the religious symbols to enhance the theme of the song, such as REM's "Losing My Religion" and Arrested Development's "Revolution."

Pardun said sexual and religious images show up together nearly a third of the time.

Pardun and McKee analyzed 160 videos and found religious imagery present in more than a third of the videos encoded. They also found religious imagery was twice as likely to be found in videos that also use sexual imagery than those without.

None of the videos analyzed used alternative religious imagery. The images used were highly recognizable Judeo-Christian symbols.

Pardun is just one of the many researchers in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

"There has been real growth in research," Charles Lubbers, assistant professor of journalism, said.

In the past four years, all of the new faculty members have been research faculty, Lubbers said.

"I've got four projects going right now," he said.

Aside from his current projects, Lubbers has two articles being reviewed for publication and has received a grant for another project.

"Good research is research that can enhance teaching," Lubbers said.

Lubbers said he often uses his research in his classes because it supports his teaching.

"I think from the standpoint of overall school activities, research is a much more significant factor than it used to be," Carol Oukrop, head of the journalism school, said.

In the past, the department has not had enough money to send faculty members to conferences to present their research.

Oukrop said she thought there was more encouragement in the form of rewards and satisfaction for faculty members doing research.

Wonderland features lights, Santa

KIMBERLY WISHART

The Sunset Zoo has spent the month of November decorating for its second-annual holiday-lights festival from 6 to 9 p.m. during the weekends of Dec. 2-4, Dec. 9-11 and Dec. 16-18.

The event is called WILDlight Wonderland '94.

"We have over 80,000 feet of twinkle lights. That's double the size of last year," said Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director for the zoo.

"We've added a lot of colored lights, even K-State purple. If it doesn't move, it has lights."

In addition, Fenstermacher said there will be more than 20 lighted animal figurines.

"Something unique to our holiday-lights festival is that we have more than 20 lighted animal cut-out figures of a rhinoceros, a giraffe, a bear and many other zoo animals," she said.

There will also be a surprise for children.

"We will have Santa Claus and Santa's workshop here, and kids have the opportunity to have their photo taken with Santa," Fenstermacher said. "The children can also register to win a giant stocking of goodies."

Fenstermacher said they were encouraging people to bring cans of non-perishable food to the zoo during regular hours or to the KMAN-AM 1350, KMKF-FM 101.5 and B104.7 radio stations.

"They will receive a coupon for $1 off admission if they bring a can of food," she said.

Eleven K-State organizations will also participate in the holiday lights festival by singing Christmas carols.

"We are doing it for our pledge-class philanthropy," Mindy Cortright, freshman in journalism and mass communications, said. "It was hard to narrow it down, but we thought it would be fun to go out and carol for the community."

Admission is $3 for adults, $2 for children ages 5 to 12. Children 4 years old and younger get in free.

Chris Cokinos, instructor of English, said people need to know both the positive and controversial legislation that could be coming out of Congress.

"I expect that he'll be giving us an overview of what the environmental movement should be looking at," Cokinos said.

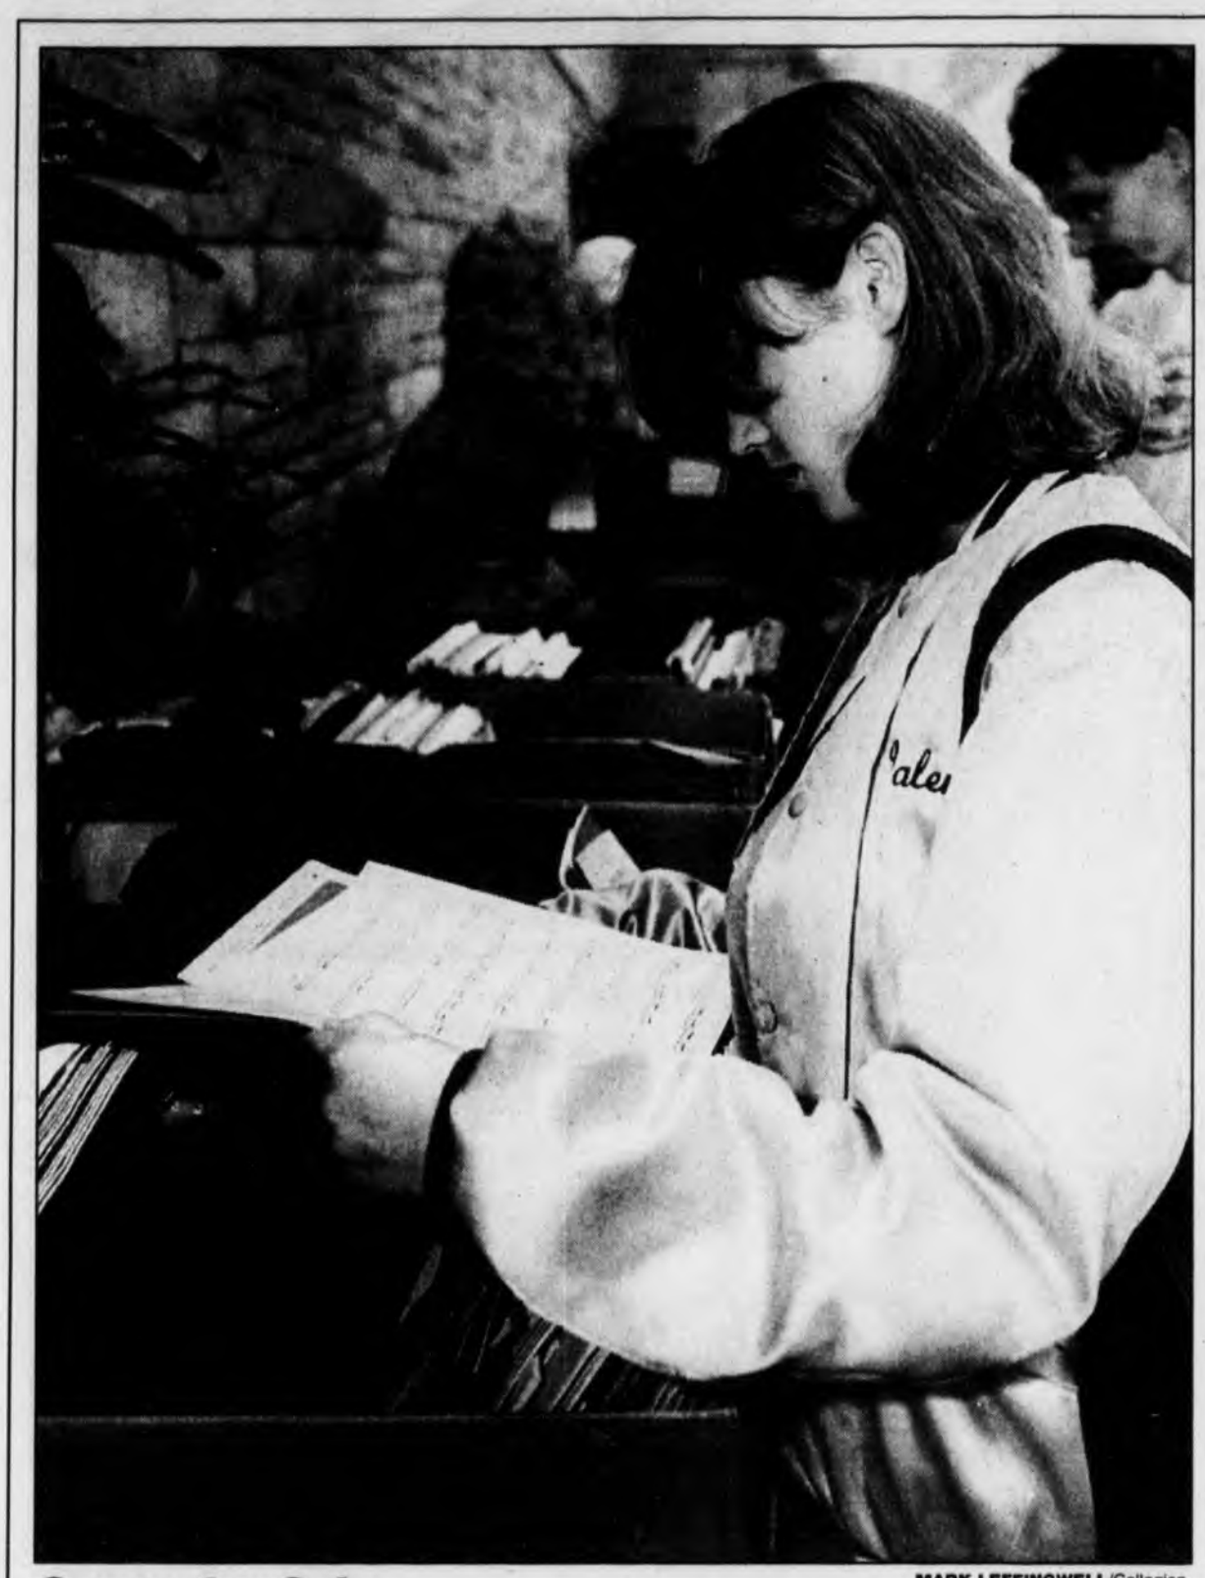
CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.



TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

in the environmental agenda.

Childs' talk follows closely on Patricia Waak's presentation on population control.

"I like the contrast," Wichman said. "It provides us with a new perspective with which we can better understand what's coming out of Congress."

Cokinos said he hoped a lot of people come with specific questions for Childs.

"I think Greenpeace is a good group to get this information from," he said.

Cokinos said Greenpeace draws the line where it thinks it needs to be drawn and doesn't back down as some other environmental groups have a reputation for doing.

Wichman said he thought the program was something people could benefit from no matter their political views.

"What he's saying is not directly political, but it has a lot to do with what is going on in the political arena of our country and the world," Wichman said.

Wichman said Childs will be speaking at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday in Kedzie 106 on ethical issues in the environmental movement.

Wichman said the environmental movement will have to come up with radical changes to support the expanding population.

"I think an understanding of environmental issues helps us all attain a better, holistic understanding of events in our world today," Wichman said.

Childs last spoke at K-State in April 1990.

He has appeared at more than 250 colleges and universities and was awarded the "Lecturer of the Year" award from the National Association for Campus Activities in 1991.

Childs has been a Greenpeace activist since 1987 and has served as national spokesperson since 1988.

He has participated in Greenpeace nonviolent direct actions and protests throughout the United States, the Great Lakes, New England, and his current home state of California.

Coolerspoon breaking out of country label the band thinks they are fine-tuned enough to play them at a bar yet," Stonestreet said.

Castaneda said the members practice four days a week, are working to create more originals, and hope to showcase the new songs at future performances.

"Our goal right now is to cut a demo and get some original stuff out there. We don't want to be known as a cover band," Stan Castaneda, freshman in graphic design, said.

Seymour said Coolerspoon has two things that set them apart from other bands.

"We get along better than other bands do, and when you hear our original music, you can sense that it is definitely different," Seymour said.

Seymour said he thinks the band has a solid future.

"I think in a year we will be known here in town and maybe on a wider scale," Seymour said.

Seymour said the band has a heavy alternative sound and hopes the band will help widen Manhattan's reputation.

"We want to get Manhattan away from the 'country' label and move toward rock," Seymour said.

Stonestreet said the band members would like to play harder rock, but they have to cater to the student crowd.

"A lot of their roots are in heavy stuff, but they can't play it because they have to play things people want to hear," Stonestreet said.

Matt Marron, a freshman in music education who is at K-State on a voice scholarship, said the audience at the band's debut was very receptive to the music.

"I'm really hyped up about it. A lot of people said we sounded really good," Marron said.

Marron said the a good audience is vital to a successful performance.

"They can either make you or break you," Marron said.

Marron said he would like to spread Coolerspoon's music throughout the University community.

"I'd like to get our music out around campus so we can see what people think," Marron said.

victims for HIV and using that to justify violence against them, Richards said.

Taylor said she kept up to date with the case through Richards when she came back to Manhattan.

"It's not just Mississippi's problem," Taylor said. "It's everybody's problem. The activity that's going on there and the people's lack of voice is the same as saying it's OK to treat gays and lesbians like that. It's inexcusable."

She began using e-mail and the Internet to contact everyone she knew and to pass along the information, asking people to write to Gov. Fordice and Attorney General Janet Reno and protest against what they said was a violation of the civil rights of gays, lesbians and people with HIV.

In less than two months since the murders, the Mississippi governor's office has received more than 2,000 letters from the United States, Canada and Great Britain asking the governor to support a thorough investigation of the case, Taylor said.

She estimated that most of the letters are a result of her efforts, as well as others in this community.

"I know that we have to be responsible for about 90 percent," Taylor said. "I spend five hours a day on the net reading letters from people and sending them back."

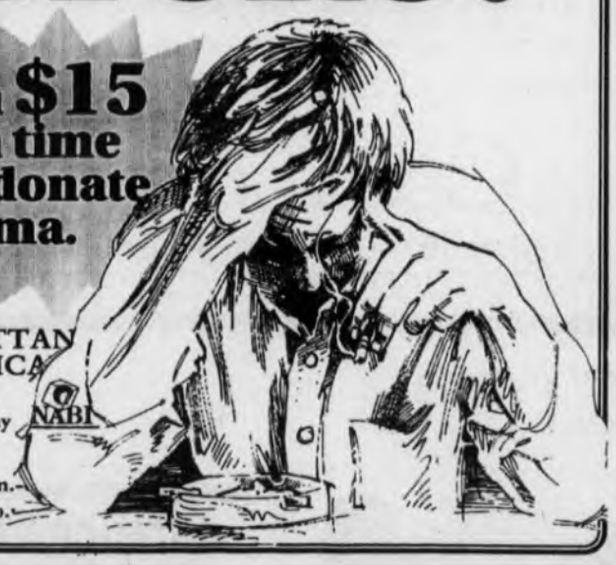
Desiree Carlson, an X-ray technician at Memorial Hospital, said the hospital staff generated about 15 letters in protest.

She said a lot of people she told were outraged when they heard the story.

"It doesn't matter who you are," Carlson said. "As far as these guys being gay and being killed, it doesn't matter. They are human beings first.

"That judge down in Mississippi is just looking for an excuse to justify the murders without saying they don't give a damn because they're gay."

Carlson said it is preposterous to use HIV as an excuse for killing gays, especially since AIDS is now spreading fastest among white rural housewives, according to the Manhattan AIDS Project.



Taylor said the rapid response of gay and lesbian communities and the use of the Internet to spread the word is proof that one person can make a difference.

"A lot of what will happen will have to do with such a large number of people saying, 'Enough is enough.'

"People are really stopping and looking at the situation and thinking that this could happen in my backyard," Taylor said.

"It's not just a gay and lesbian thing. It's an issue that affects everyone, because HIV is not just a gay person's disease. It crosses all sectors of America. It has no boundaries."

$17,000 to fund testing, lobbying

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN
Collegian

Student Senate debated until the wee hours of the morning on how to allocate the almost $17,000 in the Student Life Enrichment Fund.

"We almost made a record," Aaron Otto, Student Affairs and Social Services chairman, said.

Otto said the decision was made at around 4 a.m.

Senate voted 30-21-1 to allocate $3,800 of the total $16,656 in the enrichment fund to free HIV testing and the remaining $12,856 to the Access the Future program.

Access the Future is a program to lobby the Kansas Legislature to keep tuition low at state universities and continue open admissions in Kansas.

The money in the fund came from a 50-cent fee overcharge at the beginning of the semester.

Other choices for allocation that failed included bike racks, a bass pond and sending 17 students to the Aloha Bowl, Otto said.

Students serve the community

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

This is the fifth part of a series about the people that live and work at the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

Some K-State students left the classroom for some real-world experience about what it is like to be homeless.

As a part of Introduction to Social Work, K-State students volunteer at a variety of agencies, including the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

"I didn't know what homelessness was until I worked at the shelter," Julie Armstrong, senior in social work, said. "They are not dirty people off the streets. They would do anything for you. They are friendly and hard working."

Juanita McGowan, assistant professor of social work, said the class helps students get experience about the profession.

"It is a powerful, realistic teaching tool," she said.

There are 90 students in the class, and each student must complete 50 hours of community service.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

A man, who identified himself as the Great White when calling the Collegian, runs naked across campus Friday. The streaker said he was dropped off at Waters Hall, jogged across campus and was picked up in front of the Union. The Great White said one of the reasons he streaked was to win a $250 bet.

Streaker protests bowl with chilly campus jog

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

A man wearing nothing but tennis shoes and a pig mask ran through campus at 11:30 a.m. Friday as part of a dare and to make a statement.

A person claiming to be the streaker called the Collegian later that afternoon with an explanation for his actions.

The alleged streaker would not give his real name, but instead called himself the Great White.

He did say that he was a junior in accounting and a member of an unspecified fraternity.

The streaker said he was dropped off at Waters Hall, jogged across campus and was picked up in front of the Union.

"Running through the Union was kind of the grand finale," he said.

The Great White said there were several reasons why he decided to strip down and run through campus.

"I was exercising my freedom of expression and protesting us going to the Aloha Bowl vs. a Coalition bowl," he said. "I don't know if it will accomplish anything, but it was a statement," he said.

Being an accounting major also played a factor in the Great White's decision to streak.

"It might change the stereotypical image of accountants and accounting majors," he said.

The Great White said another reason he streaked was to win a $250 bet from his fraternity brothers.

"It was kind of a dare and kind of a bet. I didn't think they would raise that much money when I accepted," he said.

The streaker said he doesn't have any specific plans for his money, but he has developed a few options.

"Maybe I'll go skiing or give the money to the needy to buy clothes or food or something," he said.

"I wanted to use it to go to the Aloha Bowl, but since it's in Hawaii, I can't afford it," he said.

This was a first-time experience for the Great White, but he said he would do it again if there were a good reason.

"I might do it again. I'd do a celebration run if we got to go to the Cotton Bowl," he said.

Overall, the Great White said he was satisfied with his streak through campus.

"The weather was real nice — especially for a December day," he said.

The Great White said he thought he almost got caught.

"I heard from someone that I barely missed being picked up by a police officer," he said.

Capt. Robert Mellgren of the K-State Police Department said the department knew nothing about the streaking.

"If we had seen him, we'd have to detain him because his activities would have been disruptive," he said.

Mellgren was uncertain as to what would happen if the Great White had been detained.

"We'd have to address each situation differently," he said.

▶ CATS FOR CANS

Donating a can buys a vote to throw a pie

LESLEY MOSS
Collegian

Students and faculty in the College of Education are vying for a chance to throw pies at each other before finals have even begun.

The pie-throwing is part of a contest between the faculty and students in the College of Education to collect canned food for Cats for Cans.

Cats for Cans is a campus-wide effort to collect canned food for the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Nina Moore, senior in elementary education and president of the education council, said the College of Education is doing its part along with other campus organizations and the College of Engineering.

Moore said this is the second year for the contest between faculty and students.

"In previous years, they just set up boxes around Bluemont, and nobody really knew what they were for," Moore said. "The key is announcing the contest in classes so that students are informed."

Moore said either five professors or five students from the College of Education will get a pie thrown in their faces depending on which group wins the can-collection contest.

"A student or faculty member gets one vote for every can they bring," Moore said. "Last year, the faculty won."

Moore said canned food can be taken to the Copy Center at Bluemont 022 between 8 a.m. and noon or from 1 to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

"We began collecting Thursday, and the contest ends next Thursday," Moore said.

Moore said the pie throwing for the losing group will be at 6 p.m. Thursday in the lobby of Bluemont.

Laura House, junior in architectural engineering and all-campus coordinator of Cats for Cans, said about 38,000 pounds of food and $4,000 has already been raised on campus since mid-October.

"The College of Education usually contributes about 2,000 pounds of food," House said.

Landon Lecture canceled due to speaker's foreign travel

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

The ambassador to the United Nations, Madeleine Albright, canceled her Landon Lecture appearance, which was scheduled for Wednesday.

K-State President Jon Wefald said his office was notified late on Thursday night and told that President Clinton asked Albright to undertake urgent foreign travel.

Wefald said he thought Clinton asked Albright to attend the inauguration for the new president of Madagascar in Africa.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture series, said Albright is planning to reschedule her lecture sometime next semester, but a definite date is not planned yet.

"We're working on dates right now," he said.

Wefald said there will be no one to speak in her place on Wednesday, nor will there be any more Landon Lectures for the remainder of this semester.

Reagan said there are several invitations out asking people to speak at K-State.

Ross Perot has agreed to speak on Jan. 24, he said.

The final Landon Lecture, which was scheduled for Wednesday, has been canceled.

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ NASA ASTRONAUT SHARES EXPERIENCES WITH K-STATE CROWD

K-State landed the chance to be a host to a NASA astronaut during the weekend.

Greg Harbaugh delivered the lecture, "Shuttle Payload Planning, Loading and Unloading," Saturday in Durland Hall.

Tom Roberts, assistant dean of engineering, said Harbaugh was accepted into the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in 1987 and became an astronaut in 1988.

Harbaugh is a veteran of two space flights: Space Shuttle Discovery in April 1991 and Space Shuttle Endeavor in January 1993.

"Planning every mission is vital," he said. "Advance preparation gives you the best chance of succeeding."

He said the shuttle rocket boosters weigh 1.2 million tons, and the shuttle can travel 100,000 feet in one minute and 40 seconds.

Harbaugh said it's interesting to learn geography from orbit.

"The Bahamas are the most beautiful sight to see," he said.

During the 1991 mission, he said the smoke ball over Kuwait was incredible.

"It reached the Saudi Arabia border," Harbaugh said.

NASA is presently doing a lot of different things, such as monitoring weather phenomenons and volcanic regions, he said.

"A volcano bulges out when it's going to erupt. By monitoring these patterns, we can save a lot of lives and avoid the economic impact."

Harbaugh said the Hubble telescope is also pushing our boundaries of understanding.

"It can read a license plate at 30 miles away," he said.

He said establishing a space station is not NASA's end goal.

"We haven't found a true limit as to what we can do," he said. "It's human nature to explore."

Harbaugh said this generation may be the one to explore Mars. The U.S. might join with the Russians when this happens, he said.

"The space program has been a positive influence on our society," he said. "If you are thinking about your destiny, it's only going to happen by doing it."

▶ SEATTLE SAUSAGE MAKER RECALLS 10,000 POUNDS OF SICKENING SAUSAGE

SEATTLE (AP) — A sausage maker is recalling 10,000 pounds of salami that may contain bacteria that sickened at least seven people in the Seattle area.

The cured salami products were made by the Columbus Salami Co. of South San Francisco and sold in Washington state, California and Oregon, said Jacque Knight, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The salami was sold during the first two weeks of November under the brand names of San Francisco Sausage Co., Columbus, Alpine and Pocino. The meat was sold at supermarkets but not in labeled packages, the USDA said.

At least seven people who were poisoned by E. coli bacteria said they had eaten the salami, the Seattle-King County Department of Public Health said Friday. Another eight cases of E. coli poisoning since Nov. 3 also could be linked to the meat. In one case, a 2-year-old child was hospitalized for a day due to dehydration from severe diarrhea, officials said. None of the other cases required hospital care.

Symptoms of E. coli poisoning include fever, nausea, stomach ache and diarrhea. The elderly, children and people with chronic illnesses are particularly at risk.

▶ CONVICTED BANK ROBBER KILLED IN SHOOTOUT AFTER PRISON ESCAPE

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A convicted bank robber who escaped from federal custody after handcuffing two guards was killed Sunday in a shootout with city police, ending a three-day manhunt.

Michael Turner, serving two 15-year prison terms for a 1986 Alabama bank robbery, escaped Thursday from the federal courthouse in Kansas City, Kan. He had been taken to court for an appearance on charges related to his Feb. 1, 1993, escape from the maximum-security federal prison at Leavenworth.

Authorities believe Turner escaped from the courthouse by using a fake gun carved from soap. Two guards were handcuffed to a pipe, and Turner allegedly stole two guns.

U.S. Marshal Rand Rock said 30 deputies went door to door warning people that Turner was dangerous.

Early Sunday, he robbed two guards at a power plant, handcuffed them and stole a car, stopping long enough to ask them for directions, police said.

The car was spotted by a police officer, who chased it into a church parking lot. The driver got out of the car, and the officer saw a weapon and began firing shots, police Capt. Vince McInerney said.

Turner fled into a wooded area, and a gun battle started. Turner, 38, was killed by a shotgun blast.

▶ CARBON-DIOXIDE LEAK KILLS 1, INJURES 8 IN KANSAS CITY

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A carbon-dioxide leak at a General Mills processing plant killed one employee and injured eight others, authorities said Sunday.

Firefighters got a call shortly before midnight Saturday reporting a fire or chemical leak at the plant, said Chief Rick Brisbin, of the Kansas City Fire Department.

"We got information it was everything from ammonia to a chlorine leak at the plant," Brisbin said. "We called in the haz-mat (hazardous materials) team, and they determined it was a carbon-dioxide leak."

Plant employees told firefighters all the workers had left the building, but firefighters found a victim in a fifth-floor processing room. Eight other employees were taken to two hospitals, Brisbin said. The leak came from a 45-ton external carbon-dioxide tank.

Professor wins award in excellence

TAMARA JORDAN
Collegian

"The pursuit of excellence ends here" is the theme Karen Martin, director of the Minority Engineering Program, focuses on while working with K-State students.

Martin has recently been named the 1994 Conoco Presidential Award recipient. The award will be presented at the fall commencement ceremony Saturday by President Jon Wefald.

The Conoco award was established in the spring of 1978 to recognize outstanding individual contributions to the development of quality minority education at K-State.

"We knew within the first 10 minutes of selecting the recipient that Martin would be the one," Reggie McGowan, chair of the selection committee, said.

McGowan said nominees may be faculty or staff members, alumni, students or friends of the University, and may be someone nominated last year. The recipient receives an inscribed plaque and a $1,000 award.

Martin said to be nominated was an honor in itself.

"I was delighted to know that others have acknowledged my hard work and accomplishments," Martin said.

Martin's accomplishments include being the 1990 Roberta Christie essay winner and restructuring the Minority Engineering Program.

Zoo lights

The Sunset Zoo is brightening Manhattan with its holiday-lights festival

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

The nights were bright at Sunset Zoo this weekend.

Fifteen miles of lights were used to decorate the zoo for WILDlights '94, the second-annual holiday-lights festival.

"Last year, we just had the children's zoo decorated, and we've added lots more," Angie Fenstermacher, zoo marketing and development director, said. "We have definitely more than doubled what was decorated last year."

This year, the children's zoo, entrance, pavilion, groundhog area, cheetah area and top area were lit up as well as more than 20 animal cutouts.

Fenstermacher said volunteers from Friends of the Zoo and different community volunteers worked 27 days to get the 80,000 feet of lights up.

"We wanted to come up with something that would give back to the community. Manhattan supports the zoo, and it is a community zoo, so we wanted to do something in return," Fenstermacher said. "This is something for families to bring their kids out and have a good time."

An animal program that teaches facts about some cold-climate animals takes place in the children's zoo area.

"We feature animals who are climatized to the colder weather, like the red-tailed hawk, the short-horned owl and the chinchilla, which is from the Andes mountains," Fenstermacher said.

"The chinchillas' fur is so soft. They have 60 hairs coming out of one hair follicle, and they have to be picked up by the tail, or their ribs will be crushed," she said. "That's some of the things people will learn at the animal program."

Santa's Workshop is also part of the children's zoo and gives children the chance to tell Santa Claus their wish lists and to register for a 6-foot giant stocking or a Schwinn Sierra mountain bike, Fenstermacher said.

The prizes will be given away on Dec. 18.

"You don't have to be present to win," Fenstermacher said.

The holiday-lights festival will continue Dec. 9-11 and Dec. 16-18 from 6 to 9 p.m.

Fenstermacher said families can receive $1 off the admission price if they bring a can of non-perishable food.

"We collect the cans for Flint Hills Breadbasket," Fenstermacher said. "It just takes one can to get the dollar off for the whole family."

Many community groups are participating in the holiday-lights festival.

"There are different trees decorated by different community clubs," Fenstermacher said. "Mom's Club decorated a tree with peanut butter pine cones for the birds, and they used popcorn and berries. Fort Riley Middle School put bird seed on peanut butter pine cones and used

OPINION

WORD of MOUTH

"The United Nations is a totally incompetent instrument anyplace that matters. When you get to a serious problem with serious violence, the United Nations is literally incompetent, and it kills people by its behavior." —future House Speaker Newt Gingrich said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Decision proves Senate wasn't listening

After conducting extensive research, Senate did want it wanted anyway.

Student Senate has finally decided what to do with its $17,000.

At least senators act like it's theirs. They asked the student body what students wanted and then did what they wanted to do anyway.

They have noble purposes in mind. They just didn't listen to students — or themselves.

While free HIV testing and trying to keep tuition low sound like good plans, they fall short of what was promised.

Senate took suggestions, made up some rules about how to spend the money and then ignored it all.

Senators said they didn't want to spend it on capital improvements — actual tangible objects that people can use. Never mind that's what people told them they wanted — like bike racks.

They said they weren't going to spend it on something that would require renewed funding. Who do they think is going to pay for the HIV testing after the money runs out? Lafene? Don't count on it; Student Senate cut Lafene's funding last year.

Who's going to pay for the lobbying group next year? Jeff Peterson, student body president, said he is laying out the ground work for years to come. Without future money, ground work is all we will have.

Why bother asking if they're not going to listen?

MOHAMMAD AHSAN

Where is the life we have lost in living?
Where is the wisdom we have lost in knowledge?
Where is the knowledge we have lost in information?
The cycles of Heaven in twenty centuries
Bring us farther from God and nearer to the Dust.
-T. S. Eliot

One day recently, my classmate from India was telling me about the future. Well, he is not a maharishi, a fortune teller or even a futurologist. He is an MBA student who is already worried that the future does not look good for him.

I wanted to tell him that life is a box of chocolates. Instead, I asked him to see Forrest Gump. The movie opens to this surrealistic scene showing a feather. The feather floats over houses, churches and trees — dipping and soaring. Occasionally, it settles, only to rise again and perigrinate in the air.

Needless to say, the feather is a metaphor for the life of movie's namesake character. Forrest Gump has an IQ of 75, but he goes through life with astounding success. He survives bullying, war and freak accidents while more intelligent people around him get killed or die otherwise. Not only that, he also lives to win medals and to get fantastically rich.

Thus luck's gratuity surpasses lack of gumption in Gump's life. But that does not happen to everyone. True, if one is not gifted with talent, one can be lifted by the transcendent. Demosthenes suffered from a lisp, yet he became one of the greatest orators in history. Thomas Alva Edison invented the gramophone when he was deaf. One American president, who was a C student in Harvard, raised his distressed country from the wheelchair.

Again, luck may be elusive even when talent is pervasive. Van Gogh died a pauper without recognition, although his paintings are now sold for millions. Amadeus Mozart perished young under the stress of hard work and hardship. Kennedy's life was cut short by an assassin's bullet at the height of its glory. The last emperor of China spent the last days of his life languishing in the communist labor camp.

Albert Camus once wrote that human life is an absurd wedge between the unremembered past and the unknown future. But what makes that wedge absurd also makes it so absorbing. Elvis Presley's music teacher did not think Elvis had a future in singing. In between, Lucille Ball had to wait for fame until she was in her 40s.

Between the obliterated past and the obfuscated future, life obviously is not easy. Lord Buddha proclaimed that one could escape that uneasiness through the right kind of education. Plato believed that ordinary people should be trained to happily do their tasks in a society. Aristotle saw education as a motivation for citizens to participate in civic duties.

Above all, education was seen as a communicator between between life and living, between existence and exertion. Based earlier in religion, it explained existence with exegesis, expounding that the exertion of this living is to prepare for the existence of life hereafter. But the Renaissance and the Reformation ushered in a new awakening. It made man the master of his destiny and confined the exertion of this living to the existence of this life. If religion attempted to explain life, science adventured to explore it.

What transformed education also transformed life. Once, education was a pursuit of life. Now, life has become the pursuit of education. Lord Buddha had overheard a musician telling an admirer why it was important to properly tune his instrument. If the strings are too tight, they might snap. But if they are slack, one cannot play music on them.

Perhaps religion slackens life by asserting that it is a mission of salvation. But science makes it taut as an unrelenting motion of survival. If religion denies life its living, then science wants to deprive living of its life. In a nut shell, living may have changed a great deal over the centuries, but life has only changed from despair to desperation.

Which brings one back to the issue of balance between luck and talent. Luck is despairing because it cocoons a man within the limits of destiny. Talent promotes desperation by demanding that destiny is what man makes of it. Nero was a Roman emperor who craved to become an artist. But he was not lucky with the talent for it. At the time of his death, he is said to have resented that a great artist was perishing with him! When luck is forced upon talent, it can cause disillusionment. Yet, when talent is forced upon luck, one can be disappointed. Peregrinos wrote books which were not selling well. So he killed himself one day, hoping that the news of his death would boost sale of his books. It did not happen.

A poster for a recent Career Fair on campus had this announcement: Your future is in the stars. It was an affirmation that the future is unknown no matter if one is armed with talent or luck. In other words, the lucky will be talented and the talented will be lucky so long as it is in the stars. After all, an eccentric man named John Nash won a Nobel Prize nearly 44 years after he had completed his work. Ad astra per aspera. To the stars through difficulties. That is one thing which cannot change. You must be patient to know your stars.

Reflections from an abusive relationship

People always ask why abused women don't just leave their abuser. I used to wonder that same thing myself. Now, I'm asking it of myself.

▶ GUEST

TRISHA BENNINGA

I was involved with an abusive person. In fact, I almost married him. He wasn't always that way. The abuse started gradually with a few fights and escalated into physical and mental abuse. He would tell me I was stupid, that I charmed teachers into giving me good grades rather than earning them. He made me justify every opinion I ever gave, usually following it with his own criticism of those opinions.

I wasn't allowed to make my own decisions. He had my future all planned out and any deviation from his plans resulted in a tirade, complete with being yelled at, pinned against the nearest wall and given a look that sent cold chills up my spine and scared the living hell out of me.

On a couple of occasions, a backhand across the face would also accompany his tirades.

He didn't like my friends or my family. He was constantly running them into the ground to me in an attempt to isolate me from them. He thought they diverted my attention away from him.

Our relationship put me in a constant state of stress and anxiety over every move I made. By the last few months, I was so nervous most of the time that I didn't eat and dropped 20 pounds. The last time I saw him, I thought he would kill me. In fact, at one point, he threatened to. When he struck me that time, it must have knocked some sense back into me. I realized it was time to get out.

Sometimes, I think I'm being petty for thinking I had it bad. I mean, it was mostly just verbal and emotional abuse. The hitting was only a few times. It could have been a lot worse. Thousands of women every day go to work with black eyes, to the hospital with broken bones or into the grave. What am I complaining about? I got off easy. And at least I got out.

I had hidden all of the gruesome details of our fighting from everyone who cared about me. After our final confrontation, I finally confided in my best friend, knowing that by telling her, it would force me to face facts and break off the relationship.

Just making the decision to end it seemed to lift a huge weight off my shoulders. For the first few days, I cried myself to sleep at night. While I knew I would be better off without him, I did love him and knew I would miss parts of him and our relationship.

Things got easier for a while, then the nightmares began. I started waking in the middle of the night. It wasn't like when you gradually wake up, look at the clock then roll over and go back to sleep.

Instead, I would be sound asleep one second, the next I would be wide awake, out of bed, pacing the hallway. One night, I woke up coughing and choking. I was sobbing uncontrollably and couldn't catch my breath.

A single thought went through my mind at that moment — son of a bitch. I still have those nightmares every so often.

Although he never left any physical marks, I can still feel the emotional scars he left on me. I still find it difficult to voice any sort of an opinion for fear someone will demand justification of that opinion or think I'm stupid for thinking that way.

I try not to think about our relationship, but occasionally a thought sneaks in. Feelings of shame and stupidity always accompany these memories.

I can't understand why I stayed with him as long as I did. I have never been the type of person who lets people walk all over her. I have always stood up for myself. What was so different about him? Why did I put up with his abuse? Sometimes, I think I must be as stupid as he was constantly telling me I was to have put up with it for so long.

I didn't want anyone to know about the abuse. I made my mother and my friend, who I had confided in, promise not to tell anyone.

I was ashamed that I allowed the abuse to continue. I should have left as soon as the tirades began. I still find it hard to admit to people that I had allowed myself to become a victim. Sometimes, I wonder if I didn't deserve to be abused for not leaving before I did. I knew what he was like, and yet I stayed. What kind of a fool stays in a relationship like that? I can find the answer to that by looking in a mirror.

The repercussions of that relationship have carried over. I am now involved with someone else.

He is sensitive, patient and easygoing. Even though I know he would never lay a hand on me, there have been times when we have disagreed about something and I immediately flinched or drew back.

Abuse and abused women are constantly portrayed in the media. I used to see those women on television and say to whomever was listening, "Why don't they just leave?" I mean, any woman with half a brain could surely see it was a bad situation, couldn't she?

An abusive relationship is a lot like a cult. You get sucked in under false pretenses, and by the time things get bad, you've been brainwashed into believing that's just the way things are.

For some reason that I do not yet understand, it is not as easy as just breaking it off or walking out. Some force keeps you there.

Maybe it's the illusion that you can change him, maybe it's fear of his response or maybe it's insanity. My guess is a little of each.

While my relationship with him was very painful, I don't regret it. I learned a lot about relationships and a lot about myself. Among the debris, I found some pieces of myself that had long been buried, including the strength I needed to end the relationship, pick up the pieces and move on.

I am still picking up those pieces. I have a feeling I will be for a long time to come.

▶ AHOLA BOWL

Outlandish acts would prove nothing

While reading the E-Collegian on the World Wide Web today, I saw the heading "Aloha Sucks" and Wess Hudelson asking for suggestions regarding the Cats playing in the Aloha Bowl. Wess, I suggest you get a little class.

As a K-State alumnus, and one who sat through many losing seasons, it is very exciting to see the Cats doing so well. It would have been nice to see them go to a big bowl game, but that is not the fault of the Aloha Bowl.

You say that K-State football will not "get any respect until something outlandish is done." You then suggest walking out after three plays will get them some attention, but I doubt that it will get them any respect. It will just get them labeled as cry babies.

I know I would be ashamed to be associated with K-State if they were to follow your advice. I'm sure not too many bowl games would be wanting a team that acted like that.

All season, I've been bragging to my friends and co-workers about the K-State football team. Many of them are looking forward to going to the game to see this team that I have so much pride in.

I know a lot of the local residents want to see the Cats play as well. They're already becoming the favorite out here, and I'm sure K-Staters will be greeted with the Aloha Spirit of the islands. I hope those of you that will make the trip will show the same respect to the people of Hawaii and the Aloha Bowl rather than take your grudges out on them.

Aloha and good luck, Cats!

▶ COALITION

K-State gets cheated out of good bowl

I truly love Notre Dame football, but in all fairness, the K-State football team should be playing in a Coalition bowl game ahead of the Fighting Irish.

The Wildcats have had a great football season, with their only losses against the No. 1 Nebraska Cornhuskers and the No. 5 Colorado Buffaloes.

Unranked teams like Notre Dame and Texas Tech, who have had difficult seasons, to say the least, have been invited to play in Coalition bowl games despite their unimpressive records. Unfortunately, the whole thing boils down to money, clout and the entire bowl-coalition system.

College football is one of the most controversial sports in terms of rankings and postseason play. The different polls lead to arguments as to where exactly a team should be ranked.

The whole bowl system itself often leads to debates over which team actually deserves to be honored as national champion. For example, there are three teams this year that could end the season undefeated. A playoff system needs to be established in an attempt to make things fair. This would allow more concentration on the actual sport and less of a focus on choosing schools that bowl coalitions think can bring in the most money.

The No. 11 Wildcats are discovering firsthand the unfairness of the bowl system. Despite all the hard work and effort put forth by the K-State football team to earn their high ranking in the polls, an unranked team like Notre Dame that has had an awful season can receive a Coalition bowl invitation and play in a bigger bowl game against a better opponent.

Program efforts challenging the future

"It was fundamentally a debate over do we want to spend money on capital improvements," Otto said. "It wasn't a matter of bike racks not being important."

The HIV testing will take place at Lafene Health Center on a first-come, first-served basis, Matt Soldner, education senator, said.

The number of tests available depends on what Lafene decides the true cost of an HIV test is, Soldner said.

"It could be as many as 300 tests," Soldner said.

He said the current cost for an HIV test for a student at Lafene is $28.

"Part of the point of doing this is to convince Lafene they should lower the cost of HIV tests," Soldner said.

He said the free testing should be available for students next semester.

The Access the Future program is an effort to change the trends of the financing of education over the years, Jeff Peterson, student body president, said.

Peterson said the information on the cost of tuition will be alarming to the public.

Peterson said people don't realize how much education costs because it is increased in small increments over the years.

Peterson said the money will be used to educate and inform the public through literature, presentations and speaking at high schools.

"We want to motivate students to write to their congressmen," Peterson said.

Every year, the Legislature decides the University budget, Peterson said.

He said he encourages students to voice their concerns about the rising cost of tuition and also to keep the open-admission policy for state schools.

Multicultural workshop inspired by school assignments on Internet

LESLEY MOSS
Collegian

Intercountry school assignments through the Internet and their place in school curricula inspired a multicultural workshop Saturday.

Nancy Knupfer, professor of education, said she is setting up international-communication assignments on the Internet for students in elementary, junior high and high schools.

"I thought it was a good time to do a workshop on multicultural diversity now because of the introduction of intercountry learning on the Internet," she said.

Knupfer said Karin Price, executive director of Dillon International Inc., an adoption agency in Tulsa, Okla., which places children from a variety of foreign countries, was the facilitator of the Multi-Cultural Diversity Training workshop.

Knupfer said the main goal of the workshop was to make people more sensitive to multicultural themes and to avoid episodes of prejudice.

"I have five children, two of which were adopted from another country, and we have experienced strange comments," she said. "That's why I have a personal interest in this."

KANSAS CITY LOSES TO DENVER 20-17

Hugh Millen, replacing the injured John Elway, won the battle of backups Sunday, leading the Denver Broncos to Jason Elam's 34-yard field goal with 2:48 left in overtime to seal a 20-17 victory over the Kansas City Chiefs.

The Chiefs (7-6) had a chance to win in regulation, but Denver's Shane Dronett blocked Lin Elliot's 37-yard field goal attempt as time expired. In overtime, the teams traded blunders before the Broncos (7-6) drove 41 yards in nine plays.

K-State bounces 'Roos

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Whatever Coach Tom Asbury preached at halftime worked wonders for K-State.

After a sluggish start at best, the Wildcats, 2-1, sprinted to an 80-48 victory against UMKC Friday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

UMKC managed to knot the score at 28-28 on a tip in by Chris Johnson at the halftime buzzer.

But the Cats strung together, scoring spurts of 19-5 and 21-4 in the second stanza, taking a 76-46 lead with 1:39 to play.

"We had a little visit with them about some things at halftime," was all Asbury said about the contrast of play between the first and second halves.

K-State is now a perfect 10-0 against the Kangaroos. The Cats will continue a seven-game home stand tonight when they face Illinois at 7 p.m. The Fighting Illini lost in the final minutes to Duke, 80-75, Saturday.

"But we can't sprain our wrist patting ourselves on the back with this one," Asbury said about the UMKC win. "We have Illinois coming Monday, so we don't have a lot of time to celebrate or think about this one."

The Cats' drowsy opening was highlighted by six turnovers before Kevin Lewis scored their first bucket with 17:13 remaining.

A hard-fought 7-0 run enabled K-State to go up 16-9 with 11 minutes left, but UMKC stormed back behind Erin Washington's seven points to take a 20-18 advantage with six minutes to go.

Washington scored 10 points in the first half, nearly four more than his average.

But the Cats turned up the defensive pressure in the second period, holding Washington to three points and the Kangaroos to 25-percent shooting from the floor.

"We knew that they weren't the type of team that should be tied with us at halftime," said freshman Mark Young, who scored eight points and had two crowd- pleasing dunks. "We just picked up the defense in the second half."

> TOM ASBURY
> K-State basketball coach

K-State stole the ball eight times in the second frame while turning the ball over just five times. That coupled with a 54-28 rebounding edge allowed the Cats to get their transition game working.

"Once this team gets in the open court, we have a chance to be OK because we have speed, quickness, athleticism and depth," Asbury said. "We don't have a lot of size or great shooters. If we are active defensively, we are a better team."

Demond Davis led the Cats with 14 points, nine rebounds and four steals. Elliot Hatcher continues to post impressive numbers in his first season as a Wildcat, netting six assists, 13 points and four steals.

Stanley Hamilton came off the bench to score a career-high 12 points, while grabbing nine rebounds. Tyrone Davis also scored a career high, getting 13 points and nine rebounds.

"We were just flat," Hamilton said about the first half. "We knew we could be better than that. We just had to turn it up in the second half."

Hamilton said although the Cats are trying to forget their 79-48 loss to Alabama, it may be helping them.

"I think Alabama kicking us means we just have to take it out on everyone else," he said.

Hamilton proving he belongs

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

It's a good thing Tom Asbury didn't listen to some outside advice a few months ago.

Because if he had, Stanley Hamilton may not have been a Wildcat this season.

"Lots of people told me I should get rid of him," Asbury said.

"But Stan and I had a real interesting talk when I got here — kind of an in-the-streets talk — and I told him that I'm not going to pre-judge him, I'm just going to watch him."

And after five games of watching Hamilton play, Asbury hasn't been disappointed.

"He's been terrific," Asbury said. "He's played well this year. He's worked hard in school and on the floor. The guy can score."

Score he did in Friday night's game against UMKC. Hamilton poured in 12 points, a career high, against the Kangaroos, with eight of those coming during the Cats' explosive second half.

Hamilton also tied his career-high of nine rebounds in Friday night's contest.

But Friday night's performance wasn't the first time Hamilton has proved the skeptics wrong.

During the Cats' dismal Alabama game, Hamilton was the only K-State player in double digits, coming off the bench to score 10 points in 17 minutes of play. He also led the Cats in rebounds with nine.

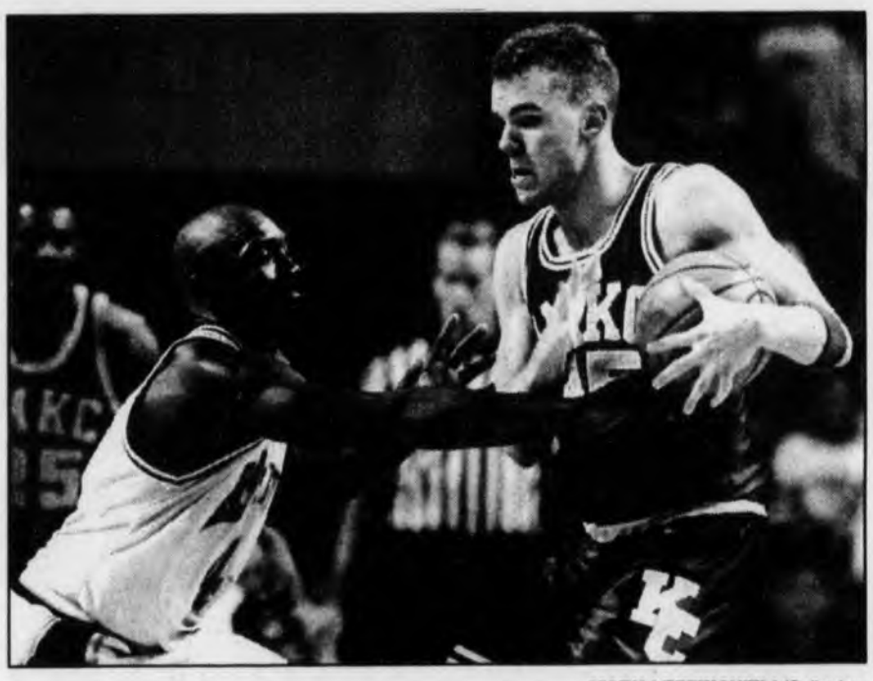
While many Cats fans may have been surprised by Hamilton's impressive performance, Hamilton said he wouldn't have been able to do it without Asbury giving him the opportunity.

"Coach Asbury sat down with me early and said, 'I'm bringing you back, I'm giving you a chance,' which was all I was asking for," Hamilton said.

"I worked hard over the summer, because I knew that was what it would take to win," he said.

"I wanted to win last year, too, but it just seemed like sometimes I got lost in the shuffle and didn't have as much of a chance as I do now."

It's not as if Hamilton is new to success or hard work — he's not.



Hamilton garnered all-American junior college honors from the Basketball Times while playing at Dodge City Community College from 1991 to 1993.

While playing at Dodge, Hamilton averaged 18.3 points a game and 10.6 boards per game.

But it was the disappointing 1993-94 K-State season when Hamilton averaged just 1.8 points and 1.9 rebounds per game that gave K-State fans reason to question Hamilton's ability.

"I heard the talk," Hamilton said.

"But I knew I had no choice but to work hard."

Golden Gophers fall short at Bramlage

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

Shanele Stires threw in 32 points Friday as the K-State women's basketball team outlasted Minnesota 76-74.

After the Wildcats broke the game open midway through the second half, 58-45, it appeared they would be able to cruise in for the victory, but Minnesota roared back to make the game exciting.

The Golden Gophers used several free throws and three-point shots, until they finally cut the lead down to two points with 1:43 remaining.

"This was definitely a game of momentum," Stires said. "They had the momentum right there toward the end.

"We got a little careless with the fouls, kept putting them on the free-throw line, and they knocked them down."

The Cats still clung to a two-point lead with four seconds remaining when Carlene Mitchell missed the front end of a one and one.

The Gophers were unable to get a shot off, however, and the Cats prevailed.

"If I've got the ball in my hand at the end of the game, I've got to make them," Mitchell said. "We shoot enough at practice that it should be automatic.

"Hopefully I'll make them next time."

Mitchell, who played at Trinity Valley Community College last year, is receiving her first action after being out with an injury.

"After being out five weeks, I haven't even gone through a full practice," Mitchell said.

"Motion offense is a lot different than what I'm used to playing, but the time on the floor helped me out."

Mitchell supplied seven points, six assists and only three turnovers in 29 minutes.

"I think our offense is behind our defense right now," Coach Brian Agler said. "There are times we had pretty good offense, but at first, we stood around and became congested."

Cats blow out South Dakota in Sunday battle

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Finally, Coach Brian Agler can breathe a sigh of relief.

An almost-healthy team played Sunday afternoon in Bramlage Coliseum, and Shawnda DeCamp led the team to an 82-37 blowout against the South Dakota Coyotes.

DeCamp, who had been suffering from an ankle injury, looked healthy for the first time in the season, Agler said.

"Today, she looked like she was moving like she wanted to," he said.

DeCamp, who scored 22 points with 12 of them being from three-point land, said she felt like everything was starting to come together for the Cats.

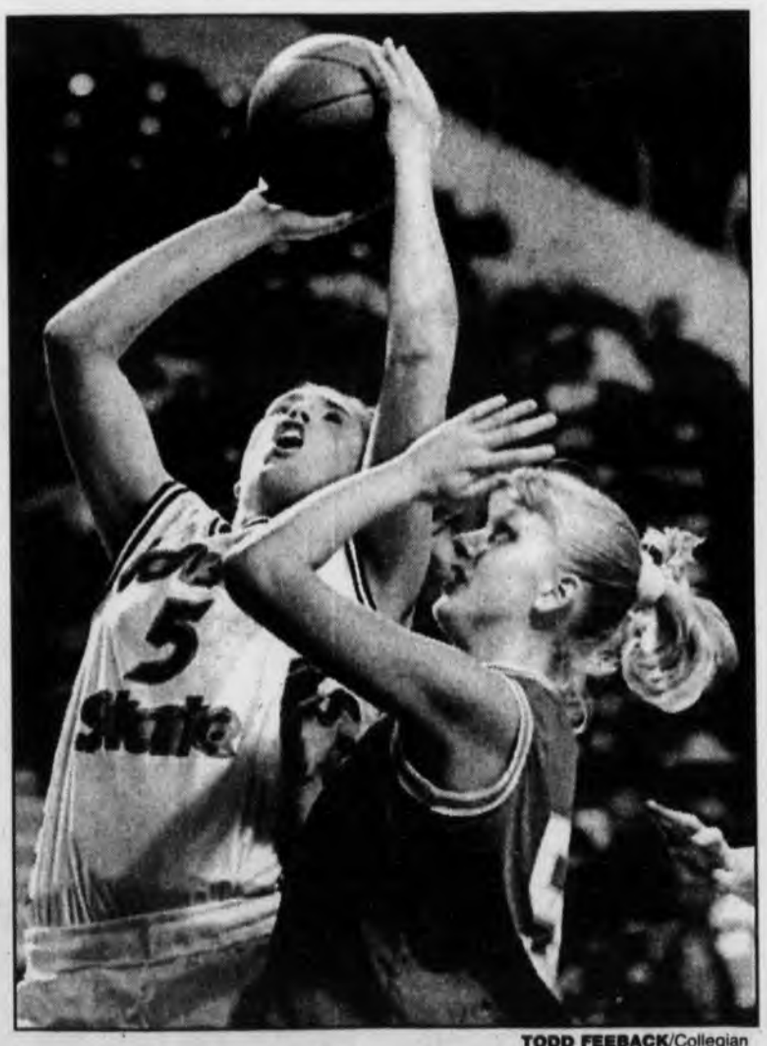
"The freshmen are finally picking the offense up — it's been a while since we've been comfortable," DeCamp said.

The Cats looked extremely comfortable offensively, shooting 49 percent from the field and 40 percent from three-point range, with four players in double digits.

Agler said he thought they did a better job of finding the open player.

"I thought they did a good job of passing the ball well and using people when they're ready to score."

Agler said he also thought their three previous games allowed them to be ready for the Coyotes.



"You can tell we've been playing against some good teams," Agler said. "Ohio State, Wichita State and Minnesota are all good teams. That helped us a lot today."

With the lead the Cats had built in the second half, Agler emptied his bench and allowed his second-team players to see action on the court.

"You get a chance to evaluate and watch your eighth or ninth player who we need to play well if we're going to meet the goals we set earlier in the year," Agler said.

The Cats' record is 3-1 overall, while South Dakota fell to 1-5.

Up next for the Cats is the George Washington Tournament in Washington, D.C., on Dec. 9-10.

Daddy has difficulty with his 'little girl' growing up

DEAR CASSIE, by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassie:
116 Kedzie Hall
Manhattan, KS

E-Mail:
cassandra
@spub.ksu.edu

Dear Cassandra,

My boyfriend and I have been dating for almost two years now, and he's the greatest. We have a wonderful relationship, he treats me with respect, he's considerate, he's intelligent, athletic, etc. Everyone loves him and thinks we're a match made in heaven — everyone except my Dad.

My Dad hates him. If my parents come up to visit, my Dad won't come if my boyfriend is going to be with us. When I go home to visit and my boyfriend calls, he won't put him through. He never wants to talk about us dating and has basically abandoned me altogether since I started dating my boyfriend. My Dad and I can't even speak rationally anymore.

My Mom, my friends and everyone else keep telling me he's the one with the problem and that I should just ignore it. How can I ignore this treatment? It's disrespectful and uncalled for. It hurts my boyfriend tremendously and me even more.

He's missing out on my college years because he doesn't want to hear about my boyfriend. He's making me choose between him and the man I want to marry. You see, we want to get engaged this Christmas, but we want my father's support. What can I do?

Sincerely,
Not Daddy's little girl anymore

Dear Not Daddy's little girl anymore,

Your signature summed it up. You're not "daddy's little girl" anymore, and frankly, your dad can't handle it.

Many dads have a strange way of showing their daughters how they love them. Often times, jealousy of a great boyfriend is the most common response to a daughter growing up.

It seems dumb to us daughters because all those dads out there don't realize that no boyfriend or husband could ever take their place. It's a different kind of love.

Just keep hanging in there. Don't be discouraged if he's not thrilled about your engagement. He'll come around and realize what makes you happy will make him happy, too.

Music duo performs new age-style music with handmade flutes

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Two musicians, known for making their own instruments, created a new age style of Indian music Saturday night at McCain Auditorium.

The program began with a solo by R. Carlos Nakai, a musician and composer who makes his own flutes.

After he completed the first number of the evening, his partner, William Eaton, walked onto the stage, receiving a hearty applause from the audience.

Eaton then fiddled around with his instrument, spending a few minutes trying to get it to work before the duo performed the song, "Beyond the Edge."

Eaton finally discovered what was causing the problem — he didn't plug his instrument into the sound system.

He played it off well by turning the incident into a joke to amuse the audience.

After intermission, he pulled out his sense of humor again, after he did Indian chanting during his solo performance.

"That was a little number I've been working on. It's called 'White Men Can't Chant,'" Eaton said.

Eaton said that he experiments with his music, and sometimes it works well, and at other times, it sounds mediocre.

Nakai also chanted during his performance, but it sounded more authentic because of his Native American origin.

"It's at-the-moment chanting. Sometimes, it's a prayer that fits the concept of the song," Nakai said.

The duo performed improvisations throughout the evening, creating an informal program.

"Musicians seem to think music comes off a page. We're not afraid to try something new we haven't done. The rewards are worth it," Nakai said.

Eaton said he and Nakai communicate in a new way when they're onstage.

"It's like two people talking to each other in a musical language instead of a verbal language.

The two also perform to the audience as if they're not even onstage.

Nakai said they follow the Greek and Roman philosophy to not separate themselves from the audience.

"We try to play like we're in your living room. We try to put people at ease so it doesn't seem too stuffy or formal," Nakai said.

The duo did have an informal stage presence, but at times, it was almost too informal.

The musicians tried to create a living-room atmosphere, but McCain was so large that it didn't quite work during certain times in the show.

Eaton often stumbled over his words, and the two musicians didn't seem to have a structured program.

The music was engrossing and soothing, but it was too relaxing to see in concert, especially for the students in the audience who pulled a string of all-nighters.

The music seemed to cater more to the adult members of the Manhattan community than the student body of K-State.

The audience members, who spilled into the upper balcony, laughed at all of the duo's jokes and remained silent during the actual musical performance.

The audience also brought them out for an encore, surprising the lighting technicians who turned up the lights and quickly turned them down again.

K-State proposes research

Vet Med seeks approval for greyhound research

JULIE KRAMER
Collegian

K-State is seeking approval from the Kansas Legislature to construct a greyhound research facility.

The College of Veterinary Medicine already has the money for the project, Samuel Kruckenberg, director of the animal research facility, said. He said the money would come from excess restricted fees and donations to the college.

Kruckenberg said the Kansas Board of Regents has already approved the project, and it will go before the Legislature this spring. The project will involve renovating the facility used for hip dysplasia of German Shepherds, he said.

He said they need the new facility due to new federal regulations requiring central heating and air conditioning.

About one-third of the money wagered on greyhound races is allocated by the Kansas Racing Commission for greyhound research, he said. K-State is the only school doing research in Kansas at this time.

Schools must apply to the commission for grants to do research.

"They have approved more projects than we have space to hold," he said.

The money from the commission goes toward the costs of keeping the animals and laboratory expenses, Kruckenberg said. "The racing commission will not put money into the building," he said.

K-State has done research on greyhounds for about five years.

Deborah Briggs, associate professor of veterinary medicine, is studying the dogs' immune response to vaccination.

She said greyhound owners and breeders vaccinate their dogs frequently to help prevent illness. She is studying the effect this has on immune modulator interferon, a substance the body makes in response to an antigen.

She said research was also being done on how vitamin E affects immunization.

"The Kansas Racing Commission has been absolutely fantastic to us," she said. "We've found some important information that I think will help the greyhound industry."

Athletes to have permanent study hall

DOUG BASSETT
Collegian

After being moved around campus for many years, the athletic learning center may finally have a stable environment.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics hopes to have a more permanent place for student athletes to have their study hall by the beginning of next year.

"The first of next year is only a goal, though," Max Urick, director of the athletic department, said.

"We are just waiting for the approval from the Kansas Board of Regents to go ahead with the project," Veryl Switzer, associate director of the athletic department, said.

The learning center has been moved around all over campus for the last couple of years, Switzer said.

"For example, we have conducted our study halls in Durland, Leasure, Ahearn and Ackert halls," Switzer said. He said they are currently conducting sessions in the football office complex.

The department would like a place for the athletes to be able to study with computer labs and other facilities that may help students study, he said.

The athletic department doesn't know how much the new learning center is going to cost, Switzer said. They are hoping that it will be located either near or as an addition to the Vanier Football Complex.

The building will be about 9,000 square feet, Urick said.

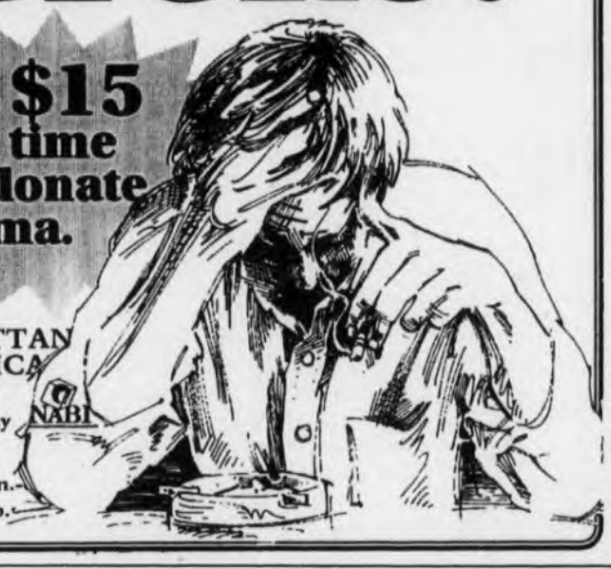
"The center will help us be more centrally located for students and their tutors," he said.

"The funds for the new center will come from private funding," Switzer said.

Funds will not come out of student funds, he said.

The center will continue to be linked with Holton Hall, as it has been in the past, Switzer said.

"There will be all types of programs available to the students, like career planning," he said.



There will also be graduate assistants available at the center to help athletes who are studying.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Work is eye-opening for student

Six students in the class are volunteering at the shelter this semester.

Armstrong said she was surprised by the people who live at the shelter.

"A lot of people who stay there look like they work there," she said. "You could be sitting next to some in class and never know that they were homeless."

Armstrong, who is from the nearby small town of Onaga, said she was surprised that some of the people who stayed in the shelter were from her hometown.

"I was totally blind to it before I worked at the shelter," Armstrong said. "I think it would shock some of the people from my hometown to see these people here."

Armstrong said working at the shelter has opened her eyes to the problem of homelessness, and she said she would like to continue working with the homeless.

"Sometimes, I come home and make myself a sandwich, and I realize that some people don't even have that. They don't even have a house to walk into."

Mike Byers, junior in social work, said the people he worked with were very motivated.

"Ninety-eight percent of the people were giving 100 percent of themselves to get out of there and get back on their own feet," he said.

Byers said he wants to work with juveniles when he gets out of school. He said he was surprised by how well-adjusted the children at the shelter are.

"The kids are able to get along," he said. "Considering their circumstances, they have pretty good spirits. They are not unhappy. They are here with their parents, and they are making the best of it."

Lisa Toburn is not in the class but is also a student volunteering at the shelter. She is working on a degree in pre-medicine, after receiving an undergraduate degree in social work for Fort Hays State University.

She has worked with homeless children before at a crisis center for runaways in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Toburn said it is a little different working with adults than it is with children. She said both need support but talking with adults is different than talking to children.

"You had to listen to the child and let them tell you how they felt," she said. "You have to let them know they are valuable human beings even if their parents don't think so."

Most of the youth that Toburn worked with were between the ages of 10 and 21, lived on the streets and were prostitutes and pimps.

She said sometimes parents would drop their children off at the center because they didn't want them anymore.

How do you explain to a child that their parents don't want them anymore?

"You meet their basic needs of food, clothing and shelter," she said.

"You just be there with them and try to comfort them. It is hard to explain."

Toburn said people often take for granted the fact they have good relations with their families.

She said sometimes it is hard to give so much of yourself to a job.

"It is stressful. It is sad to know people live like this," she said.

Workshop helps teachers, social workers deal with culture biases

The workshop was aimed at teachers, social workers or any community member who might work with children.

"I believe this will help show people who work with children how to defeat biases that can be formed at an early age because once an attitude is formed, it is hard to change it," Knupfer said.

She said those who came to the conference were a real mix from many cultural backgrounds.

"There were undergraduates, graduates and faculty from as far away as Wichita," she said.

Price said no matter what culture they're from, people are basically good, Knupfer said.

Price suggested people should show empathy for different points of view.

Knupfer said the material presented at the workshop could be applied to all ages.

Knupfer said Price brought a video tape that showed how families with foreign-born adopted children dealt with bias.

"Karen Price brought hundreds of books and games that involved learning about cultures and how to relay information to children," she said.

Price has European-American heritage but was raised in Asia.

"When she began the workshop by saying she thinks like a Korean woman, it was a real eye opener for the audience," Knupfer said.

popcorn garland."

K-State organizations participated by singing Christmas carols in the pavilion.

"We thought it was a good opportunity to come sing songs," Michelle Haskins, junior in accounting and member of United Black Voices, said.

Julie Buzby, second-year student in veterinary medicine, said it was also a good opportunity for her group, Christian Veterinary Fellowship.

"Christmas is a big thing for us, because Christmas is a time to celebrate the birth of Jesus, and as Christians, we like to celebrate that in any way," Buzby said.

"We're also a veterinary fellowship. We love anything that has to do with animals," she said. "It's great to combine these two things in one community project, and the zoo has a great relationship with the vet school."

College students are notoriously known for having little cash, and the holidays seem to make that fact more obvious.

In order to remain in the holiday spirit of gift giving without having to spend a lot of dough, many students are turning to making presents instead of buying them.

"When I had money, I would buy for about 10 people," Carey Fauss, freshman in business administration, said.

"Now, I can only afford to shop for my mom, dad and sister."

Making gifts instead of buying them helps ease the frustration of not having much money.

"It is frustrating when I see something that I want to buy for someone, but then I realize that instead of buying something for $50, I can make it for $10," Fauss said.

Money isn't the only reason students turn toward hand-crafted gifts.

"With homemade gifts, you can personalize it," Mathea Waldman, senior in nutrition and exercise science, said.

"It's always nice to receive gifts that you know someone made just for you."

Making gifts comes naturally to some, but a lot of students get started because of a family member.

Waldman said she has been making crafts since eighth grade and said she got her desire to make crafts from her grandmother.

"My grandmother believes that you can make anything cheaper than you can buy it," she said.

The beginning crafter may be intimidated, but Dennis Marten, manager and owner of Ben Franklin Crafts, said not to be afraid to start.

"You must be patient with yourself, and don't look for perfection," he said. "The first project may not be exactly to your standards."

Waldman also said not to be afraid to ask for help.

"You can go to the crafts department of Wal-Mart and ask for help," she said.

"Most of the people that work there like crafts, and they try really hard to help you."

For those beginners who are still uneasy, you can take classes to help get you started.

During the month of December, Ben Franklin Crafts offers several one-session classes, Marten said.

The classes teach you how to make a variety of items, and the cost runs anywhere from $3 to $9.50, plus the cost of supplies, he said.

No matter how you get started making gifts, the gifts will mean a lot to the person who receives them, Marten said.

"We have a motto at Ben Franklin Crafts: 'Give the gift money can't buy, handcrafted with love.'"

KRISTA COZAD

It's that time of year again when shoppers flood shops and stores that present the newest and hottest items for the Christmas season.

In Manhattan, many stores have already sold out of the items that they ordered especially for Christmas.

Ballard's Sporting Goods, in Aggieville, purchased 40 K-State Starter Jackets and sold out of them within one week.

A Ballard's employee said they wouldn't be getting anymore of the jackets in but said they had something they hoped would take many shoppers' minds off the now-gone jackets — K-State Aloha Bowl attire.

"The commemorative K-State bowl wear sold excellent last year, so I'm guessing people will be giving them again this year," Todd Gurse, manager of Ballard's, said.

One of the hottest selling items at Dillard's, in the Manhattan Town Center, is the Preston and York wallet-on-a-string, which is a wallet mounted on a shoulder strap.

Microwaveable stadium cushions are another "hot" item. They stay warm for up to eight hours.

In clothing, anything that is made of flannel is practically blowing off the shelves, one Dillard's employee said, and the new polar-tech jackets are going fast.

Turtlenecks, denim shirts and bright-colored jogging suits round out the items at the head of most Dillard's shoppers' lists.

At the Pathfinder, in Aggieville, the hottest items are mainly small stocking-stuffers, such as socks.

"Pretty much anything that's below $15, especially if it's practical or cute," Dave Colburn, manager of Pathfinder, said.

"Flannel shirts are big this year, that's for sure. And funky hats, with weird shapes or big, long tails or ear flaps. Like the flannel wool hats like the guys in 'Grumpy Old Men' wore. I think we're almost sold out of them."

The Palace, in Aggieville, has been selling many smaller items as well, such as calendars, candy and tins, and Christmas ornaments.

The Heritage Village, a collection of miniature houses and scenery, is also going fast, Jenny Taffet, Palace employee, said.

Streetside Records is selling a lot of Christmas music by popular singers such as Kenny G and the Benedictine Monks of Santo Domingo de Silos. Box sets of compact discs, such as Pink Floyd's "Shine On" are also doing well.

"Reggae Christmas albums are doing pretty good, too. That little genre seems to be selling I think because people want to have these wild and strange Christmas parties," Sarah Cunnick, assistant manager of Streetside Records, said.

Michael Darling, manager of Krystallos, said he's selling many of the usual traditional Christmas items, such as earrings, crystal pendants, candles, wool socks and gloves and sweaters.

Candles are also doing well at On the Wildside. Incense and beads for people to make their own jewelry are also hard to keep in supply, owner Gary Bedenharn said.

This season, give the gift of meat and cheese.

The department of animal sciences and industry is offering gift cheese and meat boxes.

"They're an inexpensive gift for people that are hard to buy for," John Wolf, manager of the meats lab, said.

Renee Westgate, manager of the dairy bar, said the gift boxes can be all meat, all cheese or an assortment of both.

Orders are being taken through Dec. 6 for the assortments, which are priced from $14 to $16, Westgate said.

The $14 to $16 boxes are either all cheese or meat and cheese combinations, he said.

"There's one that's all meat, and it's $17," Westgate said.

The boxes can be custom assembled with such cheeses as New York cheddar, Colby, Monterey Jack and smoked cheddar. Among the numerous meat selections are summer sausages, smoked ham, bacon and pork center loin chops.

"All products are made by K-State," Wolf said.

Wolf said they sold about 1,500 gift boxes last year.

"We've got a lot of good comments back about them," he said.

Wolf said all the money goes back into the department for teaching labs and funding.

"It also helps pay for new equipment," Westgate said.

The department will mail gift boxes for an additional charge.

Popping the big question

Holidays are a time for couples to get engaged

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

The holidays are a time for families to get together, exchange gifts, eat lots of food, relax and get married.

According to Modern Bride magazine, 2.3 million people get engaged each year, and many men use the holidays as the special time to ask.

"It's traditional for men to propose around the end of November and all through December. That's when we have a big increase in diamond sales," Mary Ann Kempke, manager at Zales Jewelers, said. "We review the plans every year, and they find that the whole diamond area sales increase."

Kempke said many people come in during this time, and if they're not proposing for Christmas, then they're proposing on New Year's Eve.

Charles Firestone, senior in economics, proposed to his girlfriend, who lives in Chicago, the Friday after Thanksgiving this year.

"I haven't been home since summer," Firestone said.

"It seemed the appropriate time to do it when all of our families could be together."

Firestone said he sent her on a three-hour scavenger hunt.

"I sent her around to places where we used to go," Firestone said. "The last place I had her go was a bar where we use to hang out a lot. All of our families were there eating and waiting on her to get there."

At the first stop, Firestone said there was a teddy bear with a pacifier in its mouth. He said the engagement ring was on the end of the pacifier, so she had carried it with her the whole time.

Firestone said some of the stops were at his best friend's house, her best friend's house, his parents, a football stadium and the bar.

"I thought the football stadium was an important one because that was where we met, "Firestone said. "I was playing football, and she was the cheerleader for the opposing team."

Firestone said he spent about a month planning it all out, but he had help from her mother.

"It took a lot of planning because it had to be timed out so everyone had a chance to get to the bar," Firestone said. "It had to be timed out so everyone could be there waiting for her."

Getting engaged during the holidays allows for a great gift idea in an engagement ring.

"There was a gentleman in here looking for an idea to get an engagement ring for his girlfriend," Kempke said.

"He asked for an empty box to give her. He said he was going to present it to her and say 'Let's fill this box together.'"

Kempke said there is a balance between men who pick out the engagement ring and those couples who pick out the ring together.

The holidays are also a popular time for weddings.

Troy Williams, senior in feed science management, and Karen Williams, graduate in journalism and mass communications, had their wedding on New Year's Eve.

"First of all, I wanted a winter wedding, and second of all, it was the only time my whole family could be together," Karen said.

"I was hoping Troy would be able to remember our anniversary that way, too."

Karen said it was difficult trying to get everything ready during the holidays.

"It was just crazy. We had all these Christmases to go to and people to visit," she said.

"We were trying to pick up things for the wedding, and all the places were closed."

Since the wedding did take place during the holiday break, Karen said a lot of her student friends were able to attend.

"Almost all of my college friends were there, and there were a bunch from Troy's house," Karen said. "It was funny, though, because our friends kept teasing us that they weren't going to come back. They had all went to the Copper Bowl."

Students said the holidays were a great opportunity to involve family and friends with their engagement or wedding.

"I'm only doing it once," Firestone said. "I wanted to do something for her to remember."

▶ DATING

What to buy when you just started dating

JULIE KRAMER
Collegian

You've just met that special someone, and you have no clue what to get them for Christmas.

Lesley Folkerts, freshman in general biology, and Neal Trantham, freshman in elementary education, have been dating for three months.

They both have their gifts for each other, and they both said they spent a long time deciding what to give.

"I wanted to get her something that was more than just a sweater — something that will remind her of me," Trantham said.

He bought Folkerts a silver locket with two photo facings and a roll of film.

In deciding what to get, Trantham said he asked a few girls he knows for suggestions.

"They didn't think clothes would be a good idea," he said.

Folkerts said she bought Trantham a dress shirt.

"It's something he'll be able to wear to class," she said.

She said she began thinking about what to get him in the beginning of November.

"I had three or four ideas when I went to the mall, and I took a friend who knows him pretty well," she said.

Folkerts said she asked friends and her mom for advice on what to give him.

"My mom thought I should buy him a wallet or a tie," she said.

Jan Miller, owner of Steve's Floral, suggested gifts such as candles and candle holders, botanical body-care items, Crabtree and Evelyn fragrance items and Christmas ornaments.

If men are taking their dates out to celebrate, Miller suggests a corsage with mistletoe in it. A bundle of loose flowers or a single rose are also options, she said.

Amy Jaax, a clerk at The Palace, suggested stuffed animals, cards, clothing and K-State items as gift ideas.

"K-State ball caps are great gifts for men," she said.

Amy Bruty, junior in biology, said the problem with selecting a gift is not knowing what your significant other likes. She purchased her boyfriend a K-State sweatshirt.

Jewelry is always an option, James Wilroy, junior in political science, said. He said he doesn't have a girlfriend, but is giving a female friend a bracelet.

Scott Reynolds, senior in public relations, said he wasn't planning on buying anything for his girlfriend, who lives in Boston.

"She recently told me that my present was on the way," he said. "I have to get her something, or I'll feel like an ass."

However, sometimes it may be better not to exchange gifts at all.

Vickie Choitz, senior in political science, has been dating her boyfriend for three years.

"Ted and I didn't get each other anything for Christmas the first year," she said.

"We didn't feel we knew each other well enough."

Residents share decor on McCain Home tour

Christmas music filled the air as a continuous stream of people walked through the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority house Saturday, enjoying the yuletide decorations with cookies and cider.

The sorority served as the hospitality stop on the McCain Home Tour.

The McCain Home Tour, sponsored by the Board of Directors of Friends of McCain, offered a holiday tour of six stops in the Manhattan area.

Four houses, an office and a sorority opened their doors to share their Christmas spirit and decorations Saturday.

The unseasonably warm weather did not break the holiday mood.

"It went beautifully. The weather cooperated, and it was wonderful," Joan Shull, co-chairman of the McCain Tour Committee, said.

The homes were opened from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and could be viewed in any order during those times, Dave Frain, special assistant at McCain Auditorium, said.

Shull said the proceeds from the tour go to the Performing Artist Series at McCain. This helps to pay for the artists and events brought to McCain.

Shull said homes are selected by members of Friends of McCain.

They hear about the houses by word of mouth and are asked to join the tour after they have seen what each house has to offer.

She said this is the first time an office has come forward and asked to be on the tour.

The law office of Robert Littrell offered its unique history.

The building was built in 1911 as the Woman's Club Building. Littrell purchased and renovated it in 1987.

The Kappas offered holiday decorations from Campbell's as well as serving as the hospitality stop.

The Carlson home featured a life-size Father Christmas with two children, designed and created by Sherry Carlson.

Several other handmade creations were displayed throughout the house.

Two electric trains as well as a Dickens village served as part of the holiday decorations at the Hinkin home.

The Roberts home displayed handcrafted collectibles gathered during a 45-year period.

A collection of Santa Claus plates was a special attraction at the Thiessen home. Tones of gold were used to accent the many different holiday decorations.

The tour is only given every other year due to all the work that goes into sponsoring it, Shull said.

"We use over 100 volunteers. They each work a two-and-a-half or three-hour shift," Shull said.

She said the volunteers come from the McCain Student Board, local PEO chapters and board members.

▶ DECORATING

Decorations not just for home

DOUG BASSETT

Green wreaths, red ribbons and frosted windows are going up all around Manhattan.

These decorations are not limited to Manhattan families. Many students are getting into the holiday spirit by decorating their homes, residence halls and apartments.

Jennifer Dowling, a graduate student in human development and family studies and West Hall resident, decorated her door by wrapping it in gift-wrapping paper and placing a bow around it, so it looked like a giant present.

"I bought most of the stuff at Wal-Mart," Dowling said. "It took me two layers of wrapping paper to do it because my door is so thick," she said.

Dowling said it was easy and cheap to decorate for the holidays, and it makes the room look a little nicer.

A popular idea for students is to bring old decorations from home to make decorating cheaper.

"My roommate decorated our apartment, and I think she got most of the stuff from home," Lisa Lorensen, junior in human development and family studies, said. "We try and decorate every year. It just makes for a brighter holiday."

Decorating for the holidays doesn't have to take much of a student's time.

"It only took us about 45 minutes to an hour to decorate one night," Melissa Watson, freshman in physchology and West Hall resident, said. "We just got bored and decided to do it. We got most everything we have from Wal-Mart. It's pretty cheap."

A big step for a student who wants to decorate for the holidays is buying a Christmas tree.

Christmas different for non-Christians

STEFFANY CARREL

The Christmas season is upon us. If you're of the Christian religion, this is the time to sing carols, sit on Santa's lap, distribute large amounts of eggnog and gifts, and of course, celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ.

As a non-Christian, however, Christmas isn't quite the same affair.

"I think a lot of non-Christians have been exposed previously to what the tradition of Christmas is," Motaz Hourani, assistant director of the foreign student office, said. "So most of them are familiar with it, I'm sure."

And while non-Christian students don't necessarily become directly involved with the holiday, Hourani said he doesn't think Christmas is offensive to those students.

"I don't see why anyone would be offended by it," he said. "For me, it is an occasion to share in my friends' enjoyment of their traditions."

Guilan Chen, graduate student in biology, said that although she is not a Christian, she enjoys the holiday season very much.

"I bought several Christmas lights over Thanksgiving, and I decorated my windows," Chen said. "They look so warm."

Chen came to the United States from mainland China in 1993 and said that while the Chinese don't celebrate Christmas as Americans do, they do participate in some of the aspects of this holiday.

"In China, a lot of people send Christmas cards to send good wishes," Chen said. "It's kind of in fashion to send cards, actually."

Naief Mohammed, junior in architecture from Kuwait, said he had never heard of Christmas before coming to the United States.

"To tell you the truth, I don't feel anything about Christmas," Mohammed said. "But I don't get bothered by the tradition of it."

Non-Christians enjoy traditions international programs and professor of political science, said he believes being in another country and sharing that culture's traditions can be rewarding.

"I am reminded of years past when my family and I have been in a predominantly non-Christian country and have shared in their traditions. I've really enjoyed being a part of that experience," Richter said. "I would guess that most of the international students here at K-State look at some of our culture in the same way."

However, Richter said that he could see how some people might become offended or annoyed with a certain aspect of a culture if they felt it was being forced upon them, thus making them feel different.

"But I think for the most part that our campus and community don't do that," Richter said. "We have a sense of openness to all cultures and a sense of sharing to all."

The fact that Christianity is not the only religion in the United States is something people are more sensitive to today, Richter said.

"And I think that in the future, we will continue to become more aware of the various religions we encounter in our own country," he said.

Itai Margalit, junior in marketing, said that he is Jewish and has no problem at all with the Christmas season.

"I am quite happy to allow people to celebrate their traditions on the holidays," Margalit said. "It gives a certain uniqueness to everything as well."

Margalit said he doesn't actively participate in any of the traditions of Christmas.

"But actually, I have two roommates who are both Christian, and they don't do anything, either."

"My roommate showed up with one at our house," Jeremy Blair, junior in business administration, said. "It looks great. It makes me feel like I'm back at home."

Many places, including grocery stores and Wal-Mart, sell trees. Buyers can expect to pay anywhere from $20 to $60.

The holiday spirit doesn't always catch everybody. Barry Brant, junior in agricultural business, said he doesn't decorate while he is in Manhattan.

"I don't have time, and when I go home after finals, I don't want to take more time to clean up my decorations," Brant said.

Brant's roommate, Ryan Fitzmorris, sophomore in education, said he agrees.

"It's not that we are not in the holiday spirit. But we don't need to have pine needles all over our house," Fitzmorris said.

What a waste.

What happened to dollar movies?

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

A group of students walk into the Campus Theatre and read the sign that reads $4.50 for adults.

"$4.50? Man, I got a paper I have to do," one of the students said as the group walks out of the theater Sunday night.

New releases are now being shown at the Campus Theatre this week, but not for the normal price of $1.50.

Since the two movies that are featured are first-run movies, the theater has to charge a higher price for the tickets.

Joe McTamney, projectionist for the Campus Theatre, said that the ticket sales for each movie have dropped from 200 to 100 in the past few weeks.

"A lot of people have walked away because of the higher prices," McTamney said.

Stephanie Peterson, manager of the Campus Theatre, said the $4.50 movies attract a different crowd.

"The $4.50 movies draw the people who have money to spend, and the $1.50 movies are attended mostly by college students," Peterson said.

The theater is required to charge the regular price because the movies, "The Swan Princess," and "Pulp Fiction" are still shown in theaters nationwide.

The Campus Theatre has been the only theater in Manhattan that has been showing "The Swan Princess," so for the first week that the movie ran, the billboard outside the theater read, "$4.50 this week only."

Peterson said the Campus Theatre obtained "The Swan Princess" because the screens at the other theaters were taken by other movies.

The next week, "Pulp Fiction," was carried over from the Westloop 6 Theatres to balance out the ticket sales from the "The Swan Princess," which was not doing well enough on its own.

The two movies are scheduled to run for another week, but after that, there are no definite plans.

"We're taking it one week at a time," Peterson said.

Peterson said the theater is charging $4.50 for adults and $3.50 for children because it is the lowest price that the film distributors will allow the theater to charge.

McTamney said the reason for the 50-cent discount compared to the other Manhattan movie theaters is to ease the price increase for the moviegoers.

"We're trying to be a little more fair considering the original price is $1.50," McTamney said.

McTamney said all four theaters in Manhattan are run by the same company named First International, which is based out of Kansas City.

McTamney said the district office calls each theater every week and tells them which movies to run.

"We really have no control over what movies we show. It's all done in the film booking office," McTamney said.

McTamney said the Campus Theatre is considered an experimental theater by First International.

"We've had all first-run movies in the past, and it may happen again in the future. There's a 50/50 chance," McTamney said.

Peterson said the theater was turned into a $1.50 movie theater five years ago, but there is a possibility that it may not remain that way.

"The crowd for Pulp Fiction has been a lot better than I expected, but I hope that running first-run movies is just a temporary thing," Peterson said.

Jobs more attainable for grads

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Attention, college seniors: You have the best shot in years at landing a job right out of school.

Hiring is projected to go to 5.9 percent in comparison to last year, according to a survey released today by the Collegiate Employment Research Institute at Michigan State University.

"New graduates should get better replies from employers than they have been receiving for the last three or four years," Patrick Scheetz, the institute's director, said.

New college grads can expect to take home annual paychecks ranging from $20,821 for telecommunications jobs to $40,689 for chemical engineers, according to the survey of 545 businesses, industries and government agencies.

Pay was higher in all parts of the country and in all occupations — ranging from a 1.3-percent hike to $23,856 for hotel restaurant managers, to a jump of 2.6 percent to $35,302 for electrical engineers.

Hiring of new graduates had declined more than 30 percent in the four years prior to last year's uptick of 1.1 percent, Scheetz said.

Bows, basses and baritones to debut in McCain

The K-State Orchestra will present its second performance of the semester at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

David Littrell, associate professor of music and conductor of the orchestra, said the performance is free and open for all to attend.

"We will be doing three pieces tonight," Littrell said. "We've been practicing since early October."

The first piece was composed by Hindemith and is titled "Overture to Mathis der Maler."

"In this piece, there are seven offstage trumpet players in the balcony," Littrell said. "They are depicting the ghosts of Roman soldiers marching along the Appian Way."

Glenn Lavezzi, senior in music and double bass player, said that because of this piece, Hindemith was banned from his homeland of Germany when the Nazis were in power.

"But the piece is very choral, and it's got a lot of full harmony," Lavezzi said. "It sounds like a choir, but it's an orchestra."

The second piece the orchestra will perform, composed by Mendelssohn, is "Symphony #4."

"The Mendelssohn is very quick, fast-paced," Lavezzi said. "Everybody who hears it will recognize it. It's a very popular piece."

Lastly, the orchestra will perform "The Pines of Rome," composed by Respighi.

"The material is definitely difficult," Lavezzi said. "Even professional orchestras have problems with it."

However, Lavezzi said he appreciates the position the orchestra's conductor is in.

"Littrell is in between a rock and a hard place," Lavezzi said. "We can't play high-school level music, yet playing at a professional level is difficult. But it is nice to have someone who thinks high enough of us to let us play these difficult pieces."

Littrell said this year's orchestra has 85 people in it.

"This orchestra is one of the largest orchestras K-State has ever had, if not the largest. And they're very good."

Can of food good for 1 free movie pass

For the next three Saturdays, lima beans, spinach and chicken soup will get you a ticket to the movies.

In the fourth-annual Aggieville Business Association's Christmas extravaganza, Campus Theatre will accept canned goods for the 10:30 a.m. showings.

Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville Business Association, said the canned-food drive for the Flint Hill's Breadbasket provides something for Manhattan's children.

"They're getting something in return for giving," Sieben said. "They get to go to the movies free, but they're helping someone else out."

Many of the young moviegoers knew that the cans went to feed the hungry. Canned-food drives at school taught the students that some people don't have money for food.

"I think it's pretty cool," 10-year-old Helen Dorfmeier said. "It's nice that everyone gives a can to help the Breadbasket. Every year at school, we see which class can get the highest number of cans."

After each movie, the cans are displayed at Copy Co., Sieben said. Last year, more than 1,000 pounds of canned goods were collected for the Breadbasket.

About 250 people turned out on Saturday to see Andre, the first of four Saturday showings in the canned-food drive. Although the movies are geared for children's tastes, being less than 4

Retirees to receive money

Tax money illegally collected to be given back

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

Kansas military retirees will soon be getting back millions of dollars in illegally collected taxes from the state, Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said.

The exact amount is still in question pending information that the Kansas Department of Revenue is collecting, but it will be more than $2 million, Lee Roberts, Kansas tax examiner, said.

The first checks will be in the mail Dec. 20, Oleen said. They will be one-third of the individual's total refund. The second installment will come in July 1995, and the third in July '96.

The decision to give the refund was passed this year by the Kansas Legislature after a Kansas Supreme Court mandate declared taxes on military retirement funds to be illegal, Roberts said.

"It was an illegal tax because it was not exactly money taken out of their wages," he said.

The tax required former military personnel who were Kansas citizens to pay a state tax on their retirement pay.

In contrast, civilian employees of the federal and state governments, as well as members of the Legislature, did not have to pay such taxes on their retirement pay.

An earlier example of such a conflict was the 1988 case of Davis v. Michigan.

The court decided that the state of Michigan could not exempt state employees from paying taxes while at the same time taxing federal employees.

The Kansas Supreme Court soon followed suit when the same situation arose in Kansas. This provided impetus for the state legislature to refund the retirees.

"I think it was about the only appropriate thing for the state to do," A.J. Sajo, retired Army colonel, said.

Sajo, instructor of management, said he appeared before a committee to ask for equal taxation for all federal employees.

"It would have lowered everyone's taxes if they had taxed everybody equally," he said.

Man given life sentence for sabotaging dam

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIRKSVILLE, Mo. (AP) — The mayor of a town damaged by a levee break during last year's floods said the man who sabotaged the dam deserves the life sentence he got Monday.

"I think it's necessary for society at large to be protected from somebody like this," Chuck Scholz, mayor of Quincy, Ill., said. "He's obviously someone who can't control this deranged behavior."

James R. Scott, 24, of Fowler, Ill., received the maximum sentence for his November conviction on a state charge of causing a catastrophe by removing sandbags from a levee on the Mississippi River.

The river flooded 14,000 acres of farmland and destroyed buildings in Quincy and in West Quincy, Mo.

Judge Bruce Normile in Adair County Circuit Court ruled the life-prison term is to run consecutively to a 10-year sentence Scott is serving for burglary of a vehicle.

During the hearing Monday, Scott told the judge, "Your honor, I did not commit that crime," regarding the levee damage.

Outside the courtroom, Scott said "lies came before truth" in his trial.

"If I would have testified ... the jury would have come back with a different verdict," he said.

A farmer who lost 1,300 of his 1,400 acres of crops to the levee break said justice was done by the lengthy sentence.

"One of my friends who lost his home and his wife's beauty shop said he felt like justice was done, but it still doesn't take care of the loss of property and heartache," Norman Haerr said. "He's right.

"We're all going on — heartaches are part of life. I feel sorry for Mr. Scott, too, and hopefully when he's due for parole he will have matured and realize you can't do that to other people's property."

Defense attorney Jeff Estes said his client plans to appeal.

In an audiotaped confession to police, Scott admitted pulling several sandbags from the levee near West Quincy shortly before it broke on July 16, 1993. With the Mississippi already several feet above flood stage, the breach allowed the river to inundate the surrounding area.

Water ripped through a business strip, destroying scores of buildings and homes and exploding service station gas tanks. It also closed for 71

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ NIGHTCLUB OWNER MAY BE HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR STAMPEDE DEATHS

ELIZABETH, N.J. (AP) — Locked or obscured exits at a nightclub where four youths were killed in a panicky stampede may lead to criminal charges against the club's owner, officials said.

Manslaughter charges are being considered against Fernando Bravo, owner of the El Balcon club, said Michael Lapollo, a Union County prosecutor. Reports of overcrowding and of alcohol being served to minors were also being investigated.

Three young men and a 13-year-old girl were crushed to death in the stampede early Saturday morning after a fight on the dance floor escalated into a chair-and-bottle-throwing melee.

At least 21 others were treated at hospitals — most for bruises and sprains, some for psychological trauma.

Telephone calls Sunday to El Balcon club in Elizabeth, N.J., went unanswered.

▶ TELEVISION DEVICE LIMITS TIME CHILDREN CAN SPEND IN FRONT OF TUBE

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Bill Stewart and his friends had the same problem: Their beloved offspring were turning into teen-age couch potatoes.

So they put their heads together and, after some false starts, came up with a solution — a new gizmo called Time Slot.

Parents can use the device to dole out a limited number of hours for watching television and playing video games. Each family member is issued an individual card, which is passed through a slot to "buy" tube time.

"It had to be simple, so we hinged it to the credit card," said Stewart, marketing director for Synaptic Designs of Raleigh, which he co-founded with boyhood friends Wayne Poole and Steve Smith.

Thousands of consumers have paid $149.95 each for the device. What it does more than anything is establish the value of time spent in front of the set, Stewart says.

"The thing I noticed right off was how my kids became misers with their TV time," Stewart said. "They no longer kept the set on as background noise while they were doing something else. And they started watching shows that meant something to them, not just a bunch of reruns."

In addition to monitoring how long the television is used, the device can be programmed to block out particular viewing times, such as late-night hours.

"We created a nation of children addicted to TV. This is a way to realize it's time to wean off of it," Stewart said.

The product, sold in department stores, specialty shops and toy stores, has won fans in thousands of parents — if not their children. One customer wrote back, "I love it. The kids hate it."

▶ MEXICAN LEADER WARNS THAT CONTINUED CORRUPTION MAY SINK PRI

MEXICO CITY — Mexico's ruling party has used patronage, intimidation and fraud to stay in power for 65 years. If it doesn't change, its new national chairwoman warned, it may crumble and fade into history.

Maria de los Angeles Moreno vowed radical reforms as she was appointed chairwoman of the Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI. She was previously the party's secretary-general.

The PRI has been long beset by scandals — the latest involving Ms. Moreno. A prosecutor has accused her and other party officials of impeding the investigation into the assassination of his brother, Ms. Moreno's predecessor as secretary-general.

With 14 million members, PRI remains Mexico's biggest party. It just saw its hold on the presidency continue with the inauguration Thursday of Ernesto Zedillo. But the party has been losing strength among voters in the past decade.

"Either the party changes, responding to the aspirations of its members for renewal ... or it becomes paralyzed by its own weight, in danger of becoming obsolete," she told the party national executive committee on Saturday.

She did not say what changes she plans.

Ms. Moreno, a senator from Mexico City, replaced Ignacio Pichardo Pagaza, whom Zedillo named as secretary of Mines and State Industries, a department now reduced to almost nothing by free market reforms and slated to disappear.

Both Pichardo and Ms. Moreno were accused by Deputy Attorney General Mario Ruiz Massieu of not cooperating with his investigation into the Sept. 28 killing of his brother, party Secretary-General Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu. Mario Ruiz Massieu resigned in protest.

Pichardo and Ms. Moreno have denied the accusations.

Fifteen people have been charged in connection with the killing of Ruiz Massieu. The killing, six months after the murder of PRI's original presidential candidate, Luis Donaldo Colosio, renewed speculation about a campaign against reformers within the party.

In an effort to clean up the scandals, Zedillo has named Antonio Lozano Garcia, a lawyer and seasoned congressman from the conservative National Action Party, as attorney general, the first opposition figure ever to serve in a PRI administration.

Although he is the titular head of PRI, Zedillo did not attend the meeting Saturday, in line with his inaugural address pledge to reduce his administration's ties with the party.

Christopher Childs, Greenpeace representative, speaks to a small crowd about the accomplishments of the group since its start Monday night in the Union Forum Hall.

Group spokesman: 'Believe in miracles'

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

An environmental speaker challenged his audience to leave with something that belonged to them at 8 Monday night in Union Forum Hall.

Christopher Childs, national spokesman for Greenpeace, spoke to a group of 120 students and faculty members.

"Whatever I say here tonight, whatever stories I tell you, the only story here tonight that counts is yours," Childs said.

"The story you are writing, because you're living it."

Greenpeace was founded by a group of citizens concerned about nuclear testing at Amchitka, Alaska. Although their mission to sail to the island and stop the testing never landed at Amchitka, the boat received international recognition in Canada and the United States, Childs said.

"You cannot be an activist without willingness to take risks," Childs said. "There are a lot of people out there taking risks for you and me."

He said the environmental movement doesn't need more shallow activism.

"We desperately need greater and deeper, more risk worthy activism," Childs said.

He used a story about a man who was told by his boss to bury toxic waste at a site chosen by his boss. Years later, the man blew the whistle on his boss. Not long afterward, the man died. No investigation ever took place in connection with the event, Childs said.

"Individuals have to decide what risks they are willing to take," he said.

The decision to take risks is a personal one, and Childs said he believed the man thought his risk was worth it.

"We have to have a lot more people willing to be on the cutting edge," Childs said.

"You want to be out front, there's plenty of room. Always has been. Always will be."

In the environmental movement, there is not a lot of middle ground, he said.

The issue that really brought Greenpeace into the spotlight was their Save the Whales campaign.

Greenpeace put some people into inflatable boats between Russian whaling harpoons and the whales, Childs said.

In one group, the cameraman's battery was dead, but he decided to go in the inflatable boat anyway. When the Russians began to fire harpoons, the battery worked long enough to get two-to-three minutes of footage, he said.

"If you want to be an activist, believe in miracles," Childs said.

Other projects Greenpeace has been involved in include an agreement banning the mining, drilling and exploration of mineral deposits in Antarctica for 50 years.

Like any other international agreement, it must be ratified and enforced. Childs said the agreement has the potential to save the continent.

"I like to think if we can save one continent, we can save them all," he said.

Childs said the issues are not confined to political boundaries. He said he is less cynical than his colleagues about the new Republican-dominated legislature.

Childs didn't leave the Republican party until Nixon left the White House.

"I happen to know that there are still good and decent people in the Republican party and even a few of them in office," Childs said.

Although the future of the environmental movement is unsure, Childs said he thought good things could come out of the Republican legislatures.

He said it is possible for good people to be wrong on the issues and be right on the outcomes.

"If you want to be an activist, you can start just by being one of the people who has a commitment to integrity and by being one of the people who looks for why they're here," Childs said.

"It's not always easy to be an activist," he said. "There's more joy in taking risks."

Aaron Wichman, senior in philosophy and German, said he wished we had earth years instead of earth days. The immediate urgencies of life can blot out the responsibilities to the environment, he said.

"I'm also impressed with the depth and breadth of his knowledge and his ability to present it clearly and in a nonconfrontational manner," Wichman said.

Chris Cokinos, instructor of English, said he thinks politics in our country has become so involved in special interests that it is very important to see connections between the environment and other issues.

"I think the various issues he addressed are all very important, but people have to see environmental issues connected to other contexts," he said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

A challenge to raise food for the hungry

A challenge has been served to all areas of campus to raise food for the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

The holiday season always brings visions of candy and warm, softly lit rooms. Fat men in red suits make us grin in malls. We feel good.

Unless we're hungry.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket is taking donations of canned goods again this year. Everyone ages 9 to 90 is helping out.

So should you.

Students and faculty in the College of Education have challenged each other and are expected to raise around 2,000 pounds of food.

As the semester winds down, we challenge you to raise more food this year than ever.

Colleges could challenge each other.

Administrators could donate their collective weight in food.

Parking services could donate all meter proceeds from a two-hour time-slot in the morning.

You shouldn't be left out, either.

Reach in the cupboard and find that can of peas you told yourself you would eat last year.

Walk to class and save the money from the parking meter to go towards a can of chili.

If you'd like to see "Lassie," a can of food will get you in the Campus Theatre next Saturday.

Donating food can entertain you, it can fill you with pride or it can make you feel warm through the winter.

The truth about GATT

▶ GUEST

JEREMY BLAIR

This is for everyone who believes that GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) will condemn the United States and all of our economic power to that of a mere part of an assembled whole.

Get real! We are the most powerful nation on the planet. We will never change, and no organization on earth can dictate how we handle our economic affairs.

We are the best, the economic Grand Poobahs. We didn't get where we are today by cowering to lesser authority. We got here with blood, sweat, tears and free trade. We are the leaders, and everyone else is just trying to keep up.

For years, foreign companies have imposed huge tariffs on our products so we couldn't compete with them on price in their own country.

With GATT, those tariffs will be cut by nearly a half, the tables would be turned, and they won't be able to compete with us. American entrepreneurship will hit the world like a ton of bricks. Our economic lead will strengthen to the point that no one will be able to keep up. Instead, they will have to climb aboard.

The reason is that a free-market setting affords the opportunity for a "best man wins" situation, and we will be the "best man."

We will flood the global market with lower cost, higher-quality products like automobiles, agricultural goods and computers. We'll have the upper hand in every market because we'll be the best in terms of price and quality, which are the factors that matter in a free-trade market.

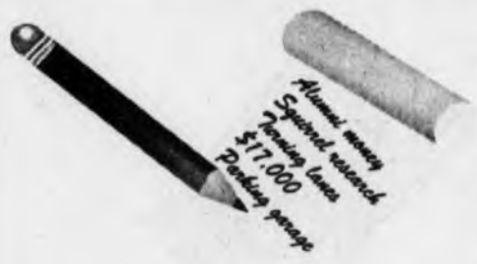
Once we are put in a free-world market, other countries will have to kiss up to us more than I kiss up to my accounting teacher. They'll have to, because we'll have a strong hold on what they need — their economy.

Also if we don't cooperate, they can't go crying to their own government and have a tariff put on our goods to keep us out. Instead, they'll have to take measures to keep us happy with them so we will give them the benefit of the doubt and not crush them They won't go crying to the World Trade Organization because they will be on our side.

You see, there is no amount of restrictions or regulations that the WTO can suppress us with so as to stop us from controlling everything in a free market. The laws of free trade will empower the entity in that position because it holds all the cards. GATT couldn't function without us. Smaller countries could participate or not. It wouldn't matter to us or GATT.

But if we pulled out, the show would be over. The WTO will cooperate with us rather than suppress us. They'll have to, because without GATT, there is no WTO, and without the United States, there is no GATT.

Now, here's a good reason why we as college students should love GATT. Opportunity. Are you a little concerned about finding a job when you graduate? With GATT, you'll be able to send out about a billion more résumés.



When we go overseas and kick some economic butt, our resources must increase, and the first to rise will be the labor force. With all the new output, there will have to be more people putting it out. That means more jobs.

A course in macroeconomics will teach you that as output rises, unemployment drops and people make more money because they are in higher demand.

If we play our cards right, in a few years, we could all be sitting in tall cotton, compliments of GATT.

GATT is not only a tremendous deal for the United States, it's a tremendous deal for K-State. We, the economic leaders, will be telling the WTO what to do, because in the free-market ring no one can last a round with the heavyweight!

Santa, can I have a parking garage for Christmas?

With only 18 days left till Christmas, and three more 1994 editions of the Collegian left to be assembled, I wanted to take this moment to write to my dear old friend St. Nick and put in my last request for this holiday season and the year to come.

(Yes, I know the truth about Santa. He doesn't make all of his presents, he buys a few. I forgave him for this fault after he failed to remove some price tags one year. Mom told me about the population explosion causing Santa to look to outside workshops located in Kansas, not the North Pole. I kind of understood.)

KRISTIN BRIGHTON

Dear Santa,

As we prepare to say goodbye to 1994 and old K-State for nearly a month, there are just a few things we'd like to put on our wish list for this year. Many of them may be out of your power, but we saw "Miracle on 34th Street." We know you can make our wishes come true.

1. We wish you'd arrange for an alumna or alumnus to win the lottery. (Lotto America, Kansas Lottery, it doesn't really matter.) This could be a gift that keeps on giving because then, we'd wish you to play upon sympathies and inspire that person to create multiple Aloha Bowl Scholarship Funds so that we all could have a very merry Christmas in the sun.

2. Please give the Biology department the gift of forgiveness so next semester's Principles of Biology classes won't have it too rough. At the same time, please give all of us the gift of honesty so we won't continue building our "Cheatin' U" reputation during finals and create a natural disaster of our own.

3. Please give the city funds and an open heart to the idea of creating a turning lane (complete with a protected left turn) at the corner of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue. (In case this address baffles you, this is the intersection at the entrance to the K-State Union.)

4. Please give your elves a raise so they can update their wardrobes. Curly shoes surely cause bunions.

5. Find it in your animal-loving heart, dear Santa, to provide some bored psychology graduate student with a grant to do psychological evaluations of campus squirrels. (Lately, they have been rather testy. Maybe this winter thing is just stressing them out. Nuts just can't be that important.)

6. Give us back the 65-degree weather to motivate us through finals. Then, you may let Mother Nature loose.

7. Please encourage the student body to take advantage of what they learned during HIV/AIDS Awareness Week and, if they have any doubts, take advantage of HIV testing programs at the Riley County Health Department and Lafene Health Center.

8. Please drop off a few more yield and stop signs for the side streets surrounding campus. There are so many accidents along here (often having to do with students) that even the police officers do not drive on these uncontrolled roads.

9. Give us $17,000 more to bicker over during the next semester.

10. And even though we ask you every year, Santa, and we know you get bored hearing about it, we hope someday you will surprise us with that eight-floor parking garage you promised so long ago.

The students at the University of Kansas really loved theirs. (If it is coming soon, like by the end of the century, please give us a sign, like new bike racks or a shuttle bus to get us by.)

But most of all, on a less selfish, more giving note, please make sure we all travel safely over the holidays, that no avalanches occur at Keystone, no typhoons hit Maui Dec. 25, and Notre Dame gets its lights knocked out on national television New Year's Day.

Kristin Brighton is a sophomore in English and journalism and mass communications.

▶ COOLERSPOON

Why review an unknown band?

There were two pieces in your paper that moved me to write. The first was the article about Coolerspoon breaking the country label, and the second was a letter to the editor on the bouncers at Snookie's during recent concerts there.

Issue No. 1, Coolerspoon. Or rather "Coolerspoon?" How does a band, which has been together for a month and a half and played no shows, get a whole article in the Collegian? On the first public show at Bomber's, no less. I'm not trying to suppress local talent. But if you want an extensive list of established local bands I'd rather read about, call me. It's just that something smells rotten in Denmark. Is this a greek thing? (Oops! Sacred cow!)

Issue No. 2, Breaking out of what "country label?" Sure, when we think of Lawerence, we think homosexual or snob, but we also realize that they have an incredible live-music scene.

In the same way, everyone I know from Lawerence first thinks cowboy, we can't deny this, but in the same breath, they think of our music scéne. They feel Manhattan's music scene is more than respectable, especially given that the coolest live-music venue in northeast Kansas, The Warehouse, closed its doors last spring. (Moment of silence.)

Our music scene is here, but you have to go to it. It won't come to you. There is live music somewhere in town almost every Friday and Saturday, but you have to want to go see it.

Issue No. 3, the letter to the editor by Jason Miller giving the bouncers' side of the incident at the Stick show at Snookie's Bar in which he states that "The bouncers working that evening also worked the 311 concert a few weeks ago. The most pit for that concert was quite a bit larger and just as intense as the Stick concert. However, we had no problems with the crowd on that evening."

I beg to differ. I was at both of these shows and feel that the bouncers were more vicious to the pit dwellers at 311. The difference was the reporting. There was no story about the crowd and bouncers, and the band ignored it also. I'm not blaming Mr. Miller for anything necessarily. I'm sure he was doing what he was paid to do, and I can understand the point about lawsuits. However, Mr. Miller mentioned a line that was crossed by the crowd. Well, there was another that night. The line between doing your job and looking for a reason to beat people's asses. Snookie's Bar is normally a dance club, and you did just that. You did the "latest moves" all over that line.

▶ SENATE

Much thought went to $17,000 decision

Let us take this opportunity to try to salvage a little bit of respect for Student Senate. It's obvious that a lot of students are peeved about how their 50 centsπ was spent by Senate.

Many are claiming that they were blatantly ignored in the matter.

Let us assure you that this is not the case. The simple fact that the meeting lasted for 11 hours is a good indication of how serious the matter was contemplated.

One of the largest controversies over how to spend the $17,000 was that of the bike racks. The problem a lot of senators had with this was that it was a capital improvement. Most students were unaware that Parking Services already has $10,000 to apply toward bike racks. Therefore, the question was: Why give more student money to an administrative office that isn't using what it already has?

We respect the fact that students wanted bike racks, but it was simply unfair and ultimately the administration's responsibility. The resulting allocation to Access the Future and HIV testing seemed to be of the most benefit to the largest number of students while not being an administrative responsibility.

When we were elected, we were charged to be a voice for the students that elected us and to serve their best interests. We feel that we have made every effort to do so. If you disagree, then please talk to us about it. SGA is only what the students make of it.

Professor uses bike video to teach physics course

"I'm always looking for ways to connect what's happening in the classroom and what's hapening in student's lives."

DEAN ZOLLMAN
professor of physics

Video shows concepts of friction

STEFFANY CARREL
Collegian

Learning about physics may soon be easier for students if Dean Zollman, professor of physics, can get his project into the classroom.

Zollman presented his method for teaching some of the elements of basic physics to about 30 people on Monday afternoon at the Ramada Inn for the Vernon Larson International Luncheon Lecture Series.

"Initially, we were trying to find a way to incorporate video into teaching," Zollman said.

"And then we found that we could use the bicycle as a way to teach about physics — on video."

Zollman said the project began in the early 1980s as he was looking for ways of creating an interactive learning environment for his students.

"I'm always looking for ways to connect what's happening in the classroom and what's happening in the students' lives," Zollman said.

"It turns out that this is a fairly effective way to do that."

This project is actually a collaborative one between the United States, the Netherlands and Great Britain, Zollman said.

"We have found that the various educational systems don't necessarily matter," he said.

"We have worked very well together, and that's because the goals are the same across the board as for what teachers want their students to get out of the physics class."

Some of the lessons the bicycle video illustrates include understanding the concepts of force, mass, air resistance and other kinds of friction.

"A lot of what we do includes showing the forces that act on the bicycle and the forces that act on the rider," Zollman said. "Further, the video explains energy and how that energy is transferred from the rider into the motion of the bicycle."

The learning doesn't stop when the video stops, however, Zollman said.

"The students then actually use the videos to make measurements and calculations," he said. "We do as much hands-on learning as possible."

Zollman said he hopes that after 10 years of fiddling with this project, the word of their efforts will spread.

"It of course depends on whether we can find enough money," he said.

"We need to get a commercial publisher to distribute the video in all of the countries involved."

Bill Richter, assistant provost for international programs and professor of political science, said he enjoyed Zollman's speech.

"I thought it was fascinating," Richter said. "I have heard a lot about Dean's technical efforts in these areas."

Richter said Zollman's work fits right in with the theme of the Larson Lecture Series.

"Our interest was in the international collaborative effort of the project," Richter said.

Beginning in 1979, the Larson Lecture Series is the longest running luncheon lecture series on campus, Richter said.

"The purpose of the series is to provide a forum for K-State faculty and staff for sharing international information," Richter said.

"We try to provide a good program and a good meal to give an opportunity for our guests to interact with people who share in international interests."

Rec gets festive, and you get physical for holidays

SACHA HANES
Collegian

Bells will be ringing at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex Wednesday.

It's not St. Nick toning up for Christmas Eve. It's a special Jingle Bell Workout being offered by recreational services.

"It is a traditional holiday workout where you work out to holiday tunes with bells on your shoes," Sarah Forsythe, assistant director of fitness and aquatics, said.

"Exercise the Spirit of the Season" is the theme of the workout, and everyone will be given bells to put on as they enter.

The afternoon classes will be combined for the workout, which is being conducted from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. at the Rec Complex.

The workout will include aerobics, step aerobics and the use of exercise bands and free weights.

Forsythe said all 10 of the aerobic leaders will be on hand to teach and offer support during the class.

Brent Brown, recreation services office assistant, said the workout is part of a monthly special-event program.

Forsythe said they do the monthly special workout in conjunction with the National Intramural Recreational Sports Association.

"These special events are offered to encourage ongoing participation in a personal exercise program," she said.

In September, they offered a spirit workout in which the class did aerobics to music from the K-State Marching Band, and the leaders wore purple.

October's workout went along with the Halloween theme and was titled Wicked Weights. This workout was an all-weight training workout.

"Can You Do It" was a play on words for the November workout, and participants were asked to bring a canned good to donate to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Forsythe said there has been an increase in male participation in the aerobics class, and both men and women are encouraged to come and try it out.

"Aerobics is really for everyone," Forsythe said.

WILL SNYDER LEAVE? NO ONE CAN SAY

The K-State Sports Information Department neither confirmed nor denied reports that Bill Snyder conducted an interview with Louisiana State Athletic Director Joe Dean.

"I haven't talked to Joe Dean at all," K-State Athletic Director Max Urick said. "As far as I'm concerned, everything is just speculation. There is nothing to it as far as I know."

Coach Snyder was not at the game, but was present Friday night. Snyder said he already responded once to the LSU situation and nothing has changed.

Illini fight off K-State

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Close doesn't sit well with K-State coach Tom Asbury — any loss is still a loss.

Yes, the Wildcats battled back from overwhelming deficits time after time. Yes, they had a chance to win the game in the end.

Asbury, though, didn't really care.

Illinois kept its lead throughout the game and preserved a 76-69 win Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

"This isn't horseshoes. Close doesn't get it done," said Asbury, whose team tumbled to 2-2 with the loss. "I told the team I hoped they don't look at this as a moral victory. I didn't get hired for moral victories. It's a loss."

Illinois (4-1) brushed back a late Wildcat rally. Trailing by 10 points with 3:22 left to play, K-State went on a 9-2 run to get close at 70-67 with 1:11 left after a Demond Davis layup.

But Illinois coach Lou Henson wasn't that thrilled with his team's performance, either.

"We jumped out to a good lead, and that's usually not a very good omen when you're playing on the road. We've done that before," Henson said. "We almost set a school record for turnovers. They have a good press. They put so much pressure on us that we just had trouble moving the ball. Their defense didn't allow us to do the things that we wanted to do."

The Cats forced the Fighting Illini into 25 turnovers.

Kiwane Garris led Illinois with 15 points, including two late free throws that helped seal the victory.

Garris hit two free throws with 42 seconds left to give Illinois a 72-67 edge and after a Tyrone Davis tip-in for K-State, Illinois closed out the scoring with a Brian Johnson dunk and two free throws from Richard Keene. Illinois jumped out to a 9-0 lead in the first three minutes, as the Wildcats appeared totally outmanned before pulling to within 43-32 at halftime.

"This isn't horseshoes. Close doesn't get it done. I didn't get hired for moral victories. It's a loss."

TOM ASBURY
K-State basketball coach

"We were scrambling to dig out of a hole all night," Asbury said. "It was just like climbing a hill; we just never could get to the top of it.

"There were some chances for us to fold up, and we didn't. We played pretty hard."

Free-throw shooting hindered K-State's chances. The Wildcats shot a horrid 12-of-28 for 43 percent.

"That game was won at the free-throw line," Asbury said. "I mean, we missed 16 and three times we didn't take care of business blocking out. We just did a wonderful job of distributing missed free throws."

Going into the game, it was a general consensus that the Illinois game would be a benchmark of progress since losing the season-opener to Alabama — a 31-point blowout.

"I don't want those guys sitting in there thinking, 'Oh boy, that's great. We played Illinois a great game.' Because we're going to get our butts beat Wednesday, or Saturday, or whenever. That's not going to do us any good," Asbury said. "I'm not happy about this."

K-State showed signs of challenging for the lead but never got closer than three points from the Fighting Illini.

A 16-8 scoring spurt in the first half brought the Wildcats within three at 15-12, but Illinois retaliated with another 9-0 run.

"Starting out slow, that's something we've done the last couple of games," Demond Davis said. "It kind of caught up with us this time.

"We've improved a lot. We just dug ourselves a hole with missed free throws. We're not in it to play close, we're in it to win. He (Asbury) was saying we should have won the game, which we should have."

Tyrone Davis led all scorers with a career high 16 points for K-State. Hamilton added 14 and Hatcher added 12 points. Freshman Mark Young scored a career high nine points.

'Cardiac' comeback fails

As Illinois clung to a 12-point lead with less than four minutes left in the game, K-State made a dramatic comeback attempt.

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The "Cardiac Cats" made a return appearance to Bramlage Coliseum last night — well, sort of.

As Illinois clung to a 12-point lead with less than four minutes left in the game, K-State made a dramatic comeback attempt.

However, the Wildcats' comeback attempt fell short as Illinois won 76-69.

"We played pretty hard, and we didn't give up," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "I told the team to not look at this as a moral victory. It's a loss, period, end of conversation. I'm not happy. I wasn't hired to be close.

"I wanted to make it sure that the players aren't satisfied."

However, several K-State players said they are encouraged with the strong showing against a team that lost by only six points to No. 6-ranked Duke.

"We're not here to be close," K-State forward Demond Davis said. "We were thinking positive about our effort, but we didn't win."

The Cats' comeback was started when freshman guard Mark Young banked in a short lay-up while he was fouled.

Guard Elliot Hatcher then canned a short jumper from the middle of the lane to cut the Illini lead to seven points.

Illinois guard Kiwane Harris then drove the right side of the lane, but K-State forward Tyrone Davis drew the charging foul.

K-State's Stanley Hamilton then canned a jumper to cut the Illini lead to five points. That was followed by a bucket from Davis.

With just less than a minute left in the game, K-State was trailing by only three points.

"Everybody was just working hard," Hatcher said. "Deep down, we knew that we could beat them. We wanted to show that we are a good team, too."

Just as the "Cardiac Cats" seemed to be making a return appearance, the Illini turned the game around.

As K-State lined up with full-court pressure, Brian Johnson broke long toward the Illinois basket.

Illini guard Richard Keene then lofted a pass, which Johnson received in mid-stride for an easy dunk.

"He made the clinching basket," Illinois coach Lou Henson said. "He set his defender up with a fake, and he just went long."

Demond Davis said Illinois' easy dunk was due to a defensive breakdown.

"It was just a miscommunication," Davis said. "We trapped, and one guy just slipped back. Everybody was playing man-to-man, and someone stayed up to trap. The guy slipped back, and no one covered him."

The Cats probably wouldn't have been trailing by so many points late in the game, if they would have canned more of their free throws.

For the game, K-State shot 50-percent from the line on 12 out of 28.

The poor free-throw shooting didn't leave Asbury pleased.

"It looks like we distributed the poor free-throw shooting very good," Asbury said. "Everybody seemed to miss tonight."

Hatcher said he couldn't figure out why the Cats were missing from the line.

"I don't know what it is," Hatcher said.

"I don't ever recall us missing this many free-throws."

Asbury feels positive about new recruits

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

Tom Asbury's attempt at building a premier program at K-State has begun.

In the early signing period, Asbury signed three players, all of whom are currently playing basketball in the state of Kansas.

The first signee for the Wildcats was Johnny Williams, a 6-foot, 9-inch, 215-pound player out of Cloud County Community College, who Asbury said will give his team some strength next year.

"He's a forward/center type that's very strong and a good rebounder and post defender," Asbury said. "We're not real big up front, and I'm sure he's a guy that will give us some muscle."

The other two recruits are freshmen out of Wichita, Manny Diess a 6'8", 220-pound forward and Shawn Rhodes, a 6'10" center.

Asbury said Dies should help the team in his freshman year.

"We think he's going to be a terrific player," Asbury said. "He's probably the top player in the state of Kansas and a guy we really wanted.

"I think he can come in and contribute immediately next year and play a considerable amount of time."

Asbury said Rhodes may not be able to produce at the next level, yet.

"Rhodes is a very skilled perimeter player that we might redshirt," Asbury said. "He's probably a year or two from being physically able to compete in the Big Eight.

"He's certainly a good passer and good shooter."

Asbury said recruiting players from the area is not very important.

"If you've got in-state players, you should probably make a real bona-fide effort to get them," Asbury said. "Most importantly, I think they can help our basketball program."

Chargers denied AFC West

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — The Los Angeles Raiders spoiled San Diego's coming-out party Monday night, with Jeff Hostetler's 6-yard touchdown pass to Rocket Ismail with 7:23 left giving them a 24-17 victory over the Chargers.

The Chargers (9-4) needed a victory to clinch their second AFC West title in three seasons. The Raiders, meanwhile, needed a victory to stay alive in the scrambled playoff picture and joined four other AFC teams with 7-6 records.

The Chargers wore their throwback uniforms from 1961, with sky-blue jersies and white helmets with yellow lightning bolts, and a towel-waving, record crowd of 63,012 hoped to celebrate a division title.

But the Raiders won at Jack Murphy Stadium for the fourth time in five years.

The Raiders outscored San Diego 10-3 in the fourth quarter. The fourth quarter had been a problem for the Raiders, who had been outscored 98-49 in their 12 previous fourth periods.

The Chargers squandered two big opportunities in the second half.

Clovia spreads Christmas joy

Community groups help children celebrate

DEANA TESKE

The Alpha of Clovia house was filled with Christmas cheer last Saturday as 18 giggling children created gingerbread houses.

The members of Clovia chose to help Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan this year for their community service project. The children, ages 6 to 16 who are currently on the waiting list, were invited to Clovia to make gingerbread houses.

"This is a great way for those waiting to be matched to still have fun," Vicki Terril, case worker for Big Brothers and Big Sisters said. "Activities like this gives them a chance to meet someone new each time and may help them become less shy."

Cynthia Lake, junior in human development, family studies and community service, was in charge of this project as community service chairperson. Last Christmas, Clovia residents sent crayons to children in the Dominican Republic. Although she knows their help was appreciated in the Dominican Republic, she felt they needed to do something local.

"By working with Big Brothers and Big Sisters, each person in the house can be directly involved by picking up a child or helping him or her make a house," Lake said.

Betty, 7, made a pond next to her house. Each child was given frosting, graham crackers, a piece of cardboard, a milk carton and a wide variety of candies. When asked if her house had a porch, Betty said it did. "But you can't see it because it's covered with snow," she said with a toothless grin.

Annie, 9, explained how the milk cartons were used to put the graham crackers on so the houses wouldn't fall. "The frosting sticks it together," she said, with a smudge on her nose, "and it tastes good too."

The children weren't the only ones having fun. "I wish they would let us do stuff like this in studio," Deanne Rezac, sophomore in interior design, said.

Lake said she was very pleased with the turnout of Clovia residents. "We can see for ourselves what help we're giving the children." She plans for the house to do more with Big Brothers and Big Sisters next semester, she said.

Terril said they are equally excited for more activities for the children. "These children need positive role models in their lives and the individual attention they may not receive at home."

Black couple allege bigoted jury gave verdict

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Derrick and Eugena Powell don't think they got a fair trial when they sued their insurance company for $235,000. Especially after the black couple learned their all-white jury compared blacks to chimpanzees before awarding them only $10,500.

Jurors also told "nigger" jokes, speculated the Powells' children were drug dealers and said white people made better employees than blacks, according to a troubled member of the panel who called their lawyer a day after the verdict.

"The level of bigotry and racial intolerance demonstrated by this jury cannot be condoned," the Powells' lawyer, Robert Gray said.

The Powells appealed, and the state Supreme Court agreed to hear their request for a new trial Tuesday.

Allstate Insurance Co. said the decision should stand despite irregularities in the deliberations, since what goes on in the jury room is private and that the alleged comments didn't necessarily affect the decision.

"Although anyone would be incensed by the comments alleged to be made by the jurors, public policy does not allow invasion into the privacy of the jury room," Allstate attorney Sharon Lee Stedman said in court papers.

The judge in the May 1993 case refused the Powells' request that he question the other jurors, saying Florida law did not allow such an inquiry.

A three-judge panel of the 5th District Court of Appeal overruled the judge, but the full court then overruled the panel, sending the case to the state Supreme Court.

The Powells had sued Allstate, their own insurance company, to cover medical bills and lost wages after an underinsured motorist broadsided their Lincoln Continental in January 1989. Powell, then a 51-year-old electrician, suffered back injuries.

The Academy of Florida Trial Lawyers and the Florida Association for Women Lawyers filed briefs supporting the Powells, Jamaican-born U.S. citizens who live in Palm Bay, Fla., just south of Melbourne, Fla.

"The statements made by the jurors here cannot be dismissed as merely the remarks of 'insensitive clods' or 'ethnic humor.' They are appallingly virulent racist comments," the state American Civil Liberties Union said in a brief.

"No one should have his trial conducted by jurors who would regard such remarks as lighthearted repartee appropriate to the awesome responsibility of the jury," the ACLU brief said.

Chinese athletes implicated in drug scandal

11 athletes stripped of medals

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — New testing methods caught the 11 Chinese athletes who were stripped of their Asian Game medals for using performance-enhancing drugs. The athletes tested positive for the drugs during the October competition in Hiroshima, Japan.

"We would not have been able to detect the drugs with the methods that were used a year ago," an official at Mitsubishi Chemical Biochemical Laboratories Inc. said Monday.

The laboratory conducted the tests, which uncovered the fraud.

The positive tests are sure to increase suspicions that stunning recent strides by Chinese athletes are the results of a broad doping program that was medically concealed.

The prohibited substance found in the athletes' urine, dehydrotestosterone, is reportedly much harder to detect than testosterone, a male hormone sometimes used illegally by athletes to build strength.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said international sports rules did not allow him to disclose information about the new tests.

On Saturday, the Olympic Council of Asia announced the 11 athletes had been stripped of the medals they won at the October Games.

On Sunday, the Chinese Olympic Committee said it was shocked and said the athletes would face severe punishment. Chinese news reports did not specify what the punishment would be.

According to China's official Xinhua News Agency, the women were swimmers Yang Aihua, Lu Bin and Zhou Guanbin, hurdler Han Qing and cyclist Wang Yan. The men were swimmers Xiong Guoming, Hu Bin, Zhang Bin and Fu Yong, and canoeists Zhang Lei and Qiu Suoren.

The Chinese Olympic Committee issued a statement Sunday saying it has opposed the use of banned substances.

It said "it is clear to all the excellent performance of most Chinese athletes was achieved through long-term, hard and scientific training."

"We would not have been able to detect the drugs with the methods that were used a year ago."

Harvard president's leave extends; burnout possible

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.— Time was that a university president took a leave of absence to travel around the world, write a book or just kick around international issues between tennis games.

In 1994, consider the case of Neil Rudenstine, president of high-profile Harvard University for just three years. His Thanksgiving holiday has been extended indefinitely upon the order of doctors treating him for exhaustion. They've ordered him to rest at his Cambridge mansion and cease all official duties.

Rudenstine's abrupt leave of absence stunned students and faculty, but those in the know say it illustrates what many have predicted: The job of university president has become "nasty, brutish and short," as the English philosopher Thomas Hobbes might have put it.

"The days of the 20-year presidency are gone," said David Riesman, professor emeritus of sociology at Harvard and a scholar of higher education.

Riesman said the high burnout rate for school presidents is due to a vastly increased work load, including intense fund-raising demands, multiplying government regulations and interest group pressures on what used to be routine decisions.

Experts say the physical collapse of the 59-year-old Rudenstine, by all accounts obsessive and fastidious about facets of university administration, is further proof that the somewhat grand image of university president, spelling stability for decades, is fading fast.

"The job has changed dramatically over the past years, even since I assumed a presidency in the mid-'80s," wrote Pepperdine University President David Davenport in a recent Christian Science Monitor article titled "Why So Many University Presidents Burn Out."

He said the tenure of today's college presidents averages three to seven years.

Yale University has had five presidents in 17 years. It had just two in the 27 years previous.

Robert Hutchins led the University of Chicago for 22 years, from 1929 to 1951. In the last 22 years, the school has welcomed four presidents.

At Harvard, Rudenstine's predecessor, Derek C. Bok, served 20 years.

Presidents still face what Davenport called a staggering load of routine chores and social demands.

Rudenstine, for example, chairs the committee that determines tenure and chairs Harvard's Faculty of Arts and Sciences, which oversees liberal arts undergraduates.

He greets visiting dignitaries, commands searches for high-level appointments, has monthly office hours for students and represents Harvard on government issues in Washington, D.C.

But presidents now must also raise millions of dollars, all the while maintaining political correctness and diversity in all levels of decision-making.

"Fifteen years ago when you did a faculty search, a few trustees did it quietly," Riesman said. "Now, it includes students, alumni, staff, the public ... every decision is questioned, every decision has to be consensual."

Harley Holden, curator of the school's archives, said the pressure is compounded at Harvard, the nation's oldest university and one of the richest.

"When you're No. 1, there's only once place to go," he said.

"I think the job is widely perceived to be a man-killer, not to be sexist," said John Bethell, editor of Harvard Magazine for 28 years. "But Rudenstine tends to be quite obsessed with details, fine-tuning his speeches and making appearances. He's just everyplace."

Rudenstine runs a campus of 19,000 students, 2,200 faculty, 13 schools and colleges and a budget of $1.3 billion. Earlier this year, already working 80 hours some weeks, Rudenstine took on a $2.1 billion fund-raising campaign, the largest in U.S. academic history.

"All of us who love Neil have been worried for some time about the fact that he was working so hard," said Nathan Pusey, Harvard's president from 1953 to 1971. "I hope this has been a warning to him."

But Pusey understands.

"It's a colossal job with relentless pressures bearing down all the time," Pusey said. "I used to say probably (only) the president of the United States has a tougher job. It just never stops."

Bulgaria turns to arms industry for economic recovery

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PLOVDIV, Bulgaria — Desperate for ways to recover from its post-communist economic slide, Bulgaria is turning again to the arms industry — the motor of the national economy before the Soviet bloc collapsed.

Government ministers no longer heed Western demands that the arms industry convert to civilian production. Orders for weapons are rising again, bringing jobs to a poor nation with 16 percent unemployment.

But some officials say arms exports remain far below the high point of the 1980s and predict Bulgaria's inefficient arms factories will have trouble competing in the world market.

Bulgaria's post-communist rulers inherited an enormous foreign debt of $12.9 billion run up under the longtime rule of Stalinist strongman Todor Zhivkov. They hope a resurgent arms industry will boost foreign revenues and help reduce that debt while bolstering the economy.

"We are coming back on the market, indeed slowly and with difficulties, but we are returning," said Ivan Kolev, deputy chairman of the state commission on the arms industry.

Signaling the emphasis on weapons exports, Bulgaria held its first international arms fair in Plovdiv in November. It was the first time Bulgarians were given a glimpse of the deadly products that once kept the communist state afloat.

The fair bristled with anti-tank and anti-aircraft guns, armored personnel carriers, rifles, pistols, ammunition, radios, radar, optical equipment.

Most weapons were standard fare also produced under communism. Just as then, the state arms dealers were mum about potential customers and contracts.

Kolev said about 5,000 workers have been added by arms producers this year. The industry employs 140,000 people directly and as many as 300,000 in related sectors, about 12 percent of Bulgaria's work force of 4 million people.

Details on arms sales always were — and remain — a closely guarded secret. But speaking on condition of anonymity, experts said arms exports in the late 1980s totaled $1 billion annually. Forbes magazine said last year that Bulgarian arms dealers sold $43 million worth of arms to Iraq in 1989 alone.

After Zhivkov was ousted in 1989, Bulgaria and many other former Soviet bloc countries heeded advice from the West to convert military production to civilian use.

By 1992, with moves toward a free market paralyzed by political infighting, Bulgarians decided that conversion did not pay.

"If I had a chance, I would impose a ban on the word conversion," Defense Minister Boiko Noev said during the Plovdiv arms fair.

"The time when Bulgarian military plants produced jar tops has already gone. Highly qualified experts will now manufacture what they are used to — top-level weapons," Noev said.

Bulgaria became a major weapons exporter during the 1960s. Its Warsaw Pact allies, several Middle Eastern countries and communist-oriented nations in Latin America, Africa and Asia were major clients.

But the arms trade collapsed as communism crumbled. East European clients were no longer interested, preferring to spend their limited cash on higher quality weapons manufactured in the West.

Another major purchaser, the Bulgarian army, is little help. The Ministry of Defense estimates about 20 to 30 percent of the army's equipment is practically unusable, but it has only $23 million for modernization and technical equipment.

Kolev said he was encouraged because arms sales in the first half of 1994 were twice the total for all of 1993. He would not release specific figures.

But a veteran arms trader with extensive experience on the international market is less optimistic.

Anton Saldzhijski, chief of the state-run arms trading company Kintex, said arms exports are one-fifth to one-sixth the levels of the late 1980s and the prospects for rebouding are dim.

Bulgaria is still dependent on equally inefficient factories in Russia for spare parts and lacks long-term contracts, making production "an everyday struggle for survival," he said.

The cost of conversion to Western technology would be prohibitive, he said.

"It's an illusion to think that anyone would pay us to make such a transition," Saldzhijski said.

Shallenburger nominated as speaker

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA (AP) — Rep. Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, today ousted House Speaker Bob Miller from the House's No. 1 position.

Shallenburger, currently the speaker pro tem, the No. 2 spot in the House, was nominated to be speaker during a Republican caucus on a 45-34 vote.

It is the first time in Kansas history that a speaker seeking a second term has been ousted.

Over in the Democratic caucus, Rep. Tom Sawyer of Wichita was elected minority leader 34-10.

Before votes were cast in the House chamber, both House candidates appeared confident they would receive at least 41 votes from the 80 Republicans in the House. The Democrats hold 45 of the 124 seats.

The nomination is tantamount to election, but Shallenburger will not be formally elected until the Legislature convenes Jan. 9.

The race for the speaker had been a hard-fought one since the Nov. 8 election.

Shallenburger had said Miller did not provide aggressive enough leadership during his tenure as House speaker.

"Leadership is provided by people who are willing to take a stand," Rep. Phill Kline, R-Shawnee, who nominated Shallenburger, said. "We must be willing to lose this seat to do what's right. Leadership is provided by those willing to lose in order to win."

Kline said Shallenburger assisted him during the last legislative session in getting a welfare reform package passed by bringing aboard Democratic support for the measure. Without Shallenburger, he said, the measure would not have passed.

"It was Tim Shallenburger who taught me the ropes," Kline said.

During nominating speeches, Miller's supporters extolled his integrity.

"Bob is a man of his word," said Rep. Clyde Graeber of Leavenworth, who nominated Miller. "Honesty is his only policy."

Miller has served in the House since 1971. He was elected House speaker in 1993, and served as minority leader for the two years the Democrats controlled the House, from 1991-93.

Shallenburger was elected speaker pro tem two years ago. He has served in the House since 1987.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A White House official calls the scheduled demolition of a violent, drug-riddled mid-town apartment complex an example of good government. Residents say they have heard it before.

Either way, the three rundown brick buildings with their bullet holes and broken windows are coming down after Christmas.

The first brick came out on Sunday, removed by Housing and Urban Development Secretary Henry Cisneros in a symbolic ceremony attended by Sen. Christopher Bond, R-Mo., and Mayor Emanuel Cleaver.

"On occasion, government does work," Cisneros said. "I hope this becomes the norm and model for how this department responds. We don't want to be obstacles, impediments to neighborhoods that know what they want."

But after the politicians and police left, some neighborhood residents girded to continue fighting for their neighborhoods.

"To see the politicians here, there are elections all the time, it doesn't mean that much," said Alberta Lyons, 76, who has lived near the 72-unit apartment house since 1936.

"But this started in a living room," quickly added Gloria Smith, who has lived in the neighborhood for 20 years. "And now it's coming down."

Smith said residents would watch closely to see where the drug dealers start operating next.

The drug trade at Creston Place Apartments was so blatant that when Cisneros visited at Bond's urging, a would-be drug buyer offered him money.

Creston Place Apartments is located near Troost Avenue, locally known as a boundary between dangerous neighborhoods to the east and safer areas to the west.

But about three years ago, residents on either side of Troost decided if they're going to battle bad elements, they had to work together. They formed a group called Hands Across Troost.

Jim Collins, a spokesman for the group, said residents then convinced police to go undercover to observe the drug sales, prostitution and nasty stuff in there. They made tapes.

Bond showed Cisneros the tapes and maps of the drug-infested neighborhoods and convinced him to give Kansas City special attention.

Bond also drafted legislation that removed some roadblocks that kept HUD from destroying the building, including a requirement that required HUD to numerically replace housing it destroyed.

Israelis begin debate concerning promise to keep PLO troops out

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli officials, angered by Islamic attacks, have begun a major policy debate over whether the nation can keep its promise to the PLO to pull troops out of the West Bank before Palestinian elections.

In response, Yasser Arafat's self-rule Cabinet met today to discuss the issue, and a senior member, Saeb Erakat, called Israeli proposals for changing the Israel-PLO accord dangerous.

Israel's policy review began Sunday.

Top army and Secret Service officials told the Cabinet that Islamic militants were gaining ground and said Arafat had failed to contain attacks on Israelis that have claimed 32 lives since October.

A second meeting is scheduled for Wednesday in which the 18-member Cabinet will debate a political solution to the problem.

"We must find a way to carry out elections in the territories while maintaining full security," Foreign Minister Shimon Peres was quoted as saying in the daily Haaretz newspaper.

Israeli public opinion toward the Army has soured over the ongoing attacks. The government is frustrated because it is unable to defend the isolated settlements in Gaza and fears the situation will be worse in the West Bank.

Uri Dromi, a spokesman for Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's government, said today Israel remained committed to the agreement but negotiations with the PLO were necessary to overcome early mistakes.

The first phase of autonomy went into force in Gaza and the West Bank area of Jericho in May.

Dromi said the key question was finding a way to address the accord's call for an Israeli troop withdrawal with the need to maintain security for the 120,000 Jewish settlers in the West Bank.

"Holding elections is important, but the safety of Israelis is just as important and maybe has an overriding force," Dromi said, adding the issues will be raised Tuesday when Israeli and PLO negotiators meet in Cairo.

On Sunday, some Israeli Cabinet members suggested a change in the PLO-Israel pact was needed.

"We need to adjust the accord because Arafat hasn't kept it," Shetreet said. "He has not disarmed the Islamic militias; he has not tried those who carried out attacks."

Erakat, the Palestinian official, condemned the dangerous statements from Israel's Cabinet, calling it an attempt to elude previous commitments.

"Israel must immediately pull out its soldiers from the populated area and allow us to have elections," he told the Associated Press.

The Israel-PLO accord envisioned Palestinian elections being held last July, but they have been repeatedly postponed.

The latest attack came Sunday when a suicide bomber was caught at the main Israel-Gaza crossing point. Mahmoud Sharif, 26, of Gaza City, ignored orders to stop as he approached troops checking papers of Palestinians, the army said.

Sharif set off the detonator of the bomb he was carrying in a backpack, but the homemade explosives contained in cans with nails failed to go off, the army said. Sharif was hospitalized with light injuries.

PLO police said they did not believe he was carrying explosives.

Palestinian sources said Sharif fundamentalist Hamas group. Sharif left a letter saying "I want to avenge the blood of Palestinian martyrs, and I want to kill those heretic soldiers," the daily Yediot Ahronot reported.

Israeli settlements in Gaza, home to 4,000 Jews, have been targeted repeatedly by opponents of the peace treaty.

Providing security for over 120,000 settlers living among more than 1 million Palestinians in the West Bank is expected to be even more difficult.

However, Brig. Gen. Yaacov Amidror of army intelligence said Arafat needed elections in order to show progress to Palestinians. "Hamas is strengthening but from our point of view there is no substitute for Arafat," an official quoted him as telling the Cabinet.

Ori Orr, head of the parliament's Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, said an agreement should be sought with the Palestinians to hold elections without a full Israeli withdrawal from cities.

Nissim Zvilli, secretary-general of the governing Labor Party, said that Israel might agree to dismantle remote settlements in exchange for

Achille Lauro employees unsure of future employment, home

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOMBASA, Kenya — First, they nearly lost their lives. Now they're unemployed and far from home.

The first of more than 400 employees of the ill-fated Achille Lauro cruise ship came ashore Sunday happy to be alive but worried about new concerns.

"We don't know anything about what will happen to us," Dyna Peres, 29, said. The mother of three from Honduras had signed on for a year as a waitress.

Four days after abandoning the blazing Italian liner, about 100 crew members arrived Sunday at this island city on Kenya's Indian Ocean coast aboard the freighter Lucy, one of 10 rescue vessels.

"We have lost everything ... our clothes ... everything," Roberto Rivera, a sailor from Honduras, said.

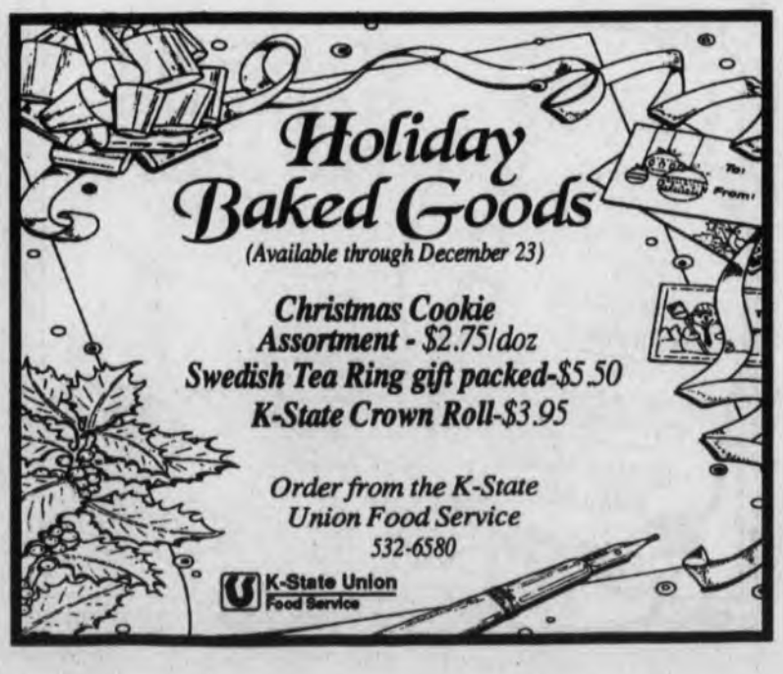
Rivera said after crew members failed to contain the blaze with fire extinguishers, passengers joined them, forming bucket brigades using sea water.

Nearly seven hours later, the order came to abandon ship, crew members said.

"The people were pretty calm," Peres said. "I tried to sleep on the deck, but the crewmen around me were laughing and joking and trying not to be nervous. They were talking about being out on such a pretty, moonlit night, and they were talking of home."

A fire erupted in the Achille Lauro's engine room Wednesday and consumed the Italian liner, already notorious for a 1985 hijacking by Palestinian terrorists. Two elderly passengers died, and eight people were injured. All others aboard were rescued.

The Achille Lauro sank Friday, 125 miles off the coast of Somalia.



An elderly Dutch woman, Evernentia Spiekermann, 74, died of an intestinal ailment aboard one of the rescue vessels Saturday night, the Italian Coast Guard said Sunday.

Rescue ships were due to arrive shortly in Mombasa, but it wasn't clear when survivors of the cruise ship would be brought ashore.

At the Gulf of Aden port of Djibouti, several hundred Achille Lauro passengers disembarked Sunday morning from two American warships, the USS Halyburton and Gettysburg.

Marriage not easy answer

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassie:
116 Kedzie Hall
Manhattan, KS

Dear Cassandra,

I have been seeing this girl for about year, and her father thinks we should get engaged. I have been thinking seriously about it for the last month, but now she thinks she's pregnant. What do we do? Rush the engagement, or have the kid first?

Signed,
When is it time for a ring

Dear When is it time for a ring,

If your girlfriend is expecting a child, that adds a few flames to the fire, but don't let that push you into a marriage you aren't ready for yet. There's a big difference between thinking about it the last month and actually proposing.

Also, don't let her dad or anyone else push you into marrying before you're ready, either. The two of you are going to have to decide when you're ready, not family members and friends. It's your life.

If you're worried about what people think if you have a family before you're married, you shouldn't. Rushing into a marriage because the two of you are expecting isn't the right reason to put a ring on her finger. And if the two of you aren't happy together, you're not going to be doing your child any good, either. If you both genuinely feel ready to make a commitment, then it's the right time. If you're unsure, it's not. Take your time, there's no rush.

'Vitalogy' restores old faith in Pearl Jam

ANDREW TOMB

Just the name Pearl Jam has a special meaning to fans of that trendy 'Seattle sound.'

These guys have sold enough records to buy most of Washington state and drive the parents of any pre-teen with access to a cassette deck up the walls of suburbia.

Still, they managed to overcome the traditional pitfalls of superstar status after release of the multi-platinum debut "Ten," and released a reasonable second CD, 1993's "Versus." The sophomore effort was sort of a departure from the familiar grunge sound of "Ten" as some fans were reluctant to cash in on it.

The third album now faces the Pepsi challenge from listeners across the world.

"Vitalogy" comes packaged in what looks like an old medical manual, complete with outdated medical advice on everything from marriage to nightmares.

The vintage graphics and photos included also produce an effective package. Spend a little time looking over the materials. It's an amusing gimmick, but probably not worth the price of the disk alone. I recommend actually removing the disk from the cardboard and playing it.

After three lackluster songs, "Vitalogy" delivers a song that is as good or better than anything on "Ten," the haunting "Tremor Christ."

Finally, the band slows down from the album's speed-metal genesis to let its two best elements shine — Eddie Vedder's voice and Stone Gossard's guitar.

"Tremor Christ" is classic Vedder howling, paired with some of Gossard's best guitar work ever.

As Pearl Jam lyrics usually go, the meaning is rather vague.

"Little secrets, tremors / turned to quake / the smallest oceans still get ... big, big waves."

Vedder's forceful voice makes it obvious that the lyrics mean something, much reminiscent of "Ten's" cryptic hits "Black" and "Gardens."

The album then launches its best material, the ballad "Nothingman," and the angry punk of "Whipping."

Vedder's accordion and howl on "Bugs" is a bit forced, but the rest of the record certainly makes up for the lame opening.

What "Vitalogy" proves to the Pearl Jam fan is that the band is still capable of work on the par of the first record.

It's not near the album "Ten" was, but it is better than "Versus."

"Vitalogy" shows Pearl Jam still has a pulse and will continue to be one of the most important bands of the decade.

Peace proposal presented as fighting continues

A government-held town in Bosnia-Herzegovina is close to being taken by Serb forces.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A government-held town was reportedly close to falling as Serb forces resumed their push into northwest Bosnia.

The offensive came as Western European diplomats presented a new peace proposal Sunday to Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, the Serbs' former patron, and a U.S. diplomat met with the Muslim-led government.

In a slight concession, Bosnian Serbs freed 53 U.N. peacekeepers on Sunday but continued to hold about 350 more as insurance against NATO airstrikes.

In northwest Bosnia, Serbs allied with rebel Muslims were reportedly close to capturing the town of Velika Kladusa. Fighting was also heavy in the U.N.-declared safe area of Bihac, a Muslim stronghold of 70,000 people.

Bosnian radio claimed 20 women and five children were killed by shelling. Maj. Herve Gourmelon, a U.N. spokesman, reported a sharp increase in fighting Sunday around both towns but could not confirm the casualty report.

Serb forces have taken 30 percent to 40 percent of Bihac.

U.N. officials said one Bangladeshi peacekeeper died Saturday from a heart attack, brought on by asthma that grew worse from lack of medicine. Serbs have blocked U.N. supply convoys to Bihac for weeks, but one arrived Sunday.

Fighting was also reported in Sarajevo, where Serb forces and government troops clashed near the Grbivica sports stadium, and in central Bosnia.

Croat fighters pushed northwest from Livno, about 70 miles west of Sarajevo, toward the Serb-held towns of Glamoc and Bosansko Grahovo.

The Bosnian Serbs have accused the Croatian army of being involved in the fighting near Livno, but U.N. officials couldn't confirm the claim. Bosnian Serb Television said Sunday that 17 civilians were wounded in that fighting.

More than than 200,000 people are dead or missing in the war that began in April 1992, when Serbs rebelled after Bosnia's government declared independence from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

Bosnian Serbs repeatedly have rejected a peace plan which would require them to reduce their holdings to 49 percent of Bosnia, instead of the 70 percent they control.

The Western Allies are now considering amending the proposal to allow formal links between the Bosnian Serbs and Serbia proper — a move Serb nationalists demand.

After a meeting Sunday with U.S. envoy Charles Redman, Bosnian Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic reiterated his government's refusal to accept any changes.

When the plan was proposed last summer, it was described as "the last and definitive plan," Silajdzic said. "It was take it or leave it. So we took it."

In Belgrade, British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd and French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe presented the revised peace proposal to Milosevic in hopes he could persuade the Bosnian Serbs to accept it.

Milosevic told reporters the "forces of peace" are growing among Bosnian Serbs. "And I'm sure that this even-handed approach ... would win."

But Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic has said he is holding out for formal recognition of a Bosnian Serb state.

In other developments, 20 British soldiers held in Brdine in Serb-held eastern Bosnia were released Sunday and headed to their original destination, the government-held town of Gorazde.

Gingrich incriminates leaders

Up to 25 percent used drugs before White House years

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Up to a quarter of White House staff may have used illegal drugs in the four or five years before they began their jobs, House Speaker-to-be Newt Gingrich said Sunday.

Gingrich said those figures were proof that "you've got scattered throughout this administration counterculture people."

The Georgia conservative, speaking on NBC's "Meet the Press," said that he "had a senior law enforcement official tell me that in his judgment, up to a quarter of the White House staff, when they first came in, had used drugs in the last four or five years."

He said the administration had had huge problems getting people through security clearance because there were so many people who had a lot of things that weren't very easy to clear.

The White House had no immediate comment on the allegation.

Gingrich's remarks were in response to being asked why he recently referred to President Clinton and his wife as being members of the counterculture.

Gingrich said there was no comparison between Clinton's support of George McGovern, the liberal Democratic candidate for president in 1972, and Gingrich's backing of liberal Nelson Rockefeller, who ran against Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan for the Republican nomination in 1968.

Gingrich also protested, "that's not true," when a reporter suggested that he, like Clinton, avoided military service during the Vietnam War. Gingrich said he had a student deferment before the war and two children. He said he joined the ROTC but dropped out because it didn't pay.

He said his point in referring to Clinton as a member of the counterculture was not about his attitude 25 years ago but about the people in his administration today. Clinton's hiring of people who had used drugs is a "current attitude about a current position on a current problem."

Russia, U.S. aim to stop moth invasion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Russia has reaffirmed its commitment to work with the United States in trying to prevent any new invasion of the Asian gypsy moth, which badly damaged forests in the Pacific Northwest three years ago, according to the Agriculture Department.

"By monitoring Asian gypsy moth populations around ports with direct ship traffic from Russia to the United States, we can determine which ships might harbor hitchhiking moths," Lonnie King, acting administrator of the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, said in a statement.

The next step after identifying the potential transporters of the pest is to inspect the ships offshore to determine which are infested before they dock and give the moths a chance to fly off.

Asian gypsy moths earned the special treatment following an infestation of Washington and Oregon in 1991 that officials believe started on a ship originating in the Russian Far East.

According to the USDA, it cost more than $19 million to get rid of the pest that time.

To prevent further outbreaks, a working group was formed in 1993 comprising members of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service and the U.S. Forest Service and their Russian counterparts.

The group met last month to review the data on Russian ports from 1994 and make plans to continue the program in the coming year.

"So far, the program has yielded valuable information that has helped us develop our national exclusion plan for Asian gypsy moths," said Terry McGovern, a plant protection and quarantine officer and member of the working group.

The Asian gypsy moth resembles the European gypsy moth found in the northeastern United States — except it is hungrier. Both prefer forest environments and often cause severe defoliation.

Merger idea up in smoke

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Federal Trade Commission asked a judge Monday to block a merger of two tobacco companies that claim it's the only way they can compete against industry leader Philip Morris.

"Prices are going to go up for the consumers if this transaction is allowed to proceed," FTC lawyer James C. Egan Jr. warned in a hearing on British-owned B.A.T. Industries' $1 billion bid for America Tobacco Co.

Egan told U.S. District Judge Milton Pollack the merger would bring collusion and price fixing by tobacco companies. He said the companies took steps "to lessen competition even before the merger is complete."

Egan asked Pollack to issue a preliminary injunction at the end of testimony, which could last a week. If it is granted, another hearing would determine whether a permanent injunction to block the merger could follow.

Ronald S. Rolfe, a lawyer for B.A.T. and its U.S. subsidiary, Brown & Williamson, argued the merger would increase competition by making two smaller companies a larger force in the marketplace.

This could only pose a threat to the world's No. 1 tobacco company, Philip Morris, he said.

He said B.A.T. was the second-largest tobacco manufacturer in the world but a distant third in the U.S. market, behind Philip Morris U.S.A. and R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. American Tobacco is fifth.

Rolfe said Philip Morris controls about 45 percent of the market in the United States, while B.A.T. Industries and American Tobacco have about 18 percent together.

He said collusion after a merger would be prevented by a simple law of business for tobacco companies over the last 20 years: "The firm that doesn't discount and doesn't discount heavily loses sales. It's as simple as that."

Tobacco manufacturers are competing for a marketplace that is declining at the rate of about 2.4 percent a year, he said.

American owns Lucky Strike, Pall Mall, Carlton and Tareyton as well as discount brands Misty, Montclair and Private Stock. B&W's owns Kool, Capri and Barclay along with discount brands GPC Approved and Viceroy.

feet tall is not a requirement.

"We even have college kids go to the movies," Sieben said. "It's a pretty good deal."

Heather Markham, a 9-year-old and big fan of Andre the seal, forgot her cans but came anyway just to see the movie.

"Andre is kind of like 'Free Willie,' but it's a true story," Heather said. "We gave cans at our house. The K-State people came by, and we gave them macaroni and cheese."

Andre wasn't the only animal there on Saturday to dazzle the children. Willie the Wildcat greeted the young moviegoers and gave out autographed pictures.

Terry Scalora, a mother of a 7-year-old, said her daughter was apprehensive about being left at the theater with the chaperones.

"Those other little attractions each week make it nice," Scalora said. "When we got here, you can tell that it brightened up her day when she saw Willie."

Other costumed characters will make appearances throughout the month. On Saturday, at the showing of Lassie, the Confetti's Pup will pass out Christmas goodie bags to the first 250 people. For the Nutcracker on Dec. 17, Santa Claus will be there after the show.

For those people who have been good this year, they can drop their letters to Santa at the red mailbox in Triangle Park.

"You can write your letter to Santa, and the people from the Senior Center will answer it," Sieben said.

Other events in the Aggieville Business Association's Christmas extravaganza is a drawing on Dec. 19.

"There's a giant stocking giveaway — four $25 gift certificates," Sieben said. "You can sign up in any of the Aggieville stores."

Inmates had their testicles X-rayed for profit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHLAND, Wash. — Money was the motive for many Oregon state prison inmates who asked to participate in federal experiments that involved bombarding their testicles with X-rays.

Their handwritten requests are among 4,034 pages of documents the Energy Department made public Monday concerning radiation experiments on 60 inmates at Washington state prison in Walla Walla and 67 prisoners in Salem, Ore., between 1963 and 1973.

The Washington prisoners' requests were not among the documents.

"I have an interest in the program as well as needing a little spending money," wrote an inmate identified only as No. 40. His name was blacked out on the document, dated June 25, 1964.

"Have no idea how long I will be here. I need the money real bad. Have no other means of getting more funds," prisoner No. 3 wrote in August 1971, requesting the remaining $50 he had been promised.

They didn't get much.

Inmates received $5 each month for submitting to X-ray radiation exposure of the scrotum and testes, and for providing samples of urine, semen and blood. The inmates, ages 25 to 52, also were paid $10 for each periodic biopsy of the testicles.

Those who completed the experiment and had a vasectomy received a $100 payment. The surgical sterilization was intended to prevent birth defects due to the radiation.

The Oregon experiments cost $1.12 million while those in Washington cost $505,000. They were paid for by the Energy Department's predecessor, the Atomic Energy Commission.

Prisoners' testicles were exposed to varying doses of radiation from an X-ray device so researchers could learn about the potential biological effects of radiation on Hanford nuclear reservation workers and on NASA astronauts.

The program was popular among inmates. Some inmates who were released and later returned to prison asked to be accepted back into the experiments.

Prisoner No. 28 worried that he would not be able to finish the experiment because he was due to be granted parole.

"Personally I am interested in this program because of how it can help mankind," he wrote.

Defense claims removal wasn't enough to brake dam days a bridge between West Quincy and Quincy, Ill., which was the only link between Missouri and Illinois for 200 miles.

"I guess some people can't understand a life term for property damage," Scholz said. "There could easily have been a loss of life, and we're very fortunate no one was killed."

Jurors in Scott's trial rejected defense arguments that his removal of sandbags wasn't enough to break the levee.

In his taped statement, Scott said he had removed the sandbags only to draw authorities' attention to a trouble spot. On the night of the break, Scott appeared on television describing his efforts to save the levee.

But the prosecution said Scott had a different purpose.

"He said he was going to break the levee so he could strand his wife in Missouri so he could have parties, so he could have affairs," Marion County prosecutor John Jackson said in his closing argument.

Jackson said Scott will probably serve from 4 to 5 years of the burglary sentence before beginning his life prison term. Scott could be eligible for parole in 12 to 15 years after that, Jackson said.

As a juvenile, Scott was convicted of setting fire to a Quincy elementary school. In 1988, he was sentenced to seven years in prison for setting several more fires.

Ice cuts power to 10,000 people in Manhattan

AMY ZIEGLER

...icles on trees, slick streets and falling temperatures transformed Manhattan into a dangerous winter wonderland Tuesday night.

"It's pretty outside, but it's pretty destructive, too," Stacy Kohlmeier, division manager of Kansas Power and Light, said.

Kohlmeier said the power was out in all four corners of Manhattan, and close to 10,000 people were affected by the power outage.

"8,300 customers have been without or are without power in Manhattan right now, and there's around 1,000 in the surrounding towns without power. It changes minute by minute," Kohlmeier said.

"It's pretty outside, but it's pretty destructive, too."
STACY KOHLMEIER
division manager of Kansas Power and Light

Kohlmeier said the weight of the ice on the power lines teamed with the ice which accumulated on the tree leaves and branches caused the power outage.

"A lot of large trees have snapped big limbs and knocked down power lines around town. When I drove back to the district office, I had to swerve around trees and couldn't get under some of them with my car," Kohlmeier said.

Kohlmeier said the employees at KPL are working to solve problems as they happen.

"It's organized chaos at this point. The problem is we can't predict where the next problem will come up so we have to wait for the calls and then go out and fix the lines," Kohlmeier said.

"We're loaded right now. Right now, there's widespread but not extensive damage."
CAPTAIN WILD
Riley County Police Department

Rose Suther, an employee of KPL who answers questions on the toll-free number, said she has also received calls from Manhattan residents.

"We've received a good group of calls from that area. I've gotten 12 calls so far and am getting them routinely," Suther said.

Suther said the KPL workers are planning to stay until the problem is taken care of.

"Crews are being called in on overtime to control it," Suther said.

Captain Wild, from the Riley County police department, said the officers in his department are also working to manage ice-storm damage.

"We're loaded right now. Most of the workload is on the fire department, who is having to respond to poles and transformers on fire. Right now, there's widespread but not extensive damage," Wild said.

Ruth Murtonen, supervisor of Memorial Hospital, said the hospital wasn't affected to the same extent as other areas of Manhattan.

The power went off for a few minutes, but didn't cause any serious problems. If the power had gone off for a longer period of time, the

Lafene says Lifestyles condoms it distributed may be faulty

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

If you have obtained condoms from Lafene Health,Center since the beginning of August, do not use them.

Lafene has received several reports within the last several weeks that Lifestyles condoms, lot number 311009500 have broken or torn while being used. There is an ad on page three of today's Collegian about the faulty condoms.

Bill Salero, pharmacist at Lafene, said the health center has had about 12 students complain about he faulty condoms.

"Some came in person, some called and some went to the women's clinic, but all together, we've had at least a dozen complaints," he said.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said after the problems with the condoms were called to the attention of the staff of Lafene, they threw out the remaining condoms in that lot number.

Zweimiller said it was the large number of students reporting the condoms were breaking that alerted Lafene staff.

"The problems we had in the past were few and far between and could be linked to improper usage. This time, we were just getting complaints too frequently," he said.

Zweimiller said there has never been a problem with Lifestyles in the past, nor does he anticipate one in the future.

"We've tested them, and we feel confident with them," he said.

Eileen Swanson, registered nurse at the women's clinic, said the testing of the condoms was not scientific or professional.

"We're not professional condom checkers. We just simply see if they are strong enough," she said.

Swanson also suggested that people check their condoms before using them.

"Fill them with water before you use them and check to see if there are any holes," she said.

▶ JUDGE SENTENCES HILL TO DEATH OVER SLAYING OF ABORTION DOCTOR

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Paul Hill was sentenced Tuesday to die in the electric chair for the shotgun slaying of a doctor and escort outside an abortion clinic.

The former minister showed no emotion as Judge Frank Bell sentenced him to death and asked if he had anything to say.

Hill didn't, but an unidentified woman stood up and began shouting at the judge.

"This man is innocent and his blood will be on your hands," she yelled as guards moved in and pushed her from the courtroom. Hill, wearing a lime-green jail jumpsuit and shackled at the ankles, was hustled out another door at the same time.

The jury that convicted Hill of first-degree murder recommended the death penalty for killing 69-year-old Dr. John Bayard Britton and retired Air Force Lt. Col. James Barrett, 74. The other option was life in prison without parole.

Barrett's wife, June, who was also guarding Britton, was wounded when Hill ambushed the unarmed trio as they arrived at the Ladies Center in the Barretts' pickup truck on July 29.

The state death sentence takes precedence over the federal sentence of life in prison that Hill received last week, Assistant U.S. Attorney David McGee said.

Hill, 40, was sentenced in federal court in the slayings as the first person convicted of violating the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances law.

Before sentencing Hill, Bell described how he stalked his victims, cut them down, then took a few moments to view the carnage before tossing his weapon aside and walking away.

"The defendant was looking at what he had accomplished with pride and satisfaction," Bell said.

Hill's wife and parents were behind him in the courtroom for today's sentencing. They showed no emotion as he was sentenced, and left immediately afterward. They declined to comment to the throng of reporters and camera crews that trailed them them to the elevator.

Hill, formerly a minister in the Presbyterian Church in America and Orthodox Presbyterian Church, served as his own lawyer during both trials, offering no evidence and questioning no witnesses.

Hill contended that the murders were a justified attempt to prevent abortions, but he was not allowed to present that argument to jurors during his state trial, largely because abortion is legal.

Hill told jurors in state court that they "may mix my blood with the blood of the unborn. ... May God help you to protect the unborn as you would want to be protected."

Prosecutors argued that there was no justification for the slayings.

"If one examines the great religions of the world, the killing of a human being by one who lays in wait is regarded as evil and sinful," prosecutors argued.

"The very God who the defendant referred to in his only utterance to the jury condemns the acts committed by the defendant," they added.

The Florida Supreme Court automatically reviews all death sentences.

▶ MANHATTAN WOMEN PLEADS INNOCENT TO FIRST-DEGREE MURDER

MANHATTAN (AP) — A Manhattan woman has pleaded innocent to first-degree murder in the Sept. 11 strangulation death of her boyfriend.

A trial date of March 27 was set Monday for Alexandria Yancy in Riley County District Court.

Yancy, 25, was arrested Sept. 12 for the murder of Melvin L. Rhodeman, 33, who lived with her.

Rhodeman was found dead at his home by police. He had an extension cord wrapped around his neck.

Yancy was originally charged with second-degree murder, but the charge was changed to first-degree murder last month. If convicted, she could serve up to life in prison and face a $300,000 fine.

CORRECTIONS

■ In a story last week on the Johnsons' speech, it was incorrectly said there were 80 people at K-State that were infected with HIV. The story should have said that was an estimated number of how many people that could have HIV based on national statistics.

■ A story in last Thursday's Collegian incorrectly said Neelima Gogumalla was the Director of the International Trade Institute. She is the associate director.

In the same story, Gogumalla was quoted as saying, "As soon as NAFTA passed, we (United States) weren't interested in GATT."

The quote should have said, "As soon as NAFTA passed, we weren't as interested in GATT."

■ In a cutline in Monday's paper, it was incorrectly said that Jill Zimmerman and Jeff Sleichter were members of the meat judging team. They are members of the livestock judging team. It was also the livestock judging team that had its last national champion title in 1983. The meat judging team has had several titles since that time.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

JUDGING LIVESTOCK

For members of K-State's Livestock Judging team, it's more than a county fair event, it's a way of life

"We had a lot of different personalities on the team, but when it came to judging, we all knew what we were here for. We wanted to achieve a lot of success"

JILL ZIMMERMAN
Senior in animal sciences and industry

JANET McPHERSON
Collegian

Eight K-State students know the challenge of working a 40-hour week while being full-time students.

Their work hasn't been rewarded with an hourly wage, but with a national livestock judging championship.

Kevin Kuhlmann, senior in animal sciences and industry, said he and the other 1994 K-State Livestock Judging Team members probably spent at least 40 hours a week together, not counting the classes some shared.

"So, if you don't like someone, you better learn to live with them," Kuhlmann said.

He said, being from Texas, he caught a lot of jokes from the seven native Kansans on the team.

Kuhlmann said he joked a lot with Jill Zimmerman, senior in animal sciences and industry, the only female on the team.

Zimmerman said she was the only female on her junior college judging team, too.

"I guess it'd be kind of like the sister thing," Zimmerman said. "We had a lot of different personalities on the team, but when it came to judging, we all knew what we were here for. We wanted to achieve a lot of success."

Zimmerman and Kuhlmann said they came to K-State because of the animal sciences and industry department, plus the good livestock judging team and Coach Scott Schaake.

Brandon Anderson, senior in animal sciences and industry, came to K-State from Allen County Community College. He said he never wrote out any goals, but wanted to learn as much as he could from Coach Schaake.

Anderson said it's a challenge for a person to be coachable after judging in another program and getting set in that program's ways. It has been hard, he said, to manage school responsibilities with the judging schedule.

For the average Saturday workout, the team members would climb into the van at 6 a.m. and drive one to three hours to a livestock producer's farm, Scott Schaake, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

They sometimes judged through lunch and worked until four or five that afternoon, judging 10 to 15 classes. Each student would give five to eight sets of reasons during the evening.

In addition to Kuhlman, Anderson and Zimmerman, the team is made up of four other seniors in animal sciences and industry — Steve McNorton, Matt Nelson, Jeff Sleichter and Jason Yarrow — and one senior in agricultural-technology management, Troy Strahm.

Since last December, Schaake estimates each student has given more than 500 sets of reasons.

"I bet I've given at least 3,000 to 5,000 sets – maybe even more than that in my lifetime," Kuhlmann said.

Kuhlmann said he is scheduled to judge three shows next summer and one next fall. He will be going to Angelo State University in San Angelo, Texas, to get a master's degree in sheep production and nutrition, and to coach the livestock judging team there for two years.

Kuhlmann, who has been judging livestock since the seventh grade, said two benefits of judging have been the development of communication skills and meeting people in the livestock industry.

He said the team is about more than competing. He has made a lot of friends, especially from other teams.

Anderson said a lot of companies see livestock judging experience on a résumé and recognize that the individual has decision-making abilities and is responsible.

"And has the gift of B.S.," he joked.

Anderson said his uncle was on the 1974 livestock judging team, the last K-State team since 1994 to win at both Kansas City and Louisville, Ky.

"We won three in a row," Anderson said. "As far as we know, we're the only team to do that.

"In the spring, we didn't know how we were going to do," Anderson said. "We had a lot of talent, but just couldn't get it together at the same time.

"At Louisville, everyone was close together as far as point drops," Anderson said. "We won it as a team.

"I don't really realize how awesome it is," he said. "It doesn't really sink in right now. I suppose it will in a couple years. It's a really big deal to some of the alumni."

Kuhlmann said he was always the nervous one on the team, and was shaking and almost started crying when he found out they had won the national title.

He said he was sitting by a professor from Oklahoma State at the awards banquet, and the professor looked over and said, "I can tell you really care."

For Kuhlmann, it was an understatement.

"It's probably going to be the Success has a price.

For the members and coach of the 1994 National Champion Livestock Judging Team, their success has come from a commitment of time and money.

Coach Scott Schaake, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, said students pay for a lot of their own meals and hotel rooms during workouts.

"We eat a lot of McDonald's," Schaake said.

Schaake said the team travels through Nebraska, Iowa and Oklahoma to practice, but mainly works with livestock producers in Kansas.

Many of the farms and ranches the team visits belong to alumni of the judging program, and often the alumni will provide lunch for the team.

The team also receives some monetary support from an endowment established through the Livestock and Meat Industry Council, housed in the department of animal sciences and industry, and the Student Governing Association, Shaake said.

The team has a few recruits from other states come to K-State and judge, but Shaake said the students don't get any tuition breaks because of participation on a competition team.

"Students have to pay out-of-state tuition. There's no way to get around it," Schaake said.

He said credit for the success of K-State's livestock judging program is shared by many, including the department of animal sciences and industry, which has been supportive of students in the program.

"We definitely have to thank the people in the state, especially the producers," Schaake said. "We got hundreds of phone calls congratulating the students on their win."

Shaake said the students that judge for K-State are very dedicated to success. The challenge now is to keep focused with every team and to keep K-State in the winning circle, he said.

Schaake said the toughest thing about his job is being away from his son, Shane, who he said is a future judger. He also said his wife, Kandi, is very supportive.

Schaake said he plans to coach for several years, until he loses the drive to train and be competitive. But, he said, he is far from that point.

K-State improves record to 4-1

Cats defeat Wichita State, then whip South Dakota at home

JULIE KULHMAN
Collegian

The injury plague suffered by the K-State women's basketball team earlier this season did not keep the players from posting a 3-0 record last week.

K-State squeaked by Wichita State and Minnesota 60-55 and 76-74, but ended the week by pounding the South Dakota Coyotes 82-37.

The win put the Cats at 4-1 for the season. Coach Brian Agler said his team has learned a lot about itself in winning the two close games.

"I think we were fortunate in a lot of ways at the end of the game, but we made some plays that allowed us to come away with the wins," he said.

Although Agler said the big win against South Dakota was nice, it wasn't the same level of competition as Minnesota or WSU.

"We played real well and did some things better than before — but they weren't the same type of team," he said.

Shawnda DeCamp said it was good to feel comfortable within the offense.

"It's been a while since we've been comfortable," DeCamp said. "The freshmen are finally picking the offense up."

Agler said his team did a better job of finding the open players in Sunday's game.

"I thought we did a good job of passing the ball well and using people when they're ready to score," Agler said.

Against South Dakota, Agler said it was good to have some starters back in after being injured.

> K-State women's basketball coach

"Shawnda DeCamp looked injury-free and sick-free for the first time and looked like she could move like she wanted to," Agler said.

Another concern for Agler was the health of freshman wing Brit Jacobson after she had suffered a knee injury against WSU.

"She feels so much better now than she did against Wichita State," Agler said.

Jacobson said she is used to her knee acting up because she has had three knee surgeries. However, she is resting when she can.

Other players who were suffering from injuries, Kjersten Larson and Carlene Mitchell, are close to being in good health, as well.

Agler said Mitchell's presence on the floor is a big asset to the team, and they need her to bring leadership to the floor.

"She takes a lot of the pressure off of Shawnda and Shanele Stires," he said. "When the ball is in her hands, it is in good hands."

However, Agler said some of his inexperienced players are starting to become more confident on the court.

He said freshman confusion is something that is apparent, especially from Jacobson.

After the Minnesota match-up, Agler said the inexperience in Jacobson was starting to come out.

"She's becoming confused, and in her confusion, she's becoming passive," he said.

Against South Dakota, he said he saw better things.

Agler mentioned a play in which Jacobson ran past the defender to snatch a ball and finish the play with a lay-up.

"Brit blew by that player like she wasn't even there," he said. "She's capable of doing that all the time."

For now, Agler is concentrating on his team getting ready for the George Washington Tournament in Washington, D.C.

"We're going to have our hands full," he said. "I do think our team will feel more confident if we get into a close game at the end with the two close wins we took this week."

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

While scrambling for the ball, K-State's Kjerston Larson and Lisa Gaitor make a steal against South Dakota. The Cats smashed the Coyotes 82-37 to improve their record to 4-1. K-State will next play in the George Washington Invitational. Participating in the Invitational are George Washington, Arkansas State and District of Columbia.

Cats end season with winning record despite suffering in Big Eight play

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State women's volleyball team, after a blazing start, seemed destined to qualify for the Big Eight Conference Championships.

Moore

However, the Wildcats finished the season on a down note by losing to Oklahoma and Kansas, causing them to fall into a tie for fifth place in the conference with a 3-9 record.

Coach Jim Moore said the problem with the season was a lack of improvement.

"In the first half, their performance was better than I expected, but I thought we should have finished higher in the Big Eight," Moore said. "The team on the whole was close to the same from the beginning of the year to the end."

Despite the disappointment, the Cats did finish with a winning record overall, at 14-13.

The last time the team ended over the .500 mark was the 1988 team, which went 15-13.

Moore said he was happy with some of his players' progression throughout the season.

"Some people improved steadily throughout the season, especially Devon (Ryning)," Moore said.

Moore also said junior Jill Dugan's hard work should pay dividends in the future.

"We changed Jill's game technically, so it took her a while to adjust," Moore said. "Her hitting efficiency may have not improved much this year, but in the long run, I think it will improve a great deal due to the changes we made."

Moore said he was extremely impressed with the lone senior on the team, Kathy Wylie.

"My experience with her was one of the highlights of my career," Moore said. "This was a girl that was given no role for her first three years here.

"We gave her the most important and difficult role, and she responded greatly."

Moore said despite some difficulties, she kept working to be the leader of the team.

"There were times that she had some bad matches, but she always bounced back the next day," Moore said. "She's the only person on our team that could have played her role."

Moore said the defining moment of the season may have been when the players started taking the games too seriously.

"I was pleased with the way we began the season with so much life and fire, and we just had a lot of fun, which is the most important thing," Moore said. "Somewhere along the lines, it became work instead of fun.

"When we were upset by teams, like in the Oral Roberts' game, I think that disappointed us too much."

The Cats will only lose one senior from the team, but Moore said he will have to bring in other players to challenge for starting positions next year.

"We have to recruit," Moore said. "Also, we need to improve things technically and look at changing some positions."

Moore said he hopes the fan support will also continue to increase in numbers next year.

"I was very happy with the crowds at the Kansas and Nebraska games," Moore said. "Next year, we just have to make those crowds the smallest.

"There was nothing that made it really trying, but there was a tremendous amount of work involved in coming into the program so late and trying to get everything organized," Moore said. "You certainly remember the people 10 years down the road."

Practices allow players to get ready for conference competition

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State baseball team is finished with the fall season and now looks toward the spring.

Throughout the fall, amidst the many practices and scrimmages, Coach Mike Clark said the main objective was to decide who will be playing in the spring.

"We try to get the team down to 28 players and figure out what role each player will have," Clark said.

He said the team also tried to improve on two main areas: pitching and defense.

"We made some nice steps in developing our pitching, and it looks like we're going to have a lot more depth than we have had," Clark said. "Realistically, we still have experience problems in the pitching staff.

"They haven't competed at this level, so it's going to be hard for them to adjust to the Big Eight (Conference) strike zone."

Clark said his team has also made some progress defensively.

"We have brought some players into the infield that have really helped us," Clark said.

"With all of the drill work they went through, I would say at the end of this fall, we could have put a real sound defense on the field."

Clark said the team as a whole improved in the fall as they matured.

"We've got such a young team that there has been a natural improvement," Clark said. "As they become older and more experienced, they become more confident and know how to compete better.

"Overall, we had a real good fall."

When the Wildcats enter the spring season, Clark said they should continue to improve.

"We're going to get better and better as the season goes on," Clark said. "We've got a tough schedule, but we should be able to find the right chemistry as we get into the season and become a real competitive team.

"I think we can do well in the Big Eight Conference and hopefully, jump up into the middle of the pack."

Since the team is in between seasons, Clark said he is now in the process of recruiting for the future.

"Recruiting has been going well," Clark said. "We offered to two pitchers, and they both signed.

"They're young, but by the time they are sophomores and juniors, they should be very sound."

Clark said his present players are staying active in preparation for the spring.

Semester vacation not always a holiday

CHARITY WOODSON
Collegian

Going home for the semester break may seem like a welcome vacation to some students, but for others, it seems like a battleground.

Residents of Ford Hall got an opportunity Sunday evening to meet with other students and discuss ways to ready themselves for the upcoming break.

Resident assistant Katie Thomas, junior in agricultural journalism, facilitated the discussion and related some of her own personal experiences to the group.

"When I went home my freshman year, I was annoyed that my mom thought she could tell me when to come home," she said. "After talking to them for the past three years, they've learned that I'm getting older and can make my own decisions."

Thomas stressed that it is important to communicate with your parents on an adult level.

"It works better not to whine," she said. "Tell your parents that you're growing up and that you're an adult now."

A big concern for the group was how their parents respond when they go out at home.

"At school, everyone stays out late," Sarah McGinn, freshman in animal science, said. "It's not like we're doing anything wrong. We just like to stay out late."

Some residents said the parental role had gone too far.

"I'm glad they're concerned, but there comes a point when you need your freedom," Michelle Snyder, freshman in arts and sciences, said.

Another concern of the group was that parents don't think they spend enough quality time with the family.

"My dad misses me," McGinn said. "He searches for things to do with me, and he didn't used to do that."

Thomas said it is important to take some time out of your holiday schedule and plan to spend time just with your family.

"Designate a time to be together, and play cards or something your

SUMMER RUCKMAN

More than 1,000 K-State seniors will cross the stage and enter into the real world during the fall commencement.

"I'm excited about graduating but not about walking," Jodi Jenkins, fifth-year senior in marketing, said. "My mom is making me walk because she paid for my education."

The commencement ceremony will take place at Bramlage Coliseum at 9 a.m. Dec. 10. Friends and family are welcome to attend.

"It's a long process where they run everybody through," student body president Jeff Peterson said. "All colleges will be here, and each dean will read the list."

Graduates completing associate's, bachelor's, master's and doctoral degree programs will be honored but will not receive their diplomas until after passing final exams the following week.

Karen Krepps, member of the Kansas Board of Regents, and Jeff Peterson will speak briefly.

"There's no traditional commencement speech. With 1,000 students — we'd be there all morning," President Jon Wefald said.

Some fall graduates said they prefer a star speaker even though it causes a longer ceremony.

"I wish they would hire someone famous to come and speak — to give some inspiration to go forward," Brian Siegrist, senior in public relations, said, "But the way they have it right now, it feels like we're waiting

International student aid debated

SUMMER RUCKMAN
Collegian

Federal financial assistance for international students was the controversial topic at a graduate food science seminar Tuesday.

Both sides of the issue were represented by the featured speaker and the small audience dominated by international students.

Adam Small, graduate student in food sciences, conducted a survey about American views of international students at K-State.

"I hope I don't get lynch-mobbed for saying this," Small said to the audience of about 25 people. "But a lot of the students do not favor American-paid assistance to internationalers from American tax dollars."

The survey of 41 K-Staters included 7 faculty members and 34 undergraduate and graduate students. Small said he chose this topic because there is a large number of international students associated with the food science graduate program.

"Personally, I think if there's a spot available and it's funded by American dollars, then American students should be favored," Small said.

"If it's privately-funded assistances given to the University, then it's everyone for themselves."

The majority of students surveyed said they did not support financial assistance to international students because American students were already waiting in line for financial assistance and because international students return to their countries after graduating.

"A lot of foreigners go home, and you never see them again," Small said. "They should at least stay in the country for four to five years to contribute back to America."

At face value, it seems unfair that American tax dollars go to international students. But international students said they benefit the University.

According to the survey, Small said faculty believe financial assistance for international students builds relationships with other countries and adds cultural diversity to the University.

"The faculty considered it international investment — that it builds ties with companies in both countries and can help establish trade," Small said. "It also adds cultural diversity, and American students can learn from them."

Kenny Chung, a graduate student in food science from Taiwan, said he is receiving financial assistance for the first time in his four years in the United States.

"I would agree with that statement that American tax dollars shouldn't be used to pay for international students," Chung said. "To me, it seems that this school uses this category to hire assistants to do research for the school. Every grant needs a research assistant — they have to hire somebody to do it.

"At Cornell University, they don't offer any money to international students," Chung said. "I consider it discriminatory if I'm 10 times more qualified for the job than someone else. Those are the ones that make me really mad."

Boontawee Kuyyakanont, a graduate student in food microbiology from Thailand, said she uses the financial assistance to promote the University.

"Once I get the money, I try to use it the best way according to guidelines," Kuyyakanont said. "I pay the University back by doing research and publishing papers."

Kuyyakanont said that she, like all students, must go through the interviewing process to receive the research assistance. The professors decide who is best for the job.

"It's up to the professor — they can say yes or no. I'm the one that shows qualifications — GPA and experience. I go interview for the job," she said. "It's better for me to financially survive. It can make my life better."

Daniel Fung, instructor of the seminar, said he is a living example of international students who remain in the United States.

"If you really want to think about it, Native Americans are really the only Americans," he said.

Wefald will present the annual $1,000 Conoco Presidential Award for distinguished service to minority educator Karen Martin, director of K-State's minority engineering program. The program encourages and supports minority students in engineering.

After the ceremony, there will be a commencement buffet for graduates and their guests. It will be from 11:15 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. at the Union Bluemont Room for $5.95 per person.

Other commencement weekend activities include the College of Agriculture honors and graduate's banquet. It will begin at 6:30 p.m. Dec. 9 in the Union Ballroom.

The College of Human Ecology will have a reception for graduates at 4:30 p.m. Dec. 9 in Hoffman Lounge in Justin Hall.

family likes," she said.

Thomas also said she suggests that telling your parents you appreciate them might help ease the tensions.

"Send them a card and thank them for what they do," she said. "Do things all through the year, and if they are pleased with you, it might make things easier when you do go home."

Some members of the group were afraid that tensions between them and their parents might be blowing a chance at future relationships with them.

"If they do things that make us not want to come home right now, why would we want to go to their house when we're older and have our own places?" Jennifer Moran, sophomore in recreation and parks administration, asked.

Students that attended the discussion said it will help them deal with the upcoming break.

"I thought I was the only one going through this," Joanna Klima, freshman in arts and sciences, said. "Now I know how to approach my family better."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Campus suffers power outages; Wednesday classes still planned backup generator would have supplied more power to the hospital.

Murtonen said the hospital didn't receive an increased amount of patients, but the staff is ready to handle any kind of emergencies caused by the slick streets.

"We're waiting, but we're hoping that everyone stays home tonight and don't get into any accidents but as always, we're ready for whatever happens," Murtonen said.

Kohlmeier said the reason why Memorial Hospital wasn't affected was because the area around K-State is divided into two substations, one by the area near Kimball and Denison, and the other next to Memorial Stadium.

Kohlmeier said the power went off specifically in the southwest substation, which would affect all campus buildings in that area, such as the Union and Anderson Hall.

In Anderson, the power outage caused all the computer screens to go blank and the lights shut down throughout the entire building.

All the offices on the lower level closed down immediately, but the offices on the second floor remained open until they received further notice.

"I bet all of campus has left by now," an employee of the cashiering and student loans office said as she was waiting for further instruction from her boss.

The employees' phones were working, but since most of their work is done by computer, they were sent home at around 4 p.m.

Angie Velez, office assistant, said she was surprised when her computer died during the ice storm.

"I was shocked. It kind of scared me for a second because I was on the phone, and I didn't know what happened," Velez said.

Doug Ackley, assistant controller of cashiers and student loans, said all the nonessential employees across the University were allowed to go home early because of the ice storm.

"Even though the lights just went back on, the official word is to send home the nonessentials, that is the employees who answer the phone or take care of the customers," Ackley said.

In addition to closing offices across Manhattan prematurely, meetings were also canceled throughout town.

"We have four pages of cancellations for tonight's activities," a K-Rock employee said.

Although the employees had a short work day today, all will return to normal for the students tomorrow.

John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, said Wednesday classes will not be canceled.

"We expect this to blow over and everything to go on as usual tomorrow," Fairman said.

Surveys to be assessed

Students, faculty to review results, tabulate surveys

AMY SIMON
Collegian

The Parking Task Force will begin making recommendations next week on how to solve the campus parking problem.

This task force, made up of five students and five faculty and staff, will review the results of a parking survey distributed in early November.

Ron Downey, director of institutional research and analysis, has been working to tabulate the results of this survey.

The survey allowed respondents to voice their opinion on four possible solutions to the parking problem. The survey was sent to 500 students, 300 faculty and 300 classified staff. Downey said approximately half of the surveys have been returned.

The first possible solution offered in the survey is to do nothing.

According to the survey, this would mean 300 fewer parking spaces in the next 10 years due to construction.

The second option is to restrict the sale of parking permits.

Under this proposal, students within three blocks of campus would not be allowed to purchase a parking permit. This would mean an additional 550 parking stalls.

The third option is to construct a parking garage near Memorial Stadium. The garage would house 1,200 cars and cost approximately $10.2 million.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the Parking Task Force will make a recommendation to President Jon Wefald. However, Wefald and his staff will make the final decision.

"I anticipate several meetings of the task force before we make a recommendation," Rawson said.

If the decision is to build a garage, the proposal must go before the Kansas Board of Regents at its February meeting to get approval of the project.

Michele Meier, Parking and Campus Safety Committee chair, is happy there may soon be action on the parking problem. Meier said the parking problem is increasingly important because of expanding campus facilities.

"I have been looking at the history of the parking situation to write a class paper," Meier said. "People have been saying they will fix the parking problem for 20 years, and now it finally looks like we will do something about it."

Stress, holidays make you susceptible to viral infections

KIM HALL
Collegian

If you've found yourself with a sore throat, body aches, a fever or even the sniffles, you've probably caught a viral infection.

Reita Currie, registered nurse and health educator at Lafene Health Center, said strep throat, influenza, mononucleosis and the common cold are going around right now.

"People are more stressed around the holidays and finals," she said. "Students are staying up too late and cramming for tests."

Currie said stress causes the immune system to become more prone to these infections.

Strep throat and the flu can progress into more serious diseases such as pneumonia and rheumatic fever if they are not treated properly, she said.

Dree Hood, clinic coordinator at Lafene, said the prevalence of mono on campus is relatively high right now.

"Two to three students are being tested positive for mono every week," she said.

Also known as the kissing disease, mono is spread through intimate contact as well as drinking or eating after an infected person.

Hood said the Epstein-Barr Virus is responsible for 95 percent of all mono cases.

She said EBV is usually present in the body for 30 to 50 days before a person develops any symptoms.

Clean-up crews busy after storm

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

People are cleaning up today after an ice storm hit most of northeast Kansas Tuesday.

Tree limbs were down, ice was everywhere, and about 42,000 people in Kansas were without electricity.

Kansas Power and Light reported, as of 4 p.m. Wednesday, 2,700 of those people still did not have lights. In Manhattan, 750 are still without power.

Nearly 100 crews from other areas of Kansas have been called in to assist with the restoration job.

KPL was hoping to have all of the power back on by last night, with the exception of those in Atchison, Junction City and Manhattan.

Crews from the power company are working around the clock.

"We're very appreciative of the patience our customers continue to show," Michel Philipp, KPL spokesperson, said. "We know how frustrating it is to be without electricity, especially in the winter."

The Riley County Police Department reported minimal accidents due to the storm.

"We were fortunate that the streets didn't freeze," Captain Steve French said. "We didn't have a large number of accidents."

The Manhattan Forestry Division of the Parks and Recreation Department has been working overtime to clean-up the fallen trees and branches.

Bruce McCallum, director of Manhattan Public Works department, said the city is not instituting a clean up program for this storm.

"Previously, we have had a clean-up program after these kinds of storms," he said. "This time, there is not a great enough extent of damage."

McCallum said most of the damage was to trees on private property.

"People who have tree limbs on their property can dispose of them at the Riley County Landfill at no charge," he said.

Campus maintenance works extra hours

"It's really going to be difficult assessing the damage now. It's real hard to put a dollar value on a tree."
JOHN OTT
Director of facilities services

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Leaking roofs, broken tree branches, icy sidewalks and power outages kept campus maintenance busy Tuesday and Wednesday.

Some ground crews worked extra hours to keep sidewalks clear and fallen tree limbs out of the way, John Ott, director of facilities services, said.

"We've been cutting wood since four this morning," Joe Myers, facilities employee, said.

Myers said almost every tree on campus has a broken limb.

Snow removal and tree work are the main responsibilities of facilities employees in the wintertime, Michael Reasoner, equipment operator for facilities, said.

He said facilities doesn't like to remove a tree unless there is extensive damage and it won't survive.

"We don't like to take them out because we have good trees," Reasoner said.

Ott said many of the trees on campus are weighed down by ice, and facilities won't know until the ice melts what the extent of damage is.

"It's really going to be difficult assessing the damage now," Ott said. "It's real hard to put a dollar value on a tree."

Randy Slover, director of facilities and maintenance, said roof leaks, electrical motor burn-outs and power outages also occurred as a result of the ice storm. Seven buildings on campus had roof leaks which had to be repaired, he said.

A leak in the roof at Lafene Health Center set the fire alarms off Tuesday night, Slover said.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said facilities reset the fire alarms and repairs were made to the roof Wednesday.

In addition to leaky roofs, two-thirds of campus had intermittent power outages, Slover said.

"We had expected the power to go out throughout the day with the ice on the lines," he said.

Slover said damages from the storm are estimated at $8,000, which does not include the damages inside campus buildings.

Menorahs set up to establish Jewish representation in Union

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

A K-State Jewish organization placed two Menorahs in the Union Tuesday to gain equal representation for Judaism and to make people aware of the Jewish festival Hanukkah.

Libby Rittmaster, senior in Spanish and Latin American studies, said because five Christmas trees were set up in the Union, she wanted to include a symbol of the Jewish religion.

"If the Union is going to sponsor trees by buying them and putting them up voluntarily, then they should also sponsor other religions on campus," Rittmaster said.

Rittmaster said she felt the trees, which were covered with strings of lights, stars on the tops and presents underneath, were symbols of Christmas, a Christian holiday.

To equally represent Judaism, the B'nai B'rith organization wanted to set up the Menorahs.

"Their initial reaction was how far is this going to go? How many other religions are going to come forward? How much trouble is this going to be?" Rittmaster said.

Rittmaster said she contacted the Union before Thanksgiving break and received permission to set up the Menorahs in the Union.

Rittmaster discovered at a residence hall meeting on Monday night that the Menorahs were still not set up.

When she went to the Union to talk to them about the Menorahs, they told her the trees were a cultural, rather than a religious symbol. Rittmaster said the Union considered the trees "holiday" trees and not "Christmas" trees because the stars and lights represented culture, not religious beliefs.

"If you take a poll at the Union and ask students what you call the trees, I bet 99 percent of them will say they're Christmas trees. Once you put that title on there, it's a religious symbol, and that doesn't work for me. Trees don't represent Jews," Rittmaster said.

After Rittmaster told the Union about the problem, the trees were then stripped of all religious symbolism, including the presents under the tree.

"If the gift-wrapped boxes under the tree were for Hanukkah, they would have been opened and gone," Rittmaster said.

Rittmaster said there was also a Happy Hanukkah ornament on the tree, which was later taken down.

After the Union granted the organization permission to set up the Menorahs, the ornaments were returned back to the five Christmas trees in the Union.

Jack Sills, the director of the Union, said that next year there will be more of an organized effort to represent the religions and cultural beliefs of all the students.

"We intend to involve the student religious groups to represent symbols of their religion through the holiday season," Sills said.

Rami Aizenman, junior in architecture and president of B'nai B'rith Hillel, said the University needs to have a more multicultural attitude and not draw the line between what is religious and what is a cultural symbol.

"We're not all white American Christians. It doesn't matter if we have different cultures. The Union should represent all of us. We all pay fees, and we all want to be represented," Aizenman said.

"Their initial reaction was how far is this going to go? How many other religions are going to come forward? How much trouble is this going to be?"

▶ CHRISTMAS SHOPPERS BEWARE OF PARKING-LOT CONSTRUCTION AT MALL

Manhattan Town Center administrators have decided to tear up its parking lot during one of the busiest times of the year.

The mall is making way for the new bridge being built over the Kansas River. A new off ramp will go through one of the mall's parking lot entrances, Christopher Heavey, general manager and leasing agent for the mall, said.

"We have to move that entrance 600 feet to the north," he said.

Only 25 to 30 parking stalls will be affected by the construction. New islands are being built in the parking lot, and light poles are being moved. The electric and irrigation systems will have to be moved also, Heavey said.

"We're doing small things until after Christmas," he said.

Two out-lots within the parking lot will be built to accommodate more buildings. The mall will provide the utilities for the buildings. Other businesses will be able to occupy them, but the buildings will still belong to the mall.

Heavey said the construction should be complete by April 30.

▶ RESIDENCE-HALL EXPERIMENT EXTENDS HOLIDAY HOURS FOR STUDENTS

Residents needing to stay in the halls past the last day of finals get a break this year.

All residence halls officially close at 7 p.m. Dec. 16, but the Department of Housing and Dining Services is allowing certain residents to stay in the halls until noon Dec. 20.

The change has been brought about as a response to student input, Shah Hasan, assistant director of housing, said.

"We heard that students would like a place to stay if they have basketball tickets," he said. "We wanted to find a way to help these students."

In the past, students needing to stay past the last day of finals had to pay $5 per night, Ford Hall Director Lori Lander said.

Those who are granted permission to stay in the halls will only have access to the building by Validine.

"The halls will be locked 24 hours during that time," Hasan said.

Residents staying will also be responsible for their own meals.

"There will be no front-desk services or dining-center services," Hasan said. "We are making arrangements to make sure there is safety and security in the halls, however."

Residents staying until Dec. 20 will be able to stay in their own buildings, but anyone needing to stay past Dec. 20 will have to move to vacation housing in Marlatt Hall and pay for the remainder of the break, Hasan said.

Residents who travel have found this new arrangement very handy.

"It is very convenient for the halls to stay open, because I would have nowhere to go," Sira Sidiki, sophomore in accounting and finance, said. "Otherwise, I'd have to move into a hotel room, because all my friends would be gone, too."

Hasan said this new arrangement is only an experiment, but that it may be offered again next year if enough students take advantage of it.

▶ PUBLIC-SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT EARNS 4 K-STATE STUDENTS HONORS

Four K-State students took first place in a recent national radio and television competition.

The students participated in the 14th Annual National Public Service Announcement Competition for Radio and Television last month, which is sponsored by the Public Relations Division of the Speech Communication Association.

K-State graduates Will Brown and Jennifer Magathon won first place in the TV category with their entry, "Join Us Today."

Charles Lubbers, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said their entry focused on the activities of the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society.

"It featured wildlife shots and the importance of conservation and wildlife," Lubbers said.

Mark Good, senior in mass communications and gerontology, and Sarah Happel, senior in pre-law and journalism and mass communications, also won first place in the radio category with their entry, "Center for Basic Cancer Research Provides Support."

Good said his radio entry was a narrative story about how one person's life is affected by cancer.

▶ UNPROTECTED SEX, DRUNK DRIVING LIKELY TO HAPPEN TO BINGE DRINKERS

CHICAGO (AP) — Binge drinking is rampant on almost a third of the nation's campuses — and where it prevails, sober students suffer, a survey found.

"Students on campuses where there's a lot of binge drinking are affected in a number of ways — including physical assault, sexual harassment, property damage and interrupted sleep or study time," said Henry Wechsler, director of the Alcohol Studies Program at the Harvard School of Public Health.

His team surveyed 17,592 students on 140 campuses last year. Findings appear in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

Forty-four percent of students reported binging, defined as downing five drinks or beers in a row for men, or four in a row for women at least once in the two weeks before the survey.

Nineteen percent of all students were frequent bingers — having at least three binges in the period.

Bingers tend to drink for the express purpose of getting drunk, Wechsler said.

Bingers were seven times as likely to have unprotected sex as non-binge drinkers, 10 times as likely to drive after drinking and 11 times as likely to fall behind in their studies, the survey said.

Efficient Harvesting

Combine raises hopes for cheaper farming

JANELL COE
Collegian

A combine that started as a dream is becoming reality for a team of eight people.

The Bi-Rotor combine was conceived in 1978 by Mark Underwood, a young farmer from Burr Oak.

The purpose of the Bi-Rotor was to increase harvesting efficiency more than available commercial models, ultimately at a competitive price.

Underwood said he knew that threshing efficiency could be increased by rotating the concave along with the rotor, and that combined with fewer moving parts would be more reliable.

"Generally, the stride for me was to put it in the hands of the American farmer," Underwood said.

In 1980, Ralph Lagergren, Underwood's business partner and cousin, joined him in the development of the Bi-Rotor concept.

Underwood and Lagergren, along with six other people, worked on the project from April through August of last year.

They field tested it last fall and are perfecting the design.

"Four people on our team graduated from Kansas State," Lagergren said.

Lagergren said he graduated with a degree in business marketing, Dr. Sushil Dwyer graduated with a doctoral degree in agricultural engineering, and Alan VanNahmen and Joe Lutgen graduated with degrees in mechanical engineering technology.

Other team members include Ken Jackson and his son Glen, who brought their respective metal-working and computer skills for Texas and Kansan Jeff Hawkins, who offered his welding skills.

"It's very rare to have eight people come together with the same drive," Lagergren said.

Glen Jackson, senior project engineer, said he started the initial layout on the computer.

"My major function was design-layout," Jackson said. "It was quite a rewarding experience."

Jackson said the team worked 12 to 14 hours a day on the project.

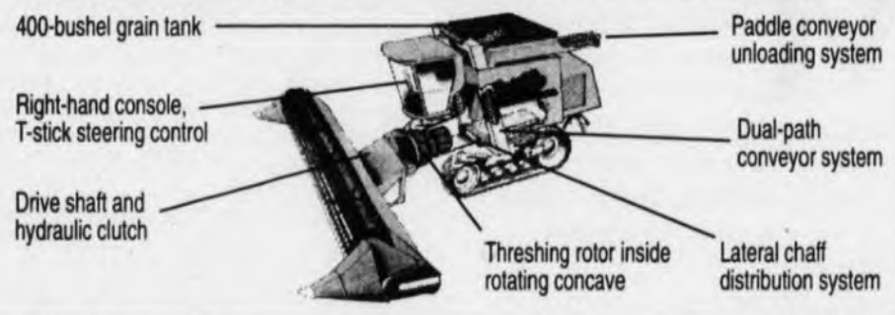
Joe Lutgen, project engineer, said he enjoyed working on the project.

"Everyone on the team was open to ideas," he said.

Lutgen said each member of the team had a key in the end design.

"We couldn't have accomplished this goal without a tremendously dedicated team," Lagergren said.

Underwood said he hopes to have the combine in production by 1997.



"When you wonder if you are headed the right direction in school, just make sure you follow your dream. Many people don't trust their instincts and end up letting a dream slide away," Lagergren said.

Lagergren said they were close to making their dream a reality and hope to pursue many other projects.

"We need many more people doing what we are doing ... this is what made America great," he said.

The trial and tribulations of pursuing American dream are chronicled in a book, "Dream Reaper" to be released by Knopf Publishing next year, Lagergren said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Make Anderson listen to us about parking

The administration is going to have to make a hasty decision about the parking problem.

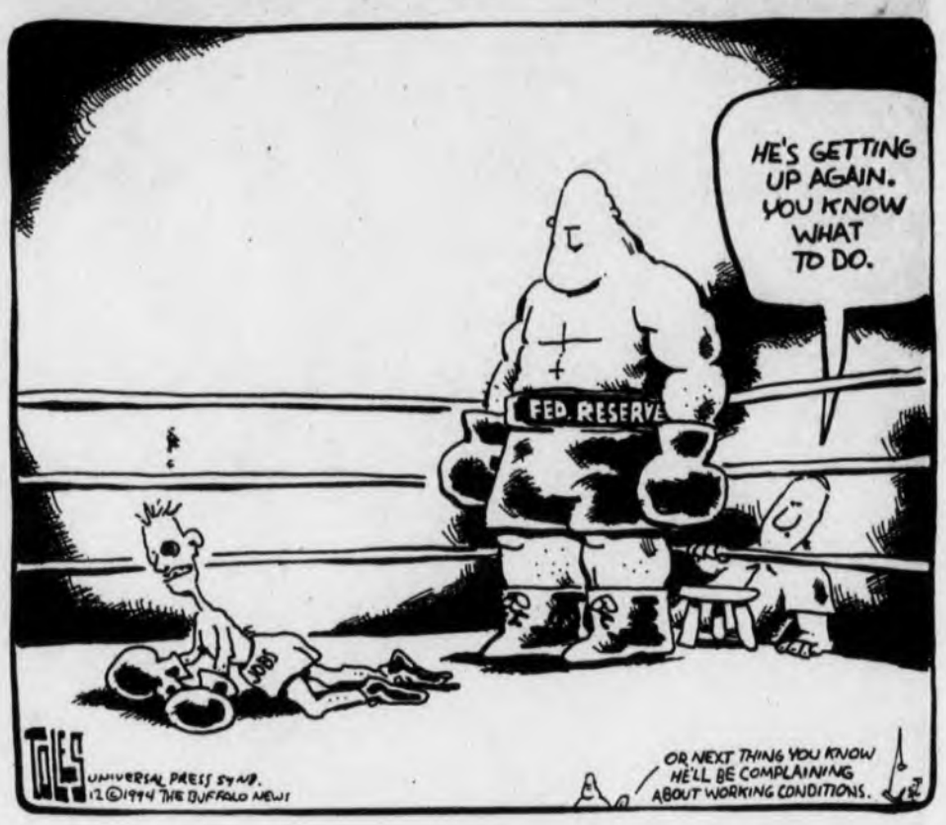
Campus sidewalks aren't the only slippery thing around here. The parking problem has been a slippery subject on the K-State campus for years.

During the semester break, the administration will decide on possible solutions to the parking situation that will go before the Kansas Board of Regents for approval.

It's a relief to see the powers that be finally acting on a topic. Any attempts at a solution are better than throwing a lot of money into studies and surveys of problems that don't go anywhere.

One down side is that the decisions will be made while Student Senate and the K-State students are away. Another down side is that because of time constraints, administration will not be able to seriously consider the surveys before any decisions are made.

Student Senate is addressing this topic tonight, and the Collegian is discussing it right now in this editorial. It is an effort to fight for student input in student-related issues, but it is more than likely too little and too late.



The Collegian and Student Senate should have been telling students about the administration disregarding us when they first found out about it.

We all dropped the ball; we missed the boat; we chatted about it when we should have shouted. We are guilty as charged.

What can we do now? We can hope it's not too late.

Go to Anderson Hall. Raise your voices so the administration will have to hear and listen to the students.

TOLES

Don't call me; I'm eyeball-less

My 10-year-old son, Dallas, has a paper route. He delivers for that "other newspaper" (which, to enhance clarification, will be referred to as that "other" newspaper) in Manhattan — you know, the one with the smaller circulation.

BRAD SEABOURN

Seriously, I know of several U.S. Congresspeople who regularly read the Collegian, but I know of no such equally important person or persons who faithfully read that "other" newspaper.

This is not meant to imply there is anything WRONG with the "other" newspaper. I don't subscribe to it, but then I don't subscribe to ANY newspaper. I get all the news I need or want from an on-line computer service (which will henceforth be referred to as "on-line computer service").

This, of course, is the future of news dissemination. It is neat and clean. No more vast amounts of wasted paper. No more of that black stuff all over your hands that ultimately gets transferred to other parts of your body during the performance of natural bodily functions.

One useful aspect of receiving your daily news via computer is YOU CAN MAKE UP YOUR OWN NEWS. Yes! It's true! You can do wonderful things with a computer and electronic news. If you don't like a particular AP news headline, well, then, you can change it!

This is easily done by combining parts of headlines from different news stories. For instance, "Newt Gingrich Becomes Speaker Of The House" and "Tadpoles Carried Into Space On Shuttle Mission" can be miraculously transformed into "Newt Gingrich Becomes Tadpole on Shuttle Mission," or, "Speaker Of The House Carried Into Space," whichever seems appropriate.

Another convenient aspect of getting your news by computer is — surprise! — YOU DON'T HAVE TO DELIVER IT. What a concept! And, since my son won't have to deliver the paper, that means no more calls at 3 a.m. on Sunday mornings from people who want to know why my son has not delivered their paper, OR who can't find their paper because they have not bothered to open their door and look outside, OR who don't understand why they don't have a paper even though they have not paid their bill for two months, OR who want to know why they have to walk a few feet outside their door to get the paper (as opposed to having it hand-delivered to them in bed with coffee and donuts), and the list goes on.

MAYBE you think I end up answering most of these stupid calls. MAYBE you think I sound a little hostile. Well, MAYBE you are right. Nothing personal you understand, but if the little red button were near my thumb I would launch a whole herd of nuclear missiles in the general direction of these people's homes when they call.

Since thermonuclear destruction on a massive scale is not a readily available response (to the great relief of most of you reading this column: "Kansas Man Nukes Eastern Half of State"), I have developed a fine-tuned, totally harmless defense mechanism against these callers. The following is a true story, but the names have been changed to protect the ignorant.

(ringing phone)

Me: Hello?

Irate caller: Is this the paperboy's house?

Me: Yes. This is HIS house — he OWNS it. I am only the paperboy's father. I earn enough money to pay more than half the bills and mortgage here, but I don't own the house. My 10-year-old, unemployed son does.

Irate caller: Uh ... yes, well, I can't read my paper (long pause).

Me: You can't read your paper ... WELL WHY THE HECK NOT?

Irate caller: I can't read my paper because it is torn, like someone threw it too hard and it skidded on the concrete for a long way.

Me: My son doesn't throw the papers (whoever heard of such a thing), he carries them. Most likely, the paper was torn when the delivery person tossed the bundle from his speeding starship as he flew by at warp factor nine.

Irate caller: Well, you would have thought that whoever ROLLED the papers would have NOTICED that some were torn.

Me: Yes, you would have thought, but everyone in our house was born without eyeballs. We are a completely EYEBALL-LESS family. So you can imagine how difficult it must be for us to floss our teeth, let alone spot a torn newspaper. Even our two dogs — BORN WITHOUT EYEBALLS.

Oh, they run into a few trees now and then when we play fetch, but other than that, they seem to have adjusted quite well. However, you can't stand in one place for too long because they sometimes mistake you for a tree and hike their leg on you. I have never actually SEEN them do this, you understand, but I have on many an occasion felt the wet, warm ...

Irate caller: Yes, yes, I understand. Very sorry to have bothered you. Good-bye.

As you can see, this method works quite well. However, since I am a firm believer in giving our customers personal attention, I have an even better method for dealing with anyone who has any further complaints regarding delivery of the paper: please stop by my son's house. Enter the back yard. Close your eyes, and stand VERY STILL. Imagine you are a tree. Someone will be there to greet you shortly.

Administration stifles students' parking ideas

The issue is parking. The issue is always parking. And once again, the folks over in Anderson Hall have sent the students the proverbial "Up Yours" card.

DAN LEWERENZ

You may remember hearing about a survey meant to determine attitudes toward parking on campus. The results of this survey would be used to establish a course of action.

This did not happen. And administrative sabotage is the most likely suspect in the death of responsible initiative.

This summer, the administration decided, after all those years of ignoring student cries for parking reform, that something needed to be done.

Don't let that altruistic end fool you, though. You can be sure that they have their own motive for acting now (remember that hotel-convention center that came up a couple times last year?).

To determine the best course of action, they developed a survey, meant to compile the attitudes of students, faculty and staff. This survey was completed during the summer.

Why did the administration wait until the middle of the semester to send this survey out? I have a theory, but we'll get to that later.

Members of student government were excited about the prospect of an official administrative response to student concerns. That excitement lasted until the decision-making process was laid out.

The survey results were to be completed this week, effectively removing Faculty Senate (whose last meeting of the semester was Tuesday) from the process and allowing Student Senate only a couple of days to evaluate the results and make suggestions.

Adding insult to injury, the administration had planned on making any decision themselves (while listening to the views of Student Senate, of course). Senators and members of Student Body President Jeff Peterson's cabinet railed at this suggestion, forcing the administration to reconsider.

The end result was some hybrid parking cabal, consisting of five students,0 including Peterson and Senate Parking and Campus Safety Committee Chair Michelle Meier and three others. They would make the final decision in mid-December, after hearing the suggestions of Senate.

But no suggestions will be forthcoming. It's not that Senate has dropped the ball. The powers that be have denied Senate the opportunity, again delaying the publication of the survey results. Meier and Peterson were informed last Thursday that they would get copies of the survey results on Dec. 12, a date conveniently located during finals week.

Here's my theory. The Anderson Hall crowd already had an idea of what to do about parking, but they had to make the process look democratic. By sending out hundreds of surveys, they could pretend to garner campus opinions. They would then do what they wanted to do all along.

When Student Government got in the way and demanded a voice, the administration conceded. But they scheduled the completion of the survey for after the final Senate meeting (as the dead week meeting is traditionally canceled).

When it became apparent that Senate would meet during dead week, Anderson again delayed the release of survey results until finals week. But the pressure is on, they tell us, as they must have their recommendation in to the Kansas Board of Regents by Jan. 4.

Sorry, no student input on this multi-million dollar project. Maybe next time (ha, ha, ha).

So the issue becomes more than parking. It becomes one of integrity. Do the administrators have the best interest of K-State students in mind when they devise these schemes? Or are we just a speed bump on the road to the next level?

To Anderson Hall, I say this: Students are the heart of the University. And when the heart is cut out, the patient usually dies.

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

Christians unite: organize against Fred Phelps

The Rev. Fred Phelps has catapulted himself back into the headlines once again.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Phelps and his small but vocal entourage protested the sold-out Nov. 13 speeches given by poet Maya Angelou at the Topeka Performing Arts Center. Phelps and his cohorts were protesting her appearance because they say she is a lesbian.

According to Eric McHenry of the Topeka Capitol-Journal, Phelps and company swarmed Angelou's limousine as she twice tried to enter the TPAC that day. Witnesses say the yelling left her visibly shaken. In the aftermath of the confrontations, Angelou canceled her scheduled appearance at Emporia State University.

Angelou, no matter her sexual practices, is one of the most courageous people you could ever hope to meet. She has survived incredible tribulations, yet has managed to be an inspiration. But in spite of her fortitude and courage, Phelps may be an obstacle Angelou wants to avoid.

The personification of extreme hatred or love attracts and mesmerizes people in an inexplicable way. This was true of Siddhartha, Mohammed, Jesus Christ, Josef Stalin and Adolph Hitler.

It's also true of Fred Phelps. If you get close enough to the man in person, you will see in Phelps' beady eyes, ruddy cheeks and puckered mouth a human incarnation of evil. It's dazzling in much the same way the old newsreels of Benito Mussolini are.

No wonder Angelou is backing down. It's terrifying when you look Satan in the face and see he's trying to wear a halo.

But Angelou isn't a Kansan or a Topekan. This isn't her community of which she should be ashamed. Phelps isn't her problem to live with. It's ours.

To answer Cain's ancient question, we all are indeed our brothers' keepers. We all are responsible when Phelps and his followers stand out on street corners blaspheming the Word of God with their signs and there aren't scores more people counter-protesting with the verses of the Bible that celebrate God's love for everyone.

We are all responsible when Phelps is allowed to be the public-relations outlet for Christianity in Kansas.

We are all responsible when non-Christians and liberal Christians make up the only sizable public opposition to Phelps.

When so many people claim to dislike what he does but do nothing about it, we are all responsible.

With the exception of some Episcopalians, Congregationalists and a few others, no other Christians are setting up organized opposition to Phelps' claims that God hates people.

Even Paul Hill, the convicted murderer whose targets happened to be performing abortions, is disowned by mainstream pro-life advocates. Judging by their passivity toward Phelps, mainstream conservatives don't mind him. Baptists don't mind that they are linked to him or that a Baptist church is his hate headquarters.

It is necessary to put Phelps' message back into proper perspective within the Christian community. To achieve this end, Christians must become as concerned with policing our own as well as protesting policies or behaviors with which we peacefully and respectfully disagree.

This means more Christians have to pro-actively take to the streets and fax machines in an effort to proclaim to non-Christians and Christians alike that Phelps doesn't speak for all or even most of us.

This means that God's universal and unconditional love can't be allowed to continue to be overshadowed by hatemongers and blasphemers of Phelps' ilk.

This means not keeping Phelps at a safe arm's distance by writing him off as a harmless zealot.

This means looking him square in the eye, loving him as God commands and fighting him.

This means being human, even to the inhumane.

This means agape instead of hate.

This means you.

Angel Tree promotes reading to needy children

LESLEY MOSS
Collegian

The K-State Union Bookstore is using angels to encourage children to read.

Tiffany Bunch, sophomore in business and employee of the Union Bookstore, said an Angel Tree has been placed in the bookstore to promote reading and to help people in Manhattan.

The bookstore is helping needy children in the Manhattan area to receive books this Christmas.

The Angel Tree is on the ground floor of the Union Bookstore.

"This Christmas, we're feeding their minds as well as their bodies," Ruth Sidhom, tradebook buyer for the bookstore and organizer of the Angel Tree, said.

Sidhom said the bookstore has worked in cooperation with Big Brothers/Big Sisters and the Flint Hills Breadbasket to provide 300 names of needy children.

"The children range in age from 2 to 14 years," Bunch said.

"There is a name on one side of a white paper angel and the age and sex of the child on the other side," she said.

Sidhom said the Angel Tree idea was started several years ago at a bookstore in Blytheville, Ark.

"A contributor comes in and buys a book for a child at a 25-percent discount," she said. "The contributor can then sign the back of the angel and put their name on a star to be placed on the tree also."

"Some people chose to put 'from a friend' or 'from Santa,'" Sidhom said.

"We've had real interesting things happen," she said. "A professor from the education department had taken contributions from his students, and he came over and picked up 30 books."

This is the first year the Union Bookstore has had the Angel Tree, Sidhom said.

"Right now, about half of the angels on the tree are without a book," she said.

Sidhom said a contributor can choose any book in the bookstore, bring in cash, or bring in any new book and contribute it.

"A book that is brought in has to be new because we are giving these as gifts," she said.

Bunch said some contributors have taken their effort to heart.

"Lots of students have donated books," Bunch said. "One student that lives in the residence halls bought four books and put little notes to the children in the books."

Sidhom said the white paper angels are used as gift tags to wrap the books.

The bookstore will deliver the books in mass to Big Brothers/Big Sisters and the Flint Hills Breadbasket, where the master lists are being kept.

"The Angel Tree has been met with a fair amount of approval, and it could grow throughout the years," Sidhom said.

ANGEL TREE

Contributions to the Angel Tree will be taken until Dec. 21, and the books will be wrapped and delivered on Dec. 22.

High school changes date to accommodate families

DEANA TESKE
Collegian

Manhattan High School graduates of 1995 will receive their diplomas on Sunday, May 28.

The U.S.D. 383 Board of Education voted on the graduation date on Wednesday night. It had been tradition to have commencement exercises on the Tuesday following Memorial Weekend.

This year's graduating seniors, their parents and Principal Sylvester Benson proposed to change this date because of the difficulty distant family members have to attend. The cost of having graduation at Bramlage Coliseum on Sunday will cost more than the Tuesday night arrangement.

Several parents have already agreed to offset that cost if needed, Benson said.

Students will also buy their gowns instead of renting, which will cut back on the amount of staff working with graduation preparations, he said.

The board also accepted several gifts to be given to the district. These included a $5,000 batting cage for the high school baseball team from city manager Jim Pearson and the city of Manhattan, $2,500 from the Northview PTO to be put toward the purchase of computer supplies and a $10,000 scoreboard for Bishop Stadium from the Pepsi Cola Bottling Company. This scoreboard will replace the original, placed in 1966, Meryl Wilson said.

Donna Keyser and Mike Mayo, architect with Ken Ebert Design Group, updated the board on the building projects in the district.

They proposed a Central Preparation Kitchen to be built at the district warehouse where the district's food is stored.

"The most economical long-term option calls for a central prep kitchen with cook/chill equipment," Mayo said.

Keyser explained the cook/chill method of preparing the food until it is just barely cooked and then cooling it at a constant temperature.

"This way, the food can be easily and safely warmed in our existing warming kitchens in the individual schools," she said.

Keyser said the costs of food will decrease as well as the inventory because the food can be prepared well in advance and be used as needed.

"Instead of replacing obsolete equipment at each of the four existing kitchens, we will be purchasing one set for one location," Mayo said.

The board will receive a formal recommendation at its Jan. 4 meeting.

CU ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT ACCUSED OF RACIST HIRING

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — The National Rainbow Coalition said Colorado's athletic administration, not its football program, is racist, and a threatened boycott is just "a weapon in our arsenal."

Charles Farrell, of the Rainbow Coalition, said in an interview published Wednesday in the Rocky Mountain News that the group's criticism had been misunderstood, and all NCAA athletic programs are being focused on by the Coalition.

Colorado's hiring of a white football coach rather than a black coach made the school the Coalition's first target, Farrell said.

Rick Neuheisel was hired to replace Bill McCartney, passing over assistant Bob Simmons. Neuheisel, who is 33, has been at CU less than a year, while Simmons, 46, who is black, has been a CU assistant seven years.

Cats hammer Howard at Bramlage Coliseum

K-State wins with 2nd-half burst

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

Coach Tom Asbury knows he will see good things happen from his Wildcats — if they're playing in the second half.

K-State rolled past Howard 93-61 at Bramlage Coliseum Wednesday.

"Maybe we can just start all these games at halftime," Asbury said after the game. K-State led at the half by 11, but Asbury said it wasn't enough because Howard's Tommy Brown had 14 points in the first half.

K-State 93
Howard 61

"It was an ugly first half. They settled down and played a little in the second half."

Played a little, they did.

K-State shot almost 77 percent from the field in the second half and 64 percent from three-point range.

"I told our players coming out of the locker room that the first five minutes of the second half would be extremely crucial," Howard's coach Mike McLeese said.

K-State opened fire in the first five minutes, scoring 12 points with the help of balanced scoring from the Cats, including a trey from guard Brian Gavin.

"They really kept the hammer down on us," McLeese said.

The Cats shot 61 percent overall in the game, which is a Wildcat best since Jan. 3, 1993, in a 75-62 victory against Oklahoma State in Stillwater, Okla.

"We talked a lot about passing these last few days, because our field-goal percentage was low," Demond Davis said. "That's the key — we need to get better looks and open shots to get our percentage up."

Another best for the team was the six three-point shots that fell.

The previous best was against Alabama, when the Cats made five.

The game was a season record-breaker in individual offensive statistics, as well.

Davis, Elliot Hatcher, Stanley Hamilton and Mark Young all scored personal bests.

Davis led the club with 16 points, followed by Hamilton and Hatcher with 15.

Asbury said he is especially pleased with Hatcher's play.

"Elliot is just getting better and better," Asbury said.

"We knew this when we recruited him. We needed a point guard who could score, and he does a great job of creating shots."

He said Young, who had 13 points for the evening, is coming around more and more on the court, also.

"You can see the improvement in both practice and games," Asbury said. "He's got great vision and can really see the court."

He said Young is especially good at passing, and the overall team is getting better in its fast breaks and transition offense.

"We are getting better in those situations," he said. "We spend time on it each and every day, and it's showing up in the game."

The win puts the Cats at 3-2 on the season, and Howard fell to 1-4. Next up for the Cats is Coppin State, which will be played Saturday in Bramlage.

"They are a team that we need to be ready for," Asbury said. "They could come here and beat us."

Bench makes contribution to K-State victory

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

K-State's bench came up big once again in last night's 93-61 victory against Washington, D.C.'s Howard University.

The Wildcats dominated the Bison, 41-19, in bench scoring as Stanley Hamilton, Mark Young and Belvis Noland all scored in double figures.

Coach Tom Asbury said he was happy with the play of his reserves.

"I was pleased with the play of some of the guys who haven't played very much," Asbury said. "Our bench has been giving us a lot."

Asbury said he was most pleased with the play of Mark Young and Stanley Hamilton, who both posted career highs in scoring with 13 and 15, respectively.

"You could probably justify starting Mark and Stan very easily," Asbury said. "We've kind of taken the philosophy that it's more important to finish than to start, and these guys aren't grousing about it."

"They know that if they play well, they're going to continue to play."

Hamilton said he doesn't care whether he starts or not.

"It's fun being the sparkplug," Hamilton said. "If we start to get down, I just come into the game and get us going.

"The only thing I care about is being in at the end, when it's crunch time."

Although Hamilton managed a career high in scoring, he said he was most pleased with some of the other aspects of his game.

"I was happy with the way I ran the court, my rebounding and my assists," Hamilton said. "I love to give the ball up.

"If a person pops open, I can get him the ball."

Young came into the game and contributed with three assists on the fast break, including a 60-foot bomb to Hamilton for a lay-up.

"He's got great vision and can really hit the open man," Asbury said. "He's very unselfish."

Young also electrified the crowd by skying in and dunking a missed shot and by finishing off the game with a break-away reverse jam.

Jacobson happy to be in Midwest

"If I could go to school for free, I could buy a pickup. So I bought a Ford Ranger — a purple one."
BRIT JACOBSON
freshman basketball team

JULIE KUHLMAN
Collegian

She's from Alaska, but her heart now lies with the midwest and K-State.

Brit Jacobson may not have been a familiar name to many in Kansas since Jacobson has lived in Alaska for the majority of her life — but her name was a household one to many college coaches.

K-State was fortunate to sign the Kodak high-school all-American over teams such as Boston College and Colorado.

Jacobson said she has always loved the Midwest, and when she met Coach Agler and saw the kindliness of the University, she was sold.

Her loyalty is already deep with the Cats, and she said she is enjoying being a country girl — something she has always wanted to be.

"I love K-State. The Midwest has always fascinated me," she said. "I've always liked the country part of it."

Going to K-State to play basketball also gave her an opportunity to purchase something she has always wanted.

"If I could go to school here for free, I could buy a pickup," Jacobson said. "So, I bought a Ford Ranger — a purple one."

Jacobson said K-State has been all of the things she hoped it would be.

"There's so much tradition here," Jacobson said. "All of the old buildings from 1860 and all of the nice people — I fell in love with K-State."

K-State is likely to fall in love with Jacobson as well. She has found her way onto the starting line-up this season even though Coach Agler said she has a lot to learn.

"It has been difficult at times getting used to things," Jacobson said.

"Coming out of high school and playing in the Big Eight is hard. I had to get used to my team."

She also had to get used to a new climate, which is one thing she is not so sure she's fond of.

"It's so humid here," she said. "I miss my mountains and the snow. It's beautiful in Alaska. The mountains there are much bigger than the ones in Colorado."

However, she said the weather may be one of the reasons Kansans are so friendly.

"In Alaska, we don't get as much sunlight and we get really dull days where it's overcast, so people aren't as cheery," she said.

"For a person to live in Alaska for more than five years is really unique," she said. "My father is a principal and in one year, he lost 200 students and regained 200."

Her father, who was an NAIA all-America linebacker in Idaho, is Jacobson's personal trainer, as well as her role model, she said.

"I would do running at the track, and he would be there to push me, and my mother would be there with the stopwatch."

Jacobson, who admits one of the people she most admires is Flo-Jo, was also a high-school stand out in track and was named the Alaska Female Track and Field Athlete of the Year for 1994.

She was also a member of three cross country as well as track and field state-championship squads.

So, why did what Agler said could be the best athlete in the conference choose hoops over track?

"I don't know, I have just always really liked basketball," she said.

She said track is also an individual sport, and in basketball, she is part of a team.

"I would do anything for the team. If it meant sitting on the bench and handing out water bottles during time-outs, I would do that — I would do anything for this team to be at the level it should be."

Jacobson said the man who can get them at the level they should be is Agler.

"He really impresses me," she said. "He has set goals for not just being mediocre, and I believe we can be extremely good."

Kahunas clobber netter competition

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI
Collegian

The Big Kahunas are the all-University men's volleyball champions for the third-consecutive year.

To get there, they had to play back-to-back games against the fraternity champions and the winners of the residence hall league.

Phi Kappa Theta fell to the Kahunas 15-4, 15-3 in the first game, and Goodnow I lost by the same score in the second. For the Kahunas, it was total domination.

"Both teams were very good," Robert Segarra, post-graduate student in microbiology, said. "To be champions of their leagues, they had to be.

"But we've been playing together so long, we tend to pass a lot better than everyone else. It's the experience factor."

Segarra is a member of the men's K-State volleyball team that went 10-4 this season. He said all three teams that made it to the finals had at least one K-State player on it.

"I really think that the quality of volleyball has picked up," Segarra said. "All the teams in the finals have club players, and that really raised the level of competition."

Segarra said he was also happy with the level of the officiating.

"The officiating was very, very good all year long," he said.

"They did a good job of setting the tempo for some very competitive games, and hardly anyone yelled at the referees. They did a heck of a job this year."

Charles Firestone, senior in economics and advertising, was a vital part of the Kahunas' championship run. He had several big kills against Goodnow to put the victory on ice.

Rash on private parts not from hot tub

Dear Cassandra,

A few days after Thanksgiving break, I woke up with a rash on my private parts. The only thing I can conclude is that I got it hot tubbing Colorado-style with a group of fellow skiers. No one has fessed up spreading this nasty virus, but by now, everyone probably has it. Should I approach my fellow hot tubbers with my dilemma?

Sincerely,
We're all in this together

Dear We're all in this together,

It's unlikely that you received this rash from fellow hot tubbers, even if you were buck naked. (Unless of course, you were doing more than hot tubbing.) I'm not sure what it is you have, but most likely, you'd need direct contact with someone or something else infected. My advice to you is to see a doctor and hold off on telling your friends. If they have the same rash on their privates, they'll know.

Sardine-packed bar sends strong message

AMY ZIEGLER

As I walk in, the bar is filled to the brim with young college students.

The drums are rolling, the energy level is high, and a group of guys in the front row has started a mosh pit.

What a sight.

Seeing the bar packed like sardines after the last call sends a strong message about the changing attitude of Manhattan.

The people who were at Bombers on Saturday night weren't just there for the beer and to see people and be seen.

They were there to hear some good live music from one of Manhattan's up and coming bands, Coolerspoon.

While the band performed onstage, a group of guys body surfed, held up lighters, threw their arms around each other and did some head banging.

It was refreshing to see such a strong appreciation for live music. Bombers was as crowded as I've ever seen it on a weekend night.

Paul Bosunitz, senior in radio/television, said for playing for only a month, the band has a solid future ahead of it.

"Manhattan's not a band kind of town, but with some publicity and some original songs, Coolerspoon could be one of the premier live bands in Kansas," Bosunitz said.

As the letter to the editor pointed out, Coolerspoon just got started, but I feel that if the band keeps on practicing and performing, it could really put our town on the map.

I didn't write about the band members because they're Greek, and I don't think a band has to be triple platinum to get some coverage.

The reason why I wrote about them is because I have a strong faith in a possible future for our music scene, and I feel that the local bands in Manhattan deserve a decent audience for their shows.

I think we have definitely made some progress in the the area of live music.

Snookie's Bar has had a few sold-out shows this semester, including 311 and Truck Stop Love.

After getting these kinds of responses from the crowds, I think the Aggieville bars are realizing the musical diversity of K-State students.

I think we have a long way to go, but we have come a long way since the beginning of the fall semester.

If you want a study break during finals, go down to Aggieville, expand your horizons and check out some of our local music talent.

Amy Ziegler is a sophmore in print jorurnalism, and is an expert on '70s 'feel-good' rock. No, really!

Vet med delivers 500 cans after 2 weeks

STEFFANY CARREL
Collegian

The College of Veterinary Medicine presented the fruits of its labor Tuesday to Ruth Ann Wefald and the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

In a special presentation, vet med donated nearly 500 cans that they have collected in their Cats for Cans food drive during the past two weeks.

Ron Elmore, associate dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said Wefald contacted them, explaining the Cats for Cans program and asking them to help.

"Basically, we just challenged every one of the faculty, students and staff to bring in at least one can," Elmore said. "We wanted to keep it simple and easy for everybody."

Elmore said he hopes their efforts will encourage other colleges to become involved.

Shirley Bramhall, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket, attended the presentation and said she has been impressed with the new ways students keep finding to collect food.

"The creativeness and willingness to collect food just astounds me," Bramhall said. "And it's events like these that really help."

To date, the Breadbasket has collected more than 54,000 pounds of food in this year's Cats for Cans food drive, Bramhall said.

CATS FOR CANS

To date, Cats for Cans has collected more than 54,000 pounds of food for the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"It's just incredible," she said. "This is the fastest-growing food drive I've ever seen."

Samuel Rivera, junior in veterinary medicine and president of the student chapter of the American Veterinary Medicine Association, said this is the first year the college has been involved in the food drive.

"The students have been very supportive of this idea," Rivera said.

"I think if we keep being involved every year, it will grow and grow, and we will continue to find more ways to raise more and more cans."

Wefald, who has been involved with the Cats for Cans program since it began in 1991, said she thought vet med's efforts were wonderful.

"It's great to see a lot of students participate in this effort for the holiday season," Wefald said. "I'm just extremely proud of the K-State students."

Costs to come from overtime by street crews

McCallum said most of the cost of cleaning up from this storm will come from the overtime hours put in by the forestry and the street crews.

The Manhattan Fire Department reported responding to 52 storm-related calls between 1:30 p.m. Tuesday and 2:00 a.m. Wednesday.

Battalion Chief Jerry Snyder said there was no fire damage from the storm. Most of the calls were reports of downed power lines.

Snyder said the Fire Department was called to Lafene Health Center twice when the fire alarm went off.

The first time was due to the power outage, and the second alarm resulted from water leakage, French said. Snyder said the department had five trucks running to respond to all the calls.

"Trying to keep up with all of them was the hard part," he said.

▶ ALCOHOL

Options exist for driving drunk

KIM HALL

Drink, eat and be merry. But don't drink if you plan to drive this holiday season.

Jayme Elliott, community coordinator for the Northeast Kansas Regional Prevention Center, said the number of lives taken in alcohol-related traffic accidents is alarmingly high.

"Of all deaths in America last year, approximately 17,461 Americans died in alcohol-related crashes," she said, "and one-third of all those people were under age 25."

Elliott said society must change its attitude about drinking in order to bring this number down.

"We don't have to have drinks at every single party," she said.

"That kind of thinking might help change the costs of all the problems that alcohol creates in our society," Elliott said.

She said, however, it is important to realize that people are going to drink during the holiday season.

"There's going to be a lot of parties and a lot of celebrating," she said.

"But it's important to remember that you don't have to drink if you don't want to."

Elliott said if you are planning to be host to a party, make sure you have non-alcoholic beverages available.

If you have guests who have been drinking and want to leave, she said it is your responsibility to make sure those people aren't driving.

"Even after one drink, there's a difference in judgment and coordination," Elliott said.

Roxanne Ayotte, assistant director of the alcohol and other drug education service, said there are several alternatives to driving under the influence.

"Taking a cab is the standard idea," she said.

Other popular ideas are having a sober friend drive or walking if your destination is within distance.

She said letting time pass is the only real way to sober up.

"Eating food and drinking water to dilute the alcohol may also help," she said.

But the most important thing to do this holiday season, Ayotte said, is watch out for each other.

Wash hands, eat healthy foods to avoid infections

Fortunately, most people who have been infected with EBV are immune from getting the virus again.

But what can you do to prevent these infections in the first place?

Currie said an individual should eat a well-balanced diet, use good personal hygiene, wash hands frequently and, most of all, avoid situations where contact with a contagious person is likely.

If you do find yourself with several symptoms, Currie said Lafene offers medicine and stress counseling at a low cost.

"Student health fees have paid for the doctor's visit," she said, "providing you keep your appointment."

Danny Rodriguez, junior in social science, said he recently had the flu and strep-throat symptoms.

"My throat just gave way," he said. "It felt like it was a centimeter wide."

Rodriguez said he went to Lafene, but he didn't buy any medicine.

"It took about three days to get over it," he said.

Eileen Meyeer, general manager of Streetside Records, helps wrap a brand new Dodge Dakota pickup truck. B-104.7 was doing a spot on the air about the gift-wrapping booth at Streetside Records and announced the first truck brought to the store would be gift-wrapped. Karri Brauman, who gave the truck to her husband, was the first to arrive with a pickup truck.

When they won't fit under the tree, sometimes Santa leaves his presents by the curb.

For Eric Brauman, 1st lieutenant with the 1st MP Company at Fort Riley, the present he found waiting curbside was an entirely gift-wrapped pick-up truck.

Brauman, who returned to Kansas Thursday after five months in Guantanomo Bay, Cuba, was delivered by limousine to the storefront of Streetside Records in Manhattan, where his new Dodge Dakota, extended-cab truck was parked.

"He knows absolutely nothing about this," Brauman's wife, Karri, a dental receptionist, said as the truck was being wrapped just hours before his arrival.

"And I'm just not going to tell him anything until he gets here."

Karri said she bought the truck in November, even throwing in the bed liner her husband had said he wanted.

The saga began with Karri listening to B-104.7 when a DJ was talking about a gift-wrapping booth at Streetside Records to benefit the Manhattan AIDS Project and the Crisis Center.

"We were on the air at B-104.7 one day talking about our gift-wrapping booth, and the D.J., Dave Steele, asked us if we thought we had enough paper to wrap a pickup truck," Eileen Meyer, general manager of Streetside Records, said. "When I said yes, he announced that the first truck down to Streetside would be wrapped. That's how we got Karri."

Karri said she heard Meyer on the radio and drove to Streetside.

"I don't know what possessed me," Karri said. "But I decided he deserved it for Christmas."

Before her husband arrived, Karri speculated about Eric's response.

"I think he'll think I'm nuts," she said. "But I think he'll appreciate a nice, new truck compared to his old beast."

When the limousine pulled up and Eric got out, he was greeted by a small crowd of well-wishers outside the store welcoming him home.

When asked if he knew what was going on, he replied, "No," and was speechless as he set to work unwrapping the truck.

"I had an idea something was up when she brought me all the way to Manhattan," Eric said. "I thought it had to be something."

Eric said he was indeed surprised, because his wife had told him he couldn't buy a truck until April.

"But she knew I wanted it. I looked at one just like it."

The cranberry-red truck was totally wrapped in red and black wrapping paper, complete with a big, burgundy bow, with the help of Streetside Records and B-104.7 radio employees.

Karri Brauman hands over the keys to a new pickup truck, which she gave to her husband, Eric, as an early Christmas present. Eric just returned Thursday from a five-month tour of duty in Guantanomo Bay, Cuba.

Campaign to send letters

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Christmas vacation may be a good time for students and parents to learn more about Access the Future.

Jeff Peterson, student body president, said letters will be sent to each student's home address during the break.

"We decided to send the letter during Chirstmas break so that students and parents would have more of a chance to discuss the issue together," Peterson said.

Peterson said Access the Future has two goals. Students will campaign to keep tuition low and to keep state-run universities open to all Kansas students.

Ten years ago, students paid 25 percent of tuition cost, while they pay 35 percent today. The Kansas Board of Regents has tried every year since 1987 to legislate some form of qualified admissions.

First, students will inform Kansas citizens about these issues and urge them to take action.

Kansas will be divided into 12 districts, and a team of student speakers will go to each district, Peterson said. Another student will organize media publicity for the speakers.

Mike Zamrzla, chief of staff, said the goal of this effort is to gain public support for a lobbying effort.

"Legislators listen to people who write letters and make phone calls," Zamrzla said. "We will then be in a better position when we lobby the state legislature in the spring."

A reason for this campaign is to make student voices heard in state government.

"We designed this campaign after the Partnership for Excellence Program was discussed," Peterson said. "Tuition would rise 27 percent over three years, and students did not seem to have an opinion."

The $25,000 needed to fund Access the Future will come from several sources. Peterson is using his $1,000 travel budget for the campaign. The group will also use $12,800 from the Student Life Enrichment Account, along with private donations.

Peterson said he is very optimistic about the outcome of Access the Future.

$17,000 discussed again

AMY SIMON
Collegian

After five hours of debate last week, several student senators wanted to reconsider the allocation of the Student Life Enrichment Account.

Thursday night, Brian Bowen, engineering senator, made the motion to reconsider the bill. Bowen said the reason for this motion was that he believed the hand-vote on the previous bill was miscounted.

"I asked for a recount of the original vote, but the motion was ruled out of order because the vote had already been announced," Bowen said. "If we vote again in the negative, I will accept that decision."

Bowen said he wanted to make sure a majority of senators agreed with the allocation of the $16,656.

John Potter, parliamentarian, then said Senate would have to repeal the bill. They could not simply reconsider because it had already been signed by the student body president.

A vote was not taken.

In other business, Scott Rottinghaus, Academic Affairs Committee chair, said a bill making teacher evaluations public is in committee. Rottinghaus said this will allow time to compromise with Faculty Senate.

"We wanted to get together with Faculty Senate and come up with a joint proposal that both sides could accept," he said.

At press time, senators were discussing elections and campaign regulations. They also planned to discuss eliminating kinesiology as a general academic requirement.

▶ TRUST FUND

Salina gets money for new hall

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN
Collegian

The K-State-Salina campus is receiving a gift of $2 million to build a new residence hall.

Bill and Jo Harbin, two K-State alumni, set up a trust with the KSU Foundation to fund the 68-bed hall, said David Weaver, vice president of real estate and investments at the KSU Foundation.

Harbin graduated from K-State in 1950 with a degree in architectural engineering and owned Harbin Construction Company in Salina, Weaver said.

Jo Harbin also attended K-State's College of Human Ecology, Weaver said.

The gift includes stock and land that will be sold by the foundation to fund the trust, he said.

Harbin said he decided to fund another residence hall because the one the campus has cannot accommodate all the students who want in.

"I knew the Salina campus didn't have room to put all students who applied to live in the dorm last year," Harbin said. "That's what the campus needed most."

The hall will be named Harbin Hall and could be open as soon as January 1996, Weaver said.

"We are bursting at the seams," Jack Henry, dean of the College of Technology at K-State-Salina, said. "Student services are critical to maintaining our growth, and this new residence hall answers a pressing problem.

"The Harbins' gift is both an enormous commitment and a statement of confidence in our people and programs. We are most grateful," Henry said.

Weaver said the college is now looking for more donors to expand Harbin Hall to a 100-bed residence hall.

Mary Calentine, development officer at the College of Technology, said people out there want K-State-Salina to succeed, and they are willing to help through contributions.

She said the Foundation is vital to the success of most all of the fundraising on campus.

"We could not do this without the KSU Foundation," Calentine said.

She said it is too early to know how much more money it would take to fund the extra 32 beds.

However, the goal is not the amount of money raised, she said.

"The goal is a residence hall the students are proud to live in."

▶ CAMPUS

Young debaters keep improving

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN
Collegian

The K-State debate team is doing well despite the fact that the team has only one upperclassman.

"I think the semester went really well considering how many underclassmen are on the team," Coach Susan Stanfield said.

Debater Isaac West, freshman in speech, political science and pre-law, said he agreed.

"We had a slow start, but we keep improving as the season goes on," West said.

The debate team has a goal to win the junior varsity national championship, he said.

"I think we're on track to make it," West said.

Another goal for the team is to make it into the top 64 teams in the country, West said, and the team may do even better than that now.

West said he is optimistic for the spring.

"Next semester is looking better," he said.

Grant Denny, freshman in speech and political science, said he spends about five hours a day preparing for competition.

Denny said most of the preparation is researching evidence on this semester's topic to present in a round of debate.

The topic this semester is, "Throughout the United States, more severe punishment of individuals convicted of violent crime would be desirable," Denny said.

He said for a typical tournament, the debate team leaves on Friday and doesn't return until late Sunday night.

Denny said he plans to stay with the debate team all four years of college.

"If you love it, you're willing to spend as much time as it takes," he said.

Denny's debate partner, Lori Davis, freshman in speech and psychology, said the team will do a lot of traveling. The team contains all freshmen and one sophomore, Davis said.

"Because we're a young squad, this is a rebuilding period. We want to develop a family so when we're upperclassmen, we will be a really good squad."

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ 90-YEAR-OLD WOMAN RUNS BOARDING HOUSE FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS

Age doesn't matter when it comes to running a boarding house.

Lula Dettmer, who will be 90 on Dec. 31, is still running a boarding house for college students.

"The house, which is located at 1734 Leavenworth Ave., is right across the street from Eugene Field School," Marylyn Johnson, Lula's daughter, said.

Johnson said her parents sold the family farm in 1959 and moved to Manhattan where they started a boarding house for college students.

"The rooms were already there," Johnson said.

Johnson said the people who lived in the house before her parents had run a boarding house for students.

"My parents just continued with the concept," Johnson said.

Johnson said her mother deals with students from grade school all the way up through college.

Kathy Chambers, senior in dietetics, said this would be her second year living at the boarding house.

"Everyone that stays here loves it," Chambers said.

Chambers said she learned about the house from a friend.

"I came up and really liked it," Chambers said.

Chambers said the location of the house was also appealing because it was close to campus.

"It's a nice home away from home," Chambers said.

Mitzi Eyestone, teacher at Eugene Field School, said Dettmer has been part of the adopt-a-grandparent program at the school for several years.

The program was started to try to get older people in the community into the school, Eyestone said.

Eyestone said the second graders go over to Dettmer's house, and she reads to them.

Chambers said Dettmer always has a plate of cookies for the kids.

Eyestone said Dettmer has been more than just a neighbor to the school.

"She's a real good role model for the kids," Eyestone said.

"She's just a really neat lady," Eyestone said.

▶ AG JOURNALISM STUDENT GETS SPRING INTERNSHIP WITH SEN. DOLE

While Old Man Winter has only recently blown into town, one K-State student is planning ahead for this spring.

Cori Herbers, junior in agricultural journalism, has been accepted as a spring intern for Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan. She will be working at his Senate office in Washington, D.C.

"I applied in October, and I just found out a week ago," Herbers said. "This is an opportunity I wouldn't want to pass up."

Herbers said she thought her previous experiences in agriculture helped her get the internship.

"This summer, I did an internship with the agriculture department with WIBW in Topeka," she said. "I did the farm markets, the farm news and was a part-time anchor."

While working for Dole, Herbers said she hopes she has a good chance of getting involved in the writing of briefing books for various topics.

"I'd really like to help with the 1995 Farm Bill," she said.

Ron Seeber, legislative correspondent and intern coordinator, said Herbers will have a variety of responsibilities.

"She'll be assisting with a lot of things, like talking to farmers, researching private-property rights, going to Senate hearings and meeting with different farm groups and wheat growers," Seeber said.

"And of course, there's the clerical work — assisting with the mail, running errands — those things that are just a part of being in an office."

Seeber said about one-third of Herbers' internship will be spent in Dole's soon-to-be Majority Leader's Office, which concentrates on pushing measures through the Senate, and the other two-thirds of her time will be spent in Dole's personal office, where she will be able to focus on agricultural issues.

"My first impression of Cori is that she has an outstanding background with regard to agriculture," Seeber said of their first meeting three weeks ago. "The school of agriculture at K-State spoke very highly of her, and that had a lot to do with the senator's decision to bring her into the intern program."

Herbers said in addition to working on agricultural issues, she would like to work with Dole and the media.

"He is the center of media attention," she said. "And since I'd like to be involved in broadcast journalism, it would be good to meet some of the media and make some great contacts — I'd love to meet Andrea Mitchell."

Herbers found out she will leave for her internship on Jan. 16 and will return to Kansas in mid-May.

"I was excited when I got accepted, but I was a little apprehensive, too," she said. "The same day I found out about this internship, I found out I have to have knee surgery next week," she said.

Herbers said her parents are excited for her, as well. However, they are feeling a bit skeptical of her leaving.

"This has been a difficult time for my family," she said. "My brother will be gone soon on an eight-month, 1,800-mile cattle drive, and I'm going to live in the crime capital of the nation for the next four months.

"If my parents don't already have gray hairs, they will when we get back."

MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian

In the spirit of competition and sportsmanship, Lori Navarrete, professor of special education, wipes the whipped cream from the face of Theresa Willich, senior in secondary education. The pie throwing was a reward to the group that collected the most cans for Cats for Cans. The students lost.

▶ CATS FOR CANS

Students get pie in face from faculty

JANELL COE
Collegian

Students and faculty competed against each other for a good cause.

The Second Annual Education Pie Throwing Cats For Cans competition took place at 6 p.m. Thursday in the lobby of Bluemont Hall.

This year, the education college collected 803 cans for the Cats for Cans project.

Theresa Willich, senior in secondary education/physical science and president of the College of Education Ambassadors, said last year the College of Education decided to get involved with the Cats For Cans project through the ambassador group.

"We're just continuing with it this year," Willich said.

The students and faculty collected cans from Dec. 1 to Dec. 8.

The faculty won the competition with 604 cans.

"It helps make the faculty work together," Nina Moore, senior in elementary education, said.

Moore said she asked five student leaders in the college to be on the ballot, who then nominated five faculty members to be on the ballot.

For each can that was donated, the person could vote for one of the five students or faculty on the ballot.

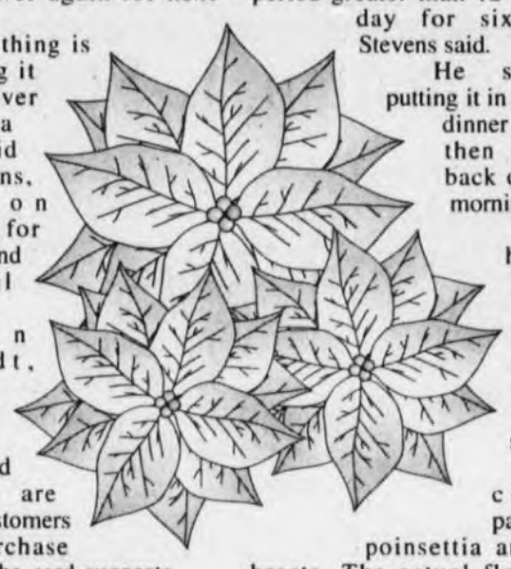
The top three students or faculty would receive a pie in the face.

"I think that we get a lot more cans this way," Moore said.

Moore, Willich and Heath Harding, senior in elementary education, received a pie in the face from faculty members Lori Navarrete, assistant professor of special education, Bette Simons, assistant professor of elementary education, and Tweed Ross, director of technology service.

"I think it's great," Ross said. "It goes for a good cause."

All cans go to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.



▶ HOLIDAY

Poinsettias are popular gifts

JULIE KRAMER
Collegian

Poinsettias are the No. 1-selling holiday potted plant in America, and many people give and receive them as holiday gifts.

Poinsettias don't have to be thrown out after the holidays are over. With proper care, they can keep their color up to Mother's Day and can flower again for next Christmas.

"The big thing is never letting it wilt, and never put it in a draft," said Alan Stevens, extension specialist for floriculture and ornamental horticulture.

Erin Borchardt, greenhouse manager at Horticultural Services, said care cards are handed to customers who purchase poinsettias. The card suggests giving the plant moderately bright light and moderate temperatures between 60 and 77 degrees.

If the pot is wrapped, holes should be cut in the bottom for drainage. Poinsettias should be watered when the soil feels dry or when the pot feels light when lifted. Water the plant enough so that the water runs through the drain holes in the bottom.

A poinsettia should never be put in a draft, such as by an outside door or a furnace duct, Stevens said.

"If exposed to a draft or lack of water, it will drop its leaves," he said.

If you want to try and flower the poinsettia for next Christmas, Stevens said to trim the stems back to six to eight inches in length in the spring and to repot the plant.

The poinsettia can be taken outside in the summer as a potted plant or can be planted in the ground inside the pot.

Bring the plant back inside before frost, and starting Oct. 1, it must receive an uninterrupted dark period greater than 12 hours per day for six weeks, Stevens said.

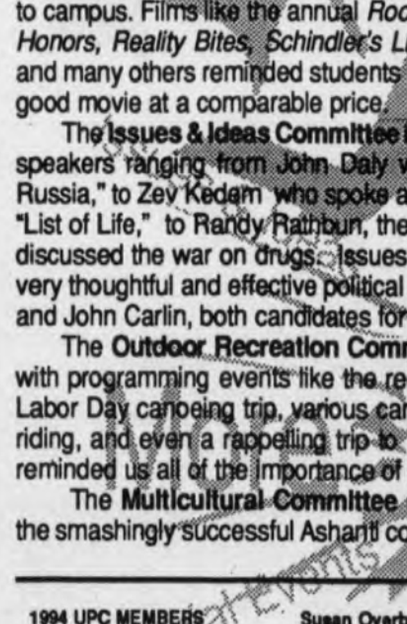
He suggested putting it in a closet at dinner time, and then taking it back out in the morning.

"You have to want to do it for the challenge of doing it," he said.

The colored parts of the poinsettia are called bracts. The actual flower is a yellow pea-like structure in the center of the bracts.

Stevens said the ideal stage of maturity is when a few of the flowers have opened. Once all the flowers have opened, they will fall off.

The poinsettia is native to Mexico. It was first introduced to the United States in 1825 by Joel Poinsett, the first U.S. Ambassador to Mexico.



There are about 15-20 commercially grown varieties that come in red, pink, white, yellow and combinations of these colors, Stevens said.

Borchardt said Horticultural Services grows about 1,200 poinsettias per year for retail sales.

A BIG BANG THANKS FROM UPC

As the semester comes to an end, K-State has seen an increase in entertaining programming from Union Program Council. The Eclectic Entertainment Committee's Opus 8 band competition, family weekend comedians J. R. Brow and David Naster, and a variety of musicians including The Drovers, started the semester off with a bang! A co-sponsorship between Eclectic Entertainment and Special Events rocked us with the Live, Weezer and Fatima Mansions concert and killed us with Virtual Reality and Laser Quest.

The Special Events Committee livened up the courtyard with two football pep rallies, Men's Glee Club, and an assortment of musicians, as well as sponsoring the most successful children's carnival at K-State with over 650 children in attendance.

The Feature Films Committee brought the best box office hits to campus. Films like the annual Rocky Horror Picture Show, With Honors, Reality Bites, Schindler's List, Jurassic Park, The Mask and many others reminded students that it is still possible to see a good movie at a comparable price.

The Issues & Ideas Committee brought a variety of interesting speakers ranging from John Daly who spoke about "Who Lost Russia," to Zev Kedam who spoke about Schindler's List and the "List of Life," to Randy Rathbun, the US Attorney to Kansas who discussed the war on drugs. Issues and Ideas also sponsored a very thoughtful and effective political debate with Sam Brownback and John Carlin, both candidates for Congress.

The Outdoor Recreation Committee was as active as ever with programming events like the recent ski trip to Colorado, the Labor Day canoeing trip, various camping excursions, horseback riding, and even a rappelling trip to Tuttle Creek!!! Outdoor Rec reminded us all of the importance of getting outdoors to have fun.

The Multicultural Committee started the semester off with the smashingly successful Ashanti concert in Union Station. Salsa and Merengue dance lessons, Country dance lessons, and International Coffee and Tea hours were additional successful programs from the Multicultural Committee. The Travel Committee took us to the K-State vs. Oklahoma game with outstanding response, the Renaissance Festival in K.C. and the Kansas City Culture Trip. The trips this committee plans are both entertaining and economical. The committee also sells International Student I.D.s and Eurail passes to students traveling abroad.

The Kaleidoscope Films Committee has kept the Union's Little Theatre and Forum Hall alive with great films like the Renoir Film Festival, Alphaville, Annie Hall, Short Cuts, Drowning by Numbers, Hearts of Darkness, Mystery Science Theater 3000, and even One Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest.

The Arts Committee showed us the artistic side of many students at K-State by hosting the fall student art show, the Companeras exhibit, the Clay Coalition exhibit, and the highly popular poetry readings.

The Promotions Committee publicized all UPC events. The committee planned and laid out all the UPC ads that appear in the Kansas State Collegian, as well as gather information for other promotional projects such as the Programmer and the UPC newsletter.

The Union Program Council has had a productive semester giving students more "bang for their buck." UPC is made up entirely of student volunteers aimed at giving something back to K-State. These volunteers all deserve recognition and thanks for their efforts. If you wish to join this unique group of student leaders, or if you have an idea or concern, please feel free to stop by the office on the third floor of the union. Next semester will provide members many leadership opportunities, so come meet new and exciting people and have fun with UPC. Once again thanks to all the UPC student volunteers who made this successful semester possible.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Manhattan, K-State had busy first semester

K-State was busy this semester with the construction, bicycle patrol and cheating.

This semester has been a memorable one for everyone around the K-State community. Now here's a look back at 10 events that have made this fall one to remember.

1. The football team.

2. The K-State Police Department instituted a bicycle patrol to help control people riding bicycles on campus sidewalks.

3. Construction.

4. About 80 students in Principles of Biology were caught cheating on a test.

5. One student was raped off campus this fall. A second rape took place at Smurthwaite House. No one was ever arrested in connection with the rapes.

6. The city annexed the K-State campus, adding sales tax to everything from lunch to toothpaste at the K-State Union.

7. The Great Wall of Graffiti was raised and torn down in an effort to protect students from debris and free speech.

8. The city failed to get voter approval for a new jail, conveniently located across the street from children and churches.

9. Parking (or lack of it).

10. $17,000 was raised when students were accidentally overcharged 50 cents for tuition, which will be spend on lobbying and free HIV testing.

TOLES

Take a study break and pierce a body part or a friend's body part

It's that time of year again. Birds are freezing into charcoaled chunks on the trees, Christmas in all its gaudy glory has made its presence known, and graduating seniors all over campus are walking around with a bemused and euphoric look on their faces, as if they've just given birth to a bouncing baby bowling ball or something.

For most of them, this part of the semester marks the end of an old way of living. After it's over, no more teachers, no more books and no more final exams. Except for a handful who need to get an "A" in Concepts of P.E. to graduate, this week will be quick and relatively painless.

For the rest of us poor slobs who still have time to mark, this week will lasted longer than it did when we had our wisdom teeth pulled, and next week will be even worse.

I started thinking about finals and how many times I've taken this trip into Dante's seventh ring of Hell. I have been asked once or twice how I go about dealing with the wash of complete mass hysteria that grips us all, and I found myself at a loss for words. (Imagine that.)

Aside from hoarding a six-month supply of Vivarin, there is very little advice I can actually give about how to survive finals. But being the good reporter (ha ha) that I am, I asked around. Here's the advice my fellow prisoners over here in Student Publications came up with. I suggest you take it all with a grain of salt.

1. Take off all your clothes and run nekkid across campus.

2. Drop a friend off who's streaking, go home, have some nachos and let him find his own way back.

3. Walk around the Union asking everyone if they've seen your mommy.

4. Get together with a friend and practice blowing gum bubbles into each others' mouths.

5. Call 1-800-Collect.

6. Pierce a body part.

7. Sit in a tub of lukewarm jello.

8. Go to the grocery store with a big wooden spoon and ask for a tub of lard.

9. Walk around with a fork in front of your face all day and pretend like everyone is in jail.

10. Pierce a friend's body part.

11. Make wild, passionate love on the K-State seal in front of Higgenbotham Gate.

12. Dress up like an acorn, lay really still in the middle of campus and wait for a squirrel to come and bury you.

13. Curl up in front of Wefald's office and take a nap.

14. Pierce a hamster's body part.

15. Suck helium.

16. Take a wall hit.

17. Go to Seaton Hall and tease all the architecture students that you get to go home and they don't. Then run like hell.

18. Hug a bicycle cop.

19. Take credit for cutting off all the power on campus and tell the cops when they arrest you that you are Jack Frost and are reclaiming this campus in the name of the Winter Wonder People.

20. Knit sweaters with used fabric softener sheets.

21. Spit.

22. Build a window in Bluemont Hall.

23. Send your pierced hamster to the Notre Dame Athletic Department, COD.

24. Moon a faculty member. If you're a faculty member, moon a student.

25. Handcuff your significant other to the pipes in your residence hall room and paint their toenails. Or whatever.

26. Build a raft to sail to Hawaii.

27. Put Clairol Light Blonde in your roommate's shampoo. Then move. Quickly.

28. Dress up like Santa Claus, take a pocket full of dimes and quarters and walk around the Union parking lot feeding expired meters.

29. Give a tootsie roll to a professor you don't have and tell them you're sucking up for a better grade.

And then there is the old stand-by: go to a bar with the notes for your finals and drink until they make sense.

I can't tell you whether or not these will relax you, but you'll sure get a helluva laugh, and if there's anything we can all use right about now, it's a good laugh.

The views expressed by Erin Mansur-Smith are her own and not that of Student Publications Inc., the Collegian or humanity in general.

▶ EVALUATIONS

Academic excellence could improve

This letter is in reference to the Nov. 21 article in the Collegian concerning faculty evaluations. The subject of publishing faculty evaluations is a very important one. It is not only important for the future of the faculty member, but it is important to the student. With the publishing of faculty evaluations, students would have the opportunity to examine the teaching profile of the professor. This is beneficial because students are given the opportunity to determine for themselves whether the professor has the right teaching style for them. Also, the student will have an understanding of what the professor expects throughout the semester.

Word of mouth can often be influential in regards to the reputation of a professor. Good or bad, it does cause repercussions. The feelings of one disgruntled student may not be the attitude of the whole class, but the comments from this one student could be spread and be detrimental. So wouldn't it be better if these subjective comments were dispelled by published evaluations?

Ultimately, our University is striving toward academic excellence. Academic excellence happens, in part, with excellent faculty. Therefore, any suggestions regarding the teaching skills and behavior of professors should be welcome. The only way to improve is by knowing where to improve.

Most students are intelligent enough to know that evaluations count and are important. Students will treat them that way. The faculty need not fear that students will evaluate them unfavorably "just to get even." The idea of published evaluations shows a trust between the University, faculty and students. This trust incorporated in the publishing of evaluations is imperative if the University and students plan on communicating and striving toward an excellence-based future.

▶ CONDOMS

Leaks make safe sex more difficult

I am writing in regard to the article concerning Lafene's distribution of faulty condoms. The Lafene Health Center should be commended for admitting the obvious problem. However, it is a little too late for some students who have already used the defective condoms.

A great deal of the Lifestyles condoms were distributed in a University Experience lecture on safe sex. Students are taught to practice safe sex in today's society. However, my concern is how can we practice safe sex if condoms distributed by a respectable health facility are breaking?

Eileen Swanson, a nurse at Lafene, suggests filling the condom with water before intercourse to double check for leakage. Swanson, let's be realistic, it's hard enough to get people to use condoms. What are we supposed to do now? I would like to ask Ms. Swanson if she suggests I tell my partner in the heat of the moment, "Hold on honey, let me run to the bathroom and check the condom for leaks real quick."

The percentage of sexually active college students is rising every year. In a time where safe sex is essential, it is scary to think there could be hundreds of faulty condoms with the lot number 311009500. Hopefully, in the future, the people at Lafene will be a little more careful about the condoms they distribute on campus.

The Bomb

▶ GUEST POET

QUOC NGUYEN

(For my father, a soldier of the Army of the Republic of Vietnam from 1965 to early 1975)

I celebrate the bomb that fall-flying slender metalhead which ends thousands of people
Men women children babies and animals too Houses forests of bamboo wide paved streets lined with shops chopsticks bookcases carpenters' tools folding chairs ash trays poems written by Byron and Crane Walt Disney cartoon characters
Tall-swaying palm trees that flourish alongside the Cuban coasts
Oystermen off Senegal's shores bargirls dancing intense happy revolving bulbs of Saigon lights
I celebrate the chanted bomb bursting in mid-air
The fatal touch that melts everything.

I celebrate the mechanized bloodshop
the instantaneous streaking death-scream of a beautiful city
Leveling of a thousand-year-old civilization to the ground
Ashes and stones and smoldering flesh on the fire-eaten streets
Grief in the refugee survivors' blood-dumb eyes
Cemeteries full of newly-dug pits piled high with bodies one on top of the other
I celebrate the commanded stupidity of the electronic man who pushes
The button that nearly ends a part of the world
The high paid workers I celebrate who diligently assembled the bomb
The pilot who transports the bomb to its final deadly destination
The plane that drops the fire-engulfed screamhead of oblivion
The explosion that follows which spreads itself outward like one blooming red-blooded flower of an artificial alien cancer
The land the city the uprooted bewildered people people on the refugee roads
The books stored in school libraries peaceful Sunday parks and strolling lovers chatting and smiling and feeling
Ducks swimming leisurely on picturesque ponds fisherman along reed-crowded shores waiting patiently for a catch Away from the parks the doors that lead into people's private houses rich and poor and in-between and the houses themselves with all their stored prized possessions care-fully placed pictures in family albums and love and memories and desires
All touched by rampage of the bomb— silent receivers of death.

I celebrate the metallic gleaming man-built monster with wings
The projectile that rides over the airway like a thunderous flower of evil
The ensuing impact that touches a thousand lives and deaths
The city that swells and bursts in the immense desert heat
The screams the fleeing roads of madness the dreaded aftermath and national grief and mass burials
I celebrate the rising mushroom of smoke over denuded hills and forestlands and metropolitan areas
The massive killing concert of the computerized bomb I celebrate
The smart bomb that glides and falls gracefully like a white wing of a twentieth century angel of the aberration
The know-all bomb that digs the air of broken space and finds its victims of extinction in a flash
The timely earth impact then the chaotic expression without warning
The explosion that sends the world reeling
The reeling that is death
The angry premature death that is the screaming man-made mechanical deity
I celebrate the bursting of the bomb like a flower of illusion
That maims and kills and sends a chapter of humanity almost out of orbit
Strange smoky bird of a sky of metal that blasts a hole in the earth.

Agronomy professor wins national teaching award

JULIE KRAMER
Collegian

K-State agronomy professor Steve Thien has received one of two National Excellence in College and University Teaching in the Food and Agricultural Sciences Awards.

Thien received his award in November in Chicago during meetings for the National Association for State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

Thien will receive $5,000 for winning the award, which is sponsored by the United States Department of Agriculture.

"I was quite surprised to be a winner," Thien said.

This was the first time Thien had applied for the award. It was established by deans and administrators at universities around the country, including David Mugler, associate dean and director of agricultural academic programs.

To apply, Thien said he had to fill out a 15-page application describing his history as an educator and activities he has done and sponsored.

Two winners were chosen for each of four regions in the U.S., and two national winners were chosen from the regional winners.

Thien was appointed an assistant professor at K-State in 1970. He was named a full professor in 1981. He now serves as director of the natural resources and environmental sciences academic program and assistant head for teaching. He teaches soil science and soil biochemistry in the department of agronomy.

"We're really honored he got this award," Mugler said. "His leadership in the teaching profession here at KSU and in his professional organization is a true example of a distinguished educator."

"Steve strives for perfection in everything that he attempts," said Gerry Posler, professor and head of the agronomy department. "Steve has earned the respect of his peers and his students because he knows his subject matter. He is well-organized, enthusiastic, an effective communicator, and he takes time for his students."

Thien said, "When you're in the teaching profession, the rewards are usually intangible. Students will come back and tell you that you've made a difference."

Thien received his bachelor's degree in agronomy from Iowa State University in 1966. He earned a master's degree in agronomy in 1968 and his doctorate in 1971, both from Purdue University.

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

Steve Thien, K-State agronomy professor, has received a National Excellence in College and University Teaching in the Food and Agricultural Sciences Award. He will receive $5,000 for winning.

TRACK SEASON STARTS TODAY

The K-State track and field squad opens its 1994 indoor season today at Ahearn Fieldhouse. The KSU All Comers meet starts with the pentathlon at 9 a.m. Running events begin at 5 p.m. Athletes from areas universities and junior colleges will compete.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Kevin Lewis leans on an Illinois defender. Lewis will be in the starting line-up against Coppin State Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

▶ MEN'S BASKETBALL

Homestand continues Saturday

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

Sure, it may not sound like a powerhouse team, but K-State coach Tom Asbury is aware of Coppin State's capabilities.

"Coppin State's a good basketball team," Asbury said. "They're a team with a bad name, but a good team. That team just scares the holy heck out of anyone who plays them. Anybody who follows college basketball closely knows how good they are."

The Wildcats will find out just how good the Eagles are when the two teams face off at 7 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

"Coppin State's a good basketball team. They're a team with a bad name, but a good team."
TOM ASBURY
K-State basketball coach

Although the Eagles come into Manhattan with a record of 0-3, Asbury said that can be a little deceiving.

"They've played great competition so far," he said. "They were right in the St. Johns' game, right in the Oklahoma game, and they gave KU a decent game.

"They're going to easily be the third-best team we've played. It should be a good basketball game."

The Cats go into Saturday night's game with a 3-2 record after Wednesday's 93-61 victory against Howard.

While K-State held onto an 11-point lead at the half, the Cats turned it up a notch during the second period, shooting almost 77 percent from the field and 64 percent from three-point range.

"It was an ugly first half, but they settled down and played a little in the second half," Asbury said.

Doing most of the playing for K-State were several Cats who turned in personal-best performances on the night, including Demond Davis, Elliot Hatcher, Stanley Hamilton and Mark Young.

It was Davis leading all scorers with 16 points. Hamilton and Hatcher chalked up 15 apiece. Young added 13 points to the board.

Asbury had mostly good things to say about those performances.

"I was pleased with the play of some of the guys who haven't played very much," Asbury said. "Our bench has been giving us a lot."

Asbury also said he was the most pleased with how Hamilton and Young responded.

"You could probably justify starting Mark and Stan very easily," he said.

"We've kind of taken the philosophy that it's more important to finish than to start, and these guys aren't grousing about it."

But along with Asbury's praise came some caution about Coppin.

"They are a team that we need to be ready for," he said. "We're going to have to do a much better job defensively, and I think we will. I think we'll rise to the occasion."

Faithful fans need apology

DEBO ADEJUNMOBI

The Kansas City Chiefs owe their fans an apology.

They have pretended all season to be a Super Bowl contender worthy of adoration and praise. But you know something? They never fooled ol' Debo.

I knew before the season ever started that the Chiefs were weak. I'm just glad they're finally making a prophet out of me.

It was especially apparent in week four against the Los Angeles Rams. The Chiefs were at home, in front of a packed house, and facing a back-up quarterback in the person of journeyman Chris Chandler. Easy pickings, huh?

Well maybe for the elite teams of the NFL like San Francisco, Dallas or the Raiders, but not for the Chiefs. They were shut out 16-0, and it could have been worse if the Rams had taken advantage of a fourth and goal before time expired in the first half.

Now if the loss could have been explained away by bad officiating or bad breaks, no big deal, right?

But that wasn't the case here. They were dominated physically by the Rams, leaving no doubt in my mind that the Chiefs aren't just lacking in offensive, defensive or special-teams execution but are indeed a team severely lacking in talent.

Without huge breaks or favorable officiating, I truly believe the Chiefs would be winless.

That was never more apparent than in their win against the Raiders in week 10.

The Chiefs supposedly entered the game leading the league in penalties. But as I told my friends on the way to the stadium, the Raiders would leave having taken that title away.

The Raiders were flagged 15 times to the Chiefs' seven in Kansas City's 13-3 triumph. Now how's that for "home cookin."

In a defensive battle, a penalty wiped out the first three points of the game when the Raiders were called for an "iffy" false start on a successful attempt by kicker Jeff Jaeger.

After being moved back five yards, Jaeger missed and the Chiefs got the ball.

But only after they received 15 more freebies because of an "unnecessary" unsportsmanlike call on Raider guard Kevin Gogan. That set the Chiefs up just shy of the 36-yard line.

And just when you thought the madness was over, they got five more charity yards with an offsides call on Raider defensive end Anthony Smith.

When play finally resumed, Joe Montana hooked up with tight end Derek Walker to give the Chiefs a 7-0 lead.

I hope Marty Schottenheimer sent all the officials thank-you cards.

But the most telling thing about the game was the fact that the Raiders were still in the game despite the obvious favoritism shown the Chiefs by the officials.

It showed me that without some quirky twists of fate, the Chiefs will lose every single time. And in recent weeks (Kansas City has lost three of their last four to fall to 7-6 and out of the playoffs), they have proved me right.

The Chiefs could learn a lot about winning under adverse conditions from watching the Raiders. Take last Monday night's game against the AFC West-leading San Diego Chargers, for example.

The Chargers were playing in front of a record crowd of 63,012, and they were loud.

Couple that with the fact that the Raiders were, as usual, victimized by the officials (17 penalties for a whopping 146 yards), and the Chargers won easily, right?

Noper. The Raiders outgained the Chargers 410-261 in a 24-17 victory.

How did they do it?

Talent.

Message to the Chiefs: Get more talent!

Cats travel to Washington, D.C. for tourney

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The K-State women's basketball team has taken its show on the road as it will participate in the George Washington Invitational in Washington, D.C.

The Wildcats face Arkansas State in the first round tonight at 6:30. K-State will then take on the winner of the George Washington-University of the District of Columbia contest.

The 4-1 Cats are off to their best start since the 1983-84 season. They are shooting 45 percent from the field and have out-rebounded their opponents 40-31. The Cats hope to keep the advantage in these areas going into the tournament.

Arkansas State has lost to two ranked opponents on the season including a 60-81 loss most recently to No. 19 Ole Miss.

The Lady Indians have been plagued by poor shooting all year as they are shooting 38 percent from the floor, while their opponents are hitting 46 percent.

Evevetta Crawford, 6-foot senior forward, leads the charge for the Lady Indians. She is coming off a career-high 35-point performance against Ole Miss.

Arkansas State enters the tourney with a 4-2 record.

On the other side of the bracket is the match-up of the No. 18 George Washington Colonials and the District of Columbia.

The Colonials feature a balance attack as five players scored in double figures in their 97-50 beating of the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

They then went on to defeat Tulane, 69-57, to capture the Green Wave Classic tournament title.

The District of Columbia will be looking to improve its 4-1 record entering the invitational.

D.C. relies on its guards for the majority of the scoring as Lorraine Lynch and Valerie Curtis average 20 and 22 points, respectively.

The winners of the two games tonight will play for the championship at 8:30 Saturday night, while the losers will clash in the consolation game at 6:30 p.m.

Big 12 athletic directors to discuss football playoffs

Officials expected to discuss everything from rules and regulations of the Big Twelve, to the possibility of a football playoff game between its two division winners.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN, Texas — Athletic directors from the Southwest and Big Eight conferences began three days of meetings Thursday with hopes of ironing out basketball scheduling for the new Big Twelve Conference.

Officials expected to discuss everything from rules and regulations of the Big Twelve, which kicks off in 1996, to the possibility of a football playoff game between its two division winners.

While few expected any firm proposal to emerge on a football playoff, the athletic directors do expect to decide on how its basketball conference will be aligned.

Under consideration is a proposal that would split the conference into two six-team divisions and another that would divide the league into three groups of four.

The most heated topic of discussion has been how many conference games will be played under any of the scenarios. The options have ranged from 16 to 19 to 22 league games.

Some Big Eight schools with high-profile basketball programs have argued for fewer league match-ups to allow for more non-conference games against other powerhouses.

The four SWC schools joining the Big Twelve — Texas, Texas Tech, Texas A&M and Baylor — want more conference games for the opportunity to build their programs with home games against teams like Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma State.

"We don't want to take away from our top marquee basketball programs, but to develop all of us, it will be important to spread programs like Kansas and Missouri around our conference," Richard Ellis, Baylor athletic director, said. "I need to have those programs come to Waco. We are in the process of building."

The strongest push appears to be for a 16-game league schedule, which would likely lead to breaking the league into three four-team divisions, or quadrants.DeLoss Dodds, Texas athletic director said.

"There is a feeling we don't want to play 19 games," Dodds said. "With 16 games, you are looking at a quadrant thing."

In football, the Big Twelve is creating north and south divisions, each with six teams. The south group contains the four Texas teams as well as Oklahoma and Oklahoma State. The north group contains Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, K-State, Iowa State and Missouri.

League officials likely will continue wrestling with the football playoff question — whether to have a game between the division champions, with its guaranteed financial payout, is preferable to rolling the dice on landing a second at-large spot in the prestigious Tier I bowl network that could decide a national champion.

"Every time we meet, we talk about a football playoff, however, I don't think that's a hot issue right now. We have time to talk about that," Dodds, who supports a playoff game, said.

"The sense that I get is that the people aren't real warm to it right now."

Animal fund created to offset cost of treatment

JANET MCPHERSON
Collegian

Every year, the public takes 500 to 550 sick or injured wild animals to the Veterinary Medicine Hospital.

Dr. James W. Carpenter, associate professor of exotic animals, wildlife and zoological medicine at the College of Veterinary Medicine, said he began a Wild Animal Medical Care Fund three years ago to produce a modest amount of income to offset the cost of treating wild animals.

When a wild animal is brought to the clinic, Carpenter said it is evaluated to determine if it will be able to survive. If the animal can be treated medically, it is then determined whether it will be releasable back to the wild.

Finally, if an animal will be releasable to the wild, Carpenter said he evaluates whether the animal can be kept long enough to return to the wild based on the amount of retraining that would be required.

"We think we do have a moral role to treat these animals and return them to the wild," Carpenter said.

Otherwise, if a good home cannot be found, euthanasia is the only option, he said.

"Because of man's activities, there's a higher incidence to animals," Carpenter said. "Most zoos and conservation centers are saturated."

He said they are limited to what they can do for an animal and try to keep costs down. The average donation to the fund is $10, and the fund receives contributions totaling less than $1,000 a year.

"Everything we get is appreciated," Carpenter said. "I was really hoping with all the animals coming in, we'd get more."

He said equipment, books and medical care such as diagnostic work has been paid for with donated money.

Carpenter said about 5 percent of the people who bring wild animals to the clinic donate to the program. The college deserves a lot of the credit because the department and college absorb most of the cost, he said.

Students in veterinary medicine get an educational opportunity in caring for the sick, injured or orphaned wildlife, Carpenter said.

"All the animals don't quite appreciate what we do," he said.

A skunk was brought into the small animal clinic because it was acting funny in the road. Carpenter said the skunk sprayed, causing the entire building to stink.

It's exciting to work with the wild animals, he said.

"It's never dull," he said.

Pictures with Santa to help needy pets

JANELL COE
Collegian

Santa has gone to the dogs.

The fifth annual Santa Paws will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday at 3262 Kimball Ave.

Kate Spiller, event coordinator, said that the Riley County Human Society will take a picture of people's pets with Santa.

"The cost is $4.50 per picture," Spiller said.

Spiller said that all proceeds go into the general Humane Society fund to help pets in need.

Dr. John Lyons, veterinarian at Candlewood Veterinary Clinic, said they close down the clinic for the day and provide the location for the event.

"It's really fun to watch people with their pets," Lyons said. "Everyone has a blast."

Spiller said that the Santa for the event is a full-time employee of the biology department at K-State.

"Santa does a good job," Lyons said.

Every once in a while Santa gets wet on, Lyons said.

"Last year, a hamster got lost in Santa's beard, and it took a couple of minutes to find it," he said.

Spiller said that the event attracts all kinds of pets.

"People bring dogs, cats, chinchillas, rats, ferrets, hamsters, rabbits and macaws," Spiller said.

Half of the business are people with children, Lyons said.

"People can go to the mall and spend $8 and have their money go to a professional photographer, but when they come here, it goes toward a good cause," Lyons said.

Lyons said people are welcome to bring their cameras.

For more information, contact Kate Spiller at 539-2461.

K-State grad responsible for inexpensive pens

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

Paul Fisher makes pens.

In fact, he owns one of the largest ball-point pen companies in the world.

His pens have been on every manned space flight since 1968. He also owns several patents for various advancements in pens and inks.

That all happened after he graduated from K-State in 1939 with a degree in milling science.

Instead of getting a job at a bakery, Fisher spent several years driving trucks in Chicago. He had debts to pay, and it was the best-paying job he could get.

Before long, the shots of World War II rang out in the United States. Machinery production plants sprang up all over the country.

Phillip Armour III, a business associate who was making ball bearings for the Army Air Corps, offered Fisher a management job at one of his plants in Chicago.

After the war, Armour offered Fisher a job with his son, Phillip Armour IV. Fisher was asked to help them improve the ball-point pen.

"The ball-point pen will never be perfect, but we've done as much as any company in the world to perfect it," Fisher said.

The advent of the cheap ball-point pen came under Fisher's direction. The price per pen dropped from $12.50 to 39 cents.

In 1950, Fisher founded his own company in Boulder City, Nev. Many copyrighted inventions soon found their way to the marketplace as Fisher's brainchildren: the One-For-All refill pen, the erasable-ink pen and, of course, the Space Pen.

The Space Pen is the trade name for a gas-pressurized ink pen that can write upside down, under water, at any angle and at temperatures as high as 400 degrees Fahrenheit or as low as minus 50 degrees Fahrenheit.

The Space Pen soon proved its worth — it was the only thing that allowed Apollo 11 astronauts Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin and Neil Armstrong to return safely to earth.

The backpack of one of the astronauts had happened to hit the plastic arming switch on the lunar module. The switch broke off. Without it, they could not blast off from the moon to return to the mother ship.

In a flash of inspiration (and a little help from NASA), they used the Space Pen to jerry rig the switch, activating the engines and bringing them safely back to the ship, Fisher said.

"Buzz said if it wasn't for the Space Pen, he might still be on the moon," he said.

Aside from his inventions, Fisher is known to have run for president in the New Hampshire primaries. He came in second to Massachusetts Sen. John F. Kennedy.

At 81, Fisher shows no signs of slowing down.

Woody Wilcox, Fisher's executive assistant, said Fisher is not planning to retire until he's ready to give up the reins of power.

"I should have retired when I was 65, but now they tell me I'll have to wait until I'm 130," Fisher said with a laugh.

Wilcox said Fisher has a very ingenious and inventive mind.

"He designs, experiments and formulates inks for pens. He gets up at 2 in the morning to check on his inks — it's like they're his babies," he said.

Aside from playing an active role in the business side of the company, Fisher may also be seen playing racquetball, beating opponents more than half his age.

"I exercise and do calisthenics every day. All the handball players have died off, so I play racquetball and tennis," he said.

Fisher is also the author of four books, the first of which hit the shelves in 1952. The books are about applying the scientific technique to any problem, especially those of government and economics.

The scientific method is all about learning from experiments what works and what doesn't, Fisher said.

"When we as a people learn to think accurately and bring integrity to politics, then we'll start to make strides in the social sciences," he said.

Right now, Fisher is seeking design patents for a new type of pen. It is a classified subject, but Fisher hinted that it will feature a new type of ink with the consistency of road tar, allowing it to dry faster and be waterproof.

Paul Fisher still makes pens.

What a waste.

Smatterings

BY ANDREW TOMB

Compiled from Collegian staff and Associated Press reports

U.S. Army — we love to fly, and it costs you $120,000

The highest-ranking U.S. aerospace official took a $120,000 taxpayer-funded flight from Italy in a luxurious military plane with office space, extra bathrooms and first-class seating, officials said Wednesday.

Air Force Gen. Joseph Ashy and an aide took the Sept. 9 flight in a C-141 military cargo plane that had been equipped with extra amenities, called a comfort pallet, usually reserved for dignitaries.

The plane had been made more comfortable for a flight Madeline Albright, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, had just taken from Russia.

"Even though it was set up fairly nice, he had no idea that was going to be the case — until he actually boarded — that there was going to be a comfort pallet," said Col. Dennis Gauci, a spokesman for Ashy.

No laws or military regulations were broken, Air Force officials said.

Ashy had requested a regularly scheduled military flight from Naples, Italy, to Colorado so he could receive special training before assuming a new post in Colorado.

In a special Smatterings interview, Ashy claimed he was miffed. There were no beer nuts on the plane, and the only in-flight movies were a triple feature of "Ishtar," "Oscar" and "The Bear."

"I was damn close to jumping out somewhere over the Atlantic Ocean," Ashy said. "I had my parachute and everything."

Vomit-festival stuns hoity-toity Harvard U. eatery

A Harvard dining room was closed after about 150 students were treated for vomiting, diarrhea and nausea. More than 30 students remained in the infirmary late Wednesday as officials inspected the freshman union, a student dining hall and water and sanitation supplies.

"We're not sure what it is," said university spokesman Joe Wrinn. He said most of the sick students ate Tuesday at the freshman union, but that some did not and many students who ate there did not get sick.

The Harvard Crimson student newspaper reported that a vegetarian sandwich or fusilli pasta dish had been determined to be the culprits.

Obviously, those commie vegetarians in Cambridge get what they deserve. You don't see them serving no lame-ass fusilli pasta crap at good ol' K-State!

We should all thank our lucky stars that we are here.

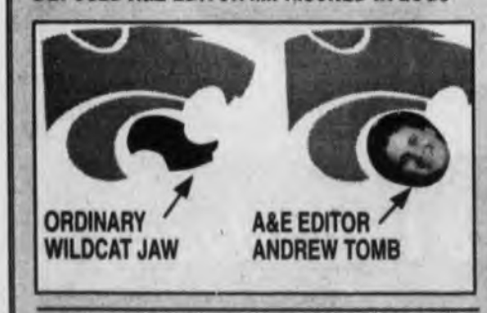
'So, when did you get rid of that tasty Picasso gravy mix?'

Art is long, and the rights to it are even longer, or so Pablo Picasso's heirs claim.

They're suing to get his name taken off a red-pepper-and-grilled-zuchinni pizza at Cafe Picasso in Greenwich Village, and to remove Picassoesque images from ties, totebags and a potpourri of other products.

"We are now embarking on a campaign to ensure that the Picasso legacy is protected in the United States," said Claude Picasso, son of the late artist.

The Paris-based estate also announced that it's planning to license its own products in the United States.



The suit was filed in federal court Monday. Similar suits were filed this week in Florida and Los Angeles, family lawyer Dorothy Weber said.

The lawsuit sought any profits derived from use of the Picasso name and a bar to further use.

At Cafe Picasso, imitations of his work adorn menus and business cards, but that's because the owner thinks "Picasso" is a common term for "masterpiece," lawyer Fred DeCicco said.

At last report, the parties were close to a compromise, but after the announcement of plans for the Picasso designer gun rack, the famiy decided to go ahead with the lawsuit.

Family TRADITION

T is the season to reminisce and participate in family traditions or create new ones to be remembered.

Courtney Knapple, sophomore in speech, said it is always an unusual Christmas at her house.

She said her family started a strange Christmas tradition three years ago, which they still honor.

"On Christmas day, after the presents are opened, my relatives dress up like hillbillies and go caroling in the neighborhood," Knapple said.

She said her family members slick back their hair, blacken out their teeth and put on overalls and torn felt cowboy hats.

"Once, my mom had the neighbors come over and take a family picture of us dressed like hillbillies, and she even had it enlarged," Knapple said.

Knapple said it was very embarrassing for her when she was in high school, but now she thinks it's funny.

She said her mom also started a tradition of passing an ugly brown ceramic bowl to different family members each Christmas.

"One of the family members gets the bowl for Christmas and has to keep it fully displayed for a whole year in their house, and then they can pass it on to a different family member the next Christmas," Knapple said.

Mike Carpenter, junior in pre-med, said his family started a tradition of watching National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation every Christmas Eve since the movie came out.

"The first time my dad and I saw it, we thought it was the funniest thing," he said.

Georgia Nonte, K-State Union Bookstore employee, said she began the tradition of buying her son a Christmas ornament each Christmas.

She said she also still plays Santa and puts a stocking up in her son's house even though he is 23 years old.

Nonte said she tries to steer away from the gift aspect and focuses on family.

"We've always put a nativity set down at Thanksgiving and a Christmas angel on top of the tree," she said.

Nonte said she usually cuts down a cedar tree from the country for Christmas.

She said on Christmas Eve, she gets together at her boyfriend's parent's house and eats a smorgasbord type meal, goes to the children's program at church and then opens presents.

Amy Douglass, senior in psychology, said she plans on beginning some Christmas traditions for her 1-year-old son this year.

"This is my son's first Christmas. I'm real excited about starting Santa," she said. "You can be a kid through them."

Douglass said she wants to teach her kids the religious significance behind Christmas, also.

'Boogie woogie style' on tap for rhythm and blues fans

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

A rhythm and blues singer from Lawrence will showcase her "burning boogie woogie piano style" at 10 p.m. on Dec. 9 and 10 at the Little Apple Brewing Company.

Kelley Hunt, a singer, songwriter and piano player, has taken a step back in time to produce the powerful sound of blues made famous by the musicians of the past.

"I do octaves with my left hand and walk up and down the keyboard and do the leads and rhythm with my left hand," Hunt said.

"It's not easy to do that and sing at the same time, but once I got the hang of it, I don't think of it much," Hunt said.

Hunt said as a woman blues musician, she is fortunate that she made it in the music business.

"It's seen as unusual for me to write everything, be the leader of the band, play a primary instrument and sing too, instead of just playing the role of a female singer," Hunt said.

Hunt said she hopes others will follow in her footsteps.

"Women musicians who both write and play instruments such as Reba McIntire have broken a lot of ground for people like me," Hunt said.

"I'm amazed to see what will happen in the future and whether or not more women musicians will surface."

Hunt said she has been playing the piano since the age of 3 and said music has always been a strong influence on her life.

"I was born to do it. I've always known that I would be a musician because that's what I am," Hunt said.

Hunt said both her mother and father were both musicians. Her mother sang on a live weekly jazz show on the radio, and her father played the upright bass in the Navy band.

"There was always tons of music around me," Hunt said.

Another important influence in her life was her first piano teacher, who taught her to develop her trademark piano style at the age of 10 by making a deal with her that if she would learn to read music, then she would teach her the "boogie woogie" style of piano playing.

"When I look back on it, it's unusual to find someone who knew about the boogie woogie style of playing. When I first starting playing, my hands weren't big enough to do it very well, but when my hands got bigger, I went crazy with it," Hunt said.

At the age of 15, Hunt started to write music and copied other musicians' styles instead of developing her own.

After playing guitar and performing with a rock band in clubs before she was of legal age, Hunt went back to her blues roots and started to write all her own lyrics.

"I have a little more intimacy now since I write all the songs. I have a direct connection with the audience," Hunt said.

Hunt's first big break came when she gave a demo to L.A. producer, keyboard player and Kansas native Mike Finnigan who was impressed with her talent and helped her to produce her debut album titled "Kelley Hunt" in the fall of 1993.

Hunt said she first met Finnigan when he borrowed her piano for a gig in Lawrence.

"I took the piano to him myself. I was so flipped out because I didn't know him from Adam, but I listened to all his music when I was in high school," Hunt said.

Hunt said she was overwhelmed when Finnigan gathered a section of players and agreed to produce her album.

"When I found out he was going to produce it, I was beside myself. It's been great to work with him. I feel real lucky," Hunt said.

CD taping at bar to include Barrett, audience, mood

JOYCE LEFTOFF
Collegian

If you've ever wanted to be recorded on a compact disc, go to Rowdy Trouty's tonight and check out Jeff Barrett.

Barrett, senior in public relations and a regular performer at the bar, will be recording three of his songs in a live setting.

"We'll be recording with the crowd and everything," Barrett said. "We hope it will capture the mood of Rowdy Trouty's on a Friday night."

Barrett also said Dwayne Oyler, fifth-year architecture student, will be performing the crowd favorite, "Big-Legged Woman."

Barrett said the type of music he performs on acoustic guitar and piano can be compared to Jimmy Buffet and James Taylor.

The songs he will be performing for the recording are "Familiar Country Roads," "Big Fire" and "Walking Away." Barrett has also recorded a soon-to-be released CD produced by Spectacle Records, due out in February.

"We're expecting a ton of people to show up," he said.

Mike Trout, owner of Rowdy Trouty's, said he's excited about Barrett doing the live recording in his bar.

"Jeff's really added a lot to the entertainment scene in Manhattan," Trout said. "He's good for business, and we really enjoy his music."

Trout said he thinks Barrett is ready to get into the recording scene.

"I think this is what he wants to do," he said. "Jeff's getting done with school this semester, and I think he's ready to do this for a living."

Trout said Barrett usually starts playing around 10 p.m.

"You might want to come early tonight," Trout said. "It will be packed, and you might want to start drinking early."

Woman wants to know what part of no you don't understand

Dear Cassandra,

I would like to add something to your answer to "When is it time for the ring?" You were right to tell him not to give in to pressure to get married, but I think you should have emphasized that even if he doesn't marry his girlfriend, he is still partly responsible for her pregnancy. He should help her out during her pregnancy and help support her, regardless if they marry. It's a lonely feeling to be abandoned by the one person you thought loved you. He should not forget it's his responsibility, too.

Signed,
Wishing I were back in Manhattan ...

Dear Wishing,

You're right. I should have stressed the need for Ring to continue to take responsibility for the baby he fathered. Thanks for pointing that out!

Dear Cassie,

I went to my regular bar and met a guy who seemed nice and polite, and I felt I could trust him because we have a mutual friend. I allowed the guy to take me home.

Without asking, he made his way into my apartment. (It is quite obvious that I live by myself, and he made himself at home.)

He poured himself and me a drink and proceeded to pour me shot after shot, even after I said, "No more."

With all the alcohol running through my veins, I wasn't even prepared for what happened next. The guy proceeded to push me onto the couch, crushing me. He hurt my neck and shoulders, and I could feel the bruises forming.

I told him he was hurting me; he told me to be quiet. He unbuttoned my shirt, and I said stop. He told me to be quiet.

After he finished, he asked me if I "came." I couldn't even speak.

I do take the blame for allowing him to come into my home, and I allowed him to pour me shots, but when I said no, I meant no. He did not have the right to violate me.

So men, no matter how hard you get, or how hard she may tease you, when she says no, she means no. Please respect that.

Signed,
Not a joke.

Dear Not a Joke,

You have been date raped. You need help dealing with this, and you shouldn't have to do it alone. Please, if you haven't already, contact Judy Davis at the Women's Resource Center. The phone number is 532-6444. Or, please call the police at 532-6400 or 537-2112. They have many people who can help, if you just give them a chance. Please, just pick up the phone and call.

Meaning, traditions differ for families

She said her parents used to make footsteps outside the house when she was a kid, and she even thought she saw Santa Claus once. She said she wants her kids to have such good memories.

Kim Claflin, junior in speech pathology, said her family is breaking a 33-year-old Christmas tradition this year.

She said that her family usually goes to Oklahoma City to her grandparents, but her sister-in-law is expecting a baby, so they are going to stay in Kansas this Christmas.

Claflin said she will never forget the last Christmas before her grandfather died, when she was 5.

"I can actually visualize my grandpa getting down and playing with us," she said.

The Christmas that stands out the most for Knapple is when 17 family members got snowed in at her house for two days, she said.

"Everyone started to get bored, so we loaded up into the cars and did donuts in the mall parking lot," she said.

The Christmas that Carpenter said he remembers the most is when he got a drum set from Santa Claus when he was 7.

"I bet my parents remember it the most, also," Carpenter said.

Christmas has different meanings for everyone. For some, it is the giving of gifts, and for others, it has a religious significance.

Christmas is peace and most importantly family, Carpenter said.

Carpenter said his family goes to the late church service Christmas Eve and opens presents Christmas Day.

He said on Christmas Day, his family has a huge feast similar to Thanksgiving, only with ham instead of turkey.

Claflin said she thinks people concentrate too much on gift giving.

"I have a really negative view on Christmas," she said.

"I feel it's lost its meaning."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Christmas is a prime time for house fires

HOLLY CHEGWIDDEN
Collegian

Christmas is the time of year for lots of celebration, decorations and fun.

This is also the time of year when the most fires occur, said Tanne Hill, assistant director of the Manhattan fire department.

"The second-leading cause of fire in the home is from heating appliances," he said.

When the electricity goes out, people tend to use alternative forms of heat and light, Hill said.

"We have a real problem with candles in Manhattan," he said.

Hill said to make sure the candle has a firm base and is kept in an appropriate holder.

Keep candles away from decorations and curtains, he said, and never leave a burning candle unattended.

Potpourri smells wonderful, but Hill said he reminds people it must be burned in a proper container.

The container could fracture if it is not meant to withstand a lot of heat, he said.

People planning to have live Christmas trees in their homes should keep the trees outdoors for as long as possible.

"Cut one inch off the base of the tree and put it in water immediately," Hill said.

Keep the tree in plenty of water at all times, he said.

Hill said when hanging up Christmas lights, make sure the lights have UL on the label.

UL stands for Underwriters Laboratory, Hill said. It is a testing agency that makes sure the products are satisfactory.

"Don't string too many lights together," Hill said. "Make sure the wires are not in trafficways."

People hanging lights outside need to remember that the wire covering can be damaged with a nail or a staple. This damage can make the lights short and cause a fire.

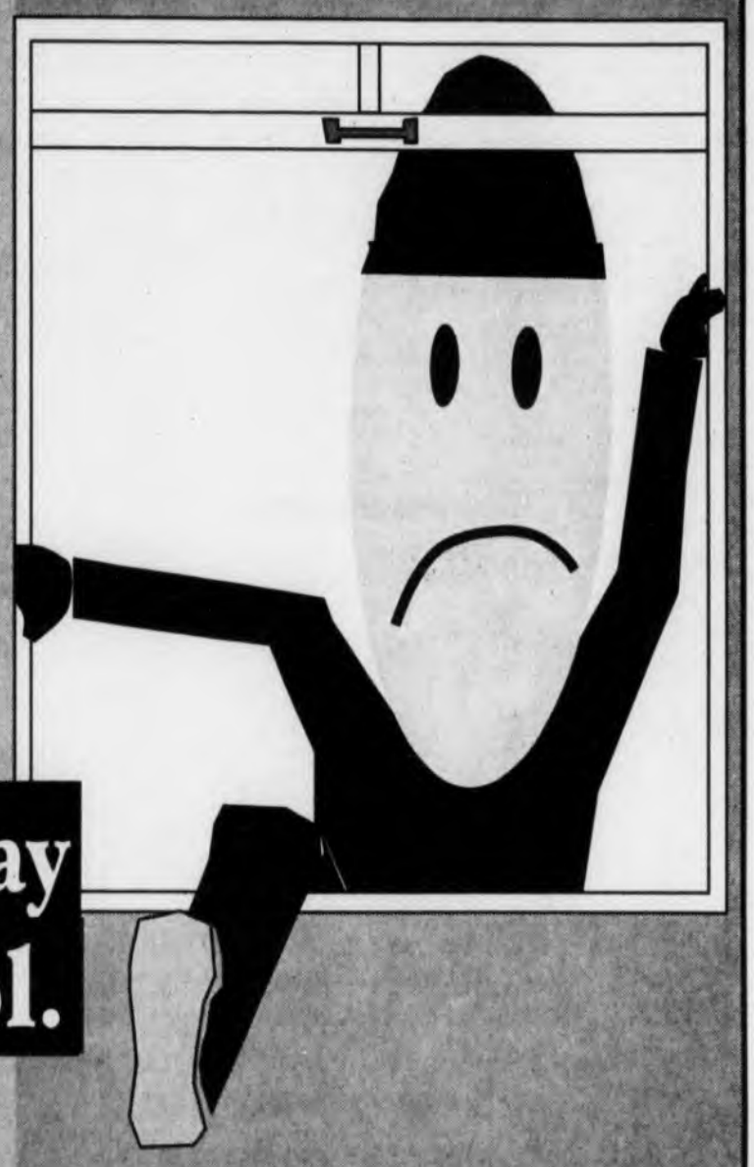
Shock can occur from lights and extension cords used outdoors when they are made for indoors, Hill said.

Chimneys and fire places should be cleaned and inspected at least once a year, he said.

"Don't burn Christmas wrapping paper in the fireplace," he said. "It may float out the chimney or plug the chimney, causing smoke to float back into the house."

Hill said space heaters should be kept at the appropriate distance from other furniture, and he doesn't recommend kerosene heaters at all.

"Kerosene heaters give off carbon monoxide," he said. "There isn't enough oxygen in the house because it is closed up."



Hill also said to change the furnace filter yearly.

"Most fires are at 5 p.m. while people are cooking," he said.

"MELE KALIKIMAKA"

ALOHA

K-STATE VS. BOSTON COLLEGE

K-State's Percell Gaskins smashes Nebraska running back Lawrence Phillips earlier this season at KSU Stadium. Despite two losses, K-State still finished the season ranked in the top 10.

WHAT'S INSIDE

▶WHAT EXACTLY IS THE ALOHA BOWL?

Even though the Aloha Bowl hasn't been around too long, the bowl has a strong history. Several famous NFL players have played in the bowl. However, the main purpose of the bowl is to promote Hawaii.

Page 2

▶WHAT IS THERE TO DO IN HAWAII?

Making the trip to the big island? Well, the Wildcat Watch takes a look at all of the favorite spots for vacationers and tourists in Hawaii. You will also need to learn some Hawaiian dialect before leaving.

Page 3

▶HOW IMPORTANT IS CHAD MAY?

K-State depends on May as a leader, motivator and, most importantly, as a winner. Tim Colston, Tyson Schwieger and Mitch Running are just a few of the other K-State players of the year.

Conference teams look to retain top 5 rankings in Coalition Bowls

▶HUSKERS SET TO BATTLE MIAMI FOR NATIONAL TITLE

Nebraska will get its second straight shot at a national championship in this season's Federal Express Orange Bowl, which is played in Miami, Fla.

Last season, the Huskers played Florida State in the Orange Bowl, but they came up short.

"We want to be national champions," Nebraska linebacker Ed Stewart said after the Huskers' victory against K-State.

"We haven't received any respect all season. We're going to go to the Orange Bowl, so we deserve respect."

Despite what Stewart said, the Huskers are currently the No. 1 team in the country, a ranking that the Big Red has had for most of the season.

Standing in the way of the Husker's national title is the Miami Hurricanes.

The Hurricanes are currently 10-1, and they are ranked fourth in the country. Miami's only loss this season came to Washington early in the season..

The Canes could have an advantage since they will be playing at the Orange Bowl, which is also their home field. Miami is 62-1 on their home field in the past 10 years. Nebraska has also lost five straight bowls.

"To play Nebraska here in the Orange Bowl is a goal we've had all year," Hurricanes coach Dennis Erickson said.

"We're happy to have the opportunity to play one of the great teams in country."

The Husker's leading player this season has been I-back Lawrence Phillips. As the Huskers ripped through the Big Eight Conference, Phillips managed to maintain an average of 140 yards per game.

Miami is led by defensive tackle Warren Sapp.

Sapp is considered to be the best defensive player in the country by most NFL scouts.

▶COLORADO BATTLES 6-4-1 NOTRE DAME IN FIESTA

The Fiesta Bowl didn't get its wish.

Bowl officials wanted to pit No. 5-ranked Colorado against No. 6 Florida State.

However, they now have Colorado vs. unranked Notre Dame.

Notre Dame and Colorado met in the 1990 and 1991 Orange Bowls when the Buffaloes were No. 1. Colorado beat Notre Dame 10-9 in the 1991 game to win a share of the national championship.

The previous year, the Irish won 21-6 to spoil the Buffaloes' bid for the national title.

This season, the Buffs were ranked No. 2 before falling to No. 1 Nebraska in Lincoln.

Leading the way for the Buffs has been running back Rashaan Salaam. Salaam ripped through the Big Eight Conference, and he racked up 2,020 yards rushing.

Salaam is considered to be the leading candidate for the Heisman Trophy.

Quarterback Kordell Stewart has also received some honors this season, as he was selected to the first-team all-Big Eight by the Associated Press.

Stewart is the Big Eight's total offense leader, and he is ranked second in passing efficiency.

Notre Dame, on the other hand, has struggled this season to a 6-4-1 record. After starting out in the top 10, the Irish dropped four games this season, including a loss to BYU at home, and it tied Southern California in the season finale.

Coach Lou Holtz said there is only one area that concerns him when faced with the No. 5 Buffaloes.

"If you take away the kicking game, I think we can play with anybody," Holtz said.

Leading the Irish is quarterback Ron Powlus. Powlus has started every single game for the Irish this season as a freshman.

JEREMY CRABTREE

▶UNRANKED SOONERS TO BATTLE WITH NO. 22 BYU

Coach Gary Gibbs will bow out with the conclusion of the Sooners' contest against Brigham Young.

Oklahoma lost its last regular season contest to top-ranked Nebraska 13-3 at Norman, Okla.

Junior college transfer Garrick McGee replaced four-year starter Cale Gundy at quarterback. McGee showed flashes of brilliance throughout the season; however, only Oklahoma State's Tone Jones finished with a lower rating.

Oklahoma's rushing combination of Jerald Moore and James Allen (a.k.a. Thunder and Lightning) has provided some offensive punch for the Sooners.

The Sooners finished second in Big Eight conference in total defense behind Nebraska and third in passing defense, which will come in handy in stopping BYU's passing attack.

The defensive backfield is led by cornerback Darrius Johnson.

Johnson led the Big Eight in interceptions in 1993 and return punts for the Sooners.

This has been a disappointing season for OU. After starting out with a victory against Syracuse, which is a top-25 team, the Sooners struggled through Big Eight play.

The Sooners dropped to K-State for the second-straight season. The 37-20 setback, marked the first time since 1970 and 1971 that OU dropped two straight to the Wildcats.

The Cougars had a win against Notre Dame at South Bend, Ind., but managed only a third-place finish in the Western Athletic Conference after they were beaten by Utah the last week of the season.

The Sooners completed the season with a 4-3 record in the Big Eight and 6-5 overall.

BYU finished 22nd in the Associated Press poll and 19th in the USA Today/CNN Coaches' poll with its 9-3 record.

They leading player is quarterback John Walsh.

▶ ALOHA BOWL

Bowl has strong past despite short history

CRESTON KUENZI
Collegian

The Aloha Bowl is not given much respect in college football.

However, in the bowl's short history, it has continued to grow and is now one of the most underrated postseason events in the country.

The concept of having a bowl game in Hawaii was first thought of in 1978, when a group of community leaders in Hawaii set out to create a prominent college football game to be played in December.

The game was to be called the Pineapple Bowl.

The purpose of the game was to promote the state of Hawaii and to boost the economy through the game's national exposure.

The game also provides considerable funding for selected Hawaii-based charities.

Among the causes that benefit from the game include the Muscular Dystrophy Association, March of Dimes, Special Olympics and many more.

Alana Harris, district director of MDA, said the Aloha Bowl Charities Inc., continues to be a constant help in their cause.

"The Jeep Eagle Aloha Bowl and its staff have made an unprecedented display of human caring and support toward MDA's mission of finding a cure for neuromuscular diseases," Harris said.

The bowl was granted approval by the National Collegiate Athletic Association and played its first game in 1982.

From the beginning, the bowl has been able to attract nationally ranked teams, and its stature continues to increase.

Last year, the game matched the Big Eight Conference runner-up Colorado against the Western Athletic Conference tri-champion Fresno State.

The Buffaloes won the game 41-30.

Not only has the bowl seen some of the top teams in the nation over the years, but it has also hosted some top players.

Some of the MVPs of the bowl include many NFL players such as Jerry Ball, who played for SMU; Cornelius Bennett, Alabama; Chuck Cecil, Arizona and Dana Stubblefield, Kansas.

The 1987 bowl game featured future Super Bowl MVPs with Troy Aikman earning the honor for UCLA and Emmitt Smith for Florida.

Last year's winners were Trent Dilfer, selected in the first round of the NFL draft, and Rashaan Salaam, a candidate for the Heisman Trophy this year.

It is also important that the management of the Aloha Bowl has countered recent national trends by adding many new corporate sponsors.

"The vitality of this bowl gets stronger every day," Marcia Cherner, executive director, said. "Some will say that in this economic climate, it is unique to have so many new sponsors jumping on the bowl bandwagon.

"We are on a steady growth pattern, which paves the way for future expansion. Our momentum continues."

The Aloha Bowl recently signed a long-term contract with ABC sports to televise the game.

By scheduling the game on Christmas Day, the bowl has been one of the highest-rated televised postseason bowl games.

With this seasons match-up set up between Boston College and K-State, Cherner said this could possibly be the best in the history.

"We feel that this bowl game could be one of the best this year," Cherner said. "We have two high-quality teams."

Christmas time in Hawaii to be full of fun, sunshine

Mele Kalikimaka, Hawaiian for Merry Christmas, is a phrase that might come in handy for Aloha Bowl-bound K-Staters.

Besides the big game, fans will not have to look too far to find activities to keep them busy.

The Arizona Memorial and Visitor Center is open from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. The last shuttle departs at 3 p.m.

Terry Pearson, president of Kansas State Travel, said there are several tours that visit Pearl Harbor, but the best tour to take is the one sponsored by the U.S. Navy.

It is free of charge and is the only tour to provide the opportunity to get out and look at the USS Arizona while standing on the memorial built over the sunken ship, he said.

"The most impressive part is getting out and actually seeing the USS Arizona," Pearson said.

Pearson said he also recommends visiting the USS Bowfin, a restored World War II submarine, located next to the USS Arizona.

The Polynesian Cultural Center, located on the north shore of Oahu, is also a good place to visit for people of all ages, Pearson said.

"Yes, I absolutely recommend that people go there," he said.

"It's worth spending the full day there."

The Polynesian Cultural Center is open 12:30 to 9 p.m. daily. The center is made up of native villages representative not just of Hawaii, but of Fiji, Tonga, New Zealand, Tahite, Somoa and Marquesas, as well.

Honolulu's Chinatown is also a unique place to visit, featuring aspects of the Chinese culture, as well as items and foods typical of the early immigrant in Hawaii.

Chinatown in Hawaii is similar to the one in San Francisco, he said.

"It's all of the Chinese culture in one area," he said.

"There are a lot of nice restaurants and places to shop. It's a little bit of China."

Pearson said he recommends visiting Chinatown during the day.

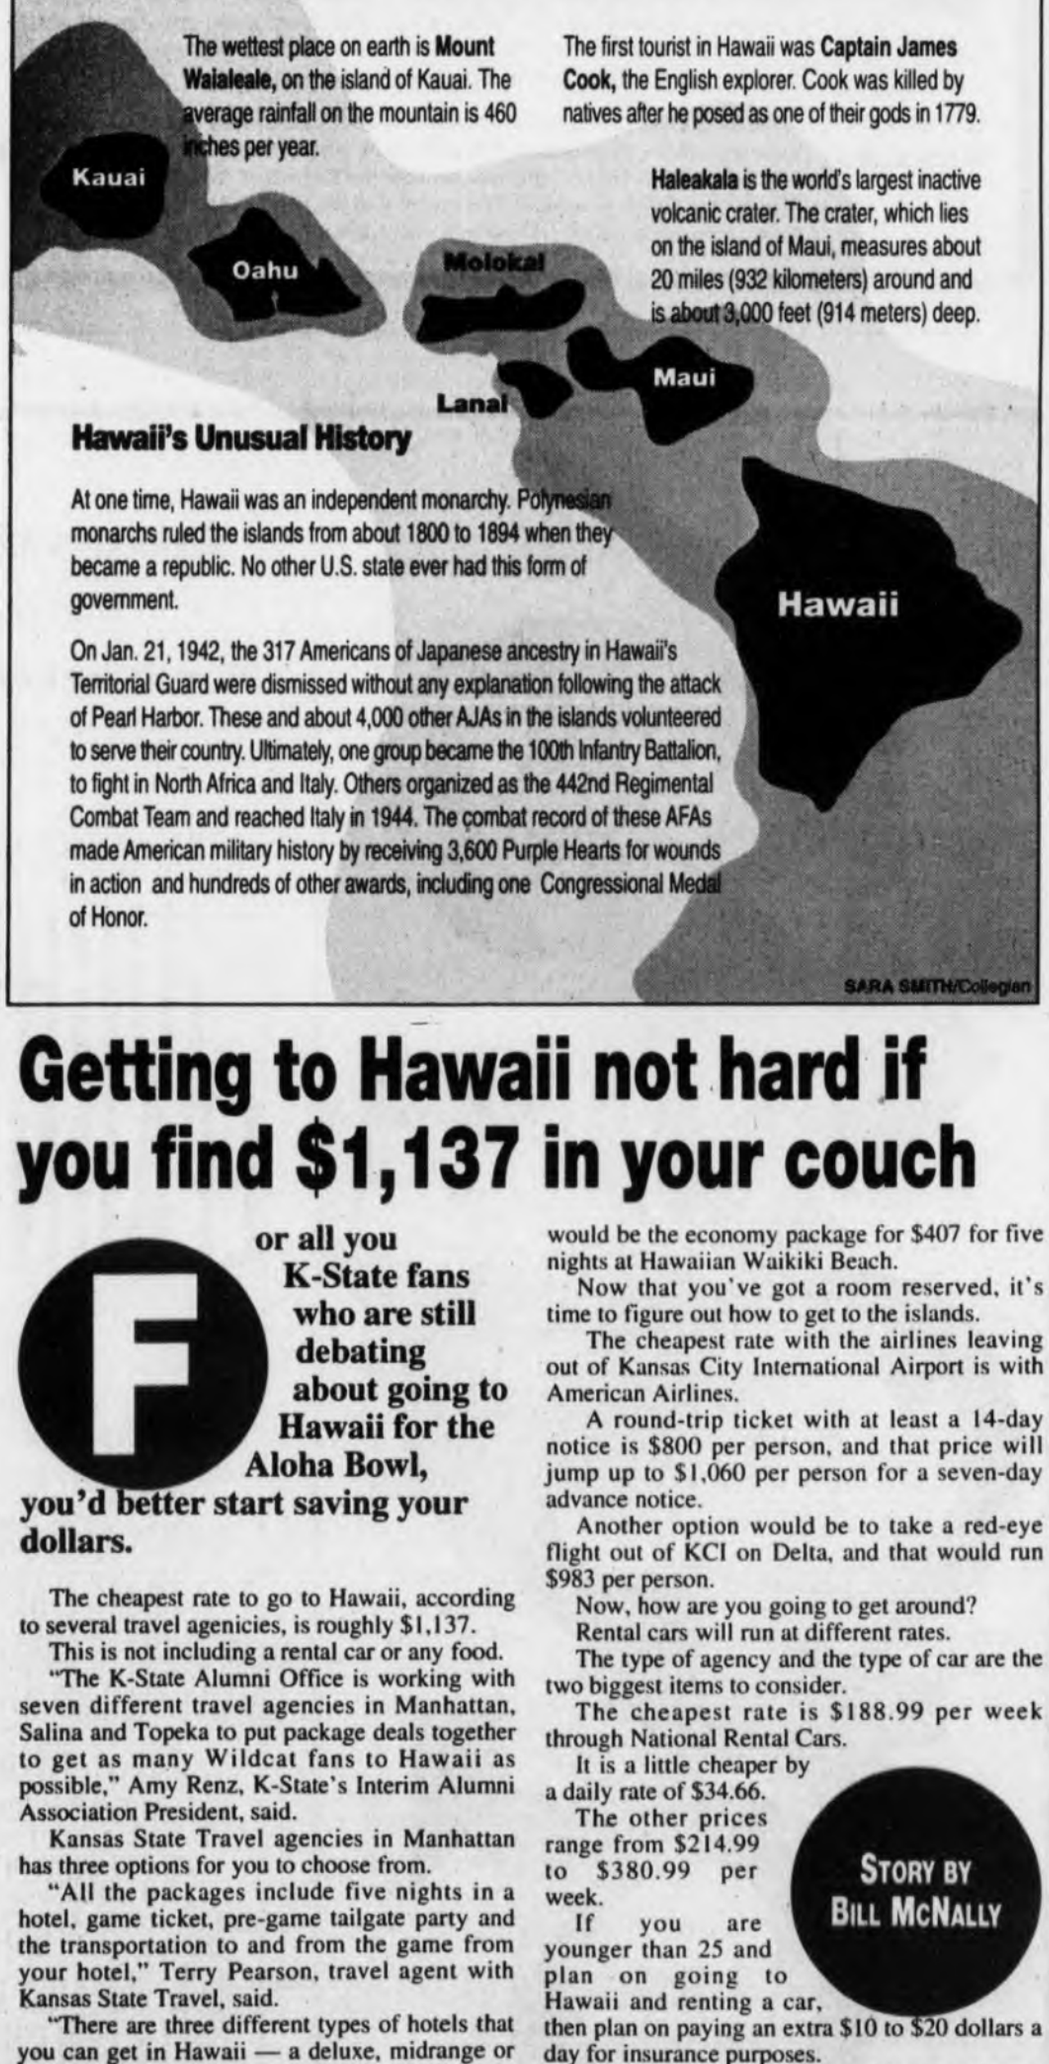
The National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific is located atop the Punchbowl. It is the final resting point for more than 25,000 servicemen and women who died in World War II and the Korean and Vietnam wars.

Connie Busch, manager of Adventures International Ltd. travel agency, said the best way to get around in Hawaii is by bus.

"They charge a minimal fee, and you can buy a schedule at local stores," Busch said. "If you follow the schedule, you can get anywhere on the island."

STORY BY KIMBERLY HEFLING

Busch said the buses are clean and safe and are the form of transportation used by most Hawaiian people.



Because the Aloha Bowl is during the holiday season, Busch said renting a car will be especially expensive. Also, Busch said it is not uncommon to pay $10 to park an automobile in Honolulu.

HALF A WORLD AWAY

The wettest place on earth is Mount Waialeale, on the island of Kauai. The average rainfall on the mountain is 460 inches per year.

The first tourist in Hawaii was Captain James Cook, the English explorer. Cook was killed by natives after he posed as one of their gods in 1779.

Haleakala is the world's largest inactive volcanic crater. The crater, which lies on the island of Maui, measures about 20 miles (932 kilometers) around and is about 3,000 feet (914 meters) deep.

Hawaii's Unusual History

At one time, Hawaii was an independent monarchy. Polynesian monarchs ruled the islands from about 1800 to 1894 when they became a republic. No other U.S. state ever had this form of government.

On Jan. 21, 1942, the 317 Americans of Japanese ancestry in Hawaii's Territorial Guard were dismissed without any explanation following the attack of Pearl Harbor. These and about 4,000 other AJAs in the islands volunteered to serve their country. Ultimately, one group became the 100th Infantry Battalion, to fight in North Africa and Italy. Others organized as the 442nd Regimental Combat Team and reached Italy in 1944. The combat record of these AFAs made American military history by receiving 3,600 Purple Hearts for wounds in action and hundreds of other awards, including one Congressional Medal of Honor.

Getting to Hawaii not hard if you find $1,137 in your couch

For all you K-State fans who are still debating about going to Hawaii for the Aloha Bowl, you'd better start saving your dollars.

The cheapest rate to go to Hawaii, according to several travel agenicies, is roughly $1,137.

This is not including a rental car or any food.

"The K-State Alumni Office is working with seven different travel agencies in Manhattan, Salina and Topeka to put package deals together to get as many Wildcat fans to Hawaii as possible," Amy Renz, K-State's Interim Alumni Association President, said.

Kansas State Travel agencies in Manhattan has three options for you to choose from.

"All the packages include five nights in a hotel, game ticket, pre-game tailgate party and the transportation to and from the game from your hotel," Terry Pearson, travel agent with Kansas State Travel, said.

"There are three different types of hotels that you can get in Hawaii — a deluxe, midrange or the economy type," Pearson said.

The deluxe is the most expensive of the three, and it will run you $619 per person for five nights at the Sheraton on Waikiki Beach.

The next option would be to take the mid-range package, which would put you in the Princess Kaiulani for $475 for five nights.

The last option, and the cheapest option, would be the economy package for $407 for five nights at Hawaiian Waikiki Beach.

Now that you've got a room reserved, it's time to figure out how to get to the islands.

The cheapest rate with the airlines leaving out of Kansas City International Airport is with American Airlines.

A round-trip ticket with at least a 14-day notice is $800 per person, and that price will jump up to $1,060 per person for a seven-day advance notice.

Another option would be to take a red-eye flight out of KCI on Delta, and that would run $983 per person.

Now, how are you going to get around?

Rental cars will run at different rates.

The type of agency and the type of car are the two biggest items to consider.

The cheapest rate is $188.99 per week through National Rental Cars.

It is a little cheaper by a daily rate of $34.66.

The other prices range from $214.99 to $380.99 per week.

STORY BY BILL MCNALLY

If you are younger than 25 and plan on going to Hawaii and renting a car, then plan on paying an extra $10 to $20 dollars a day for insurance purposes.

The K-State Alumni Office has a toll-free Aloha Bowl hot-line to assist fans that are interested in attending the bowl game in Hawaii.

You can call 1-800-898-Bowl if you live outside of Manhattan. If you live in Manhattan, call 532-5051.

The hotline is open from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. and from 1 to 5 p.m.

THE MATCH-UP

How the Wildcat football team stacks up to Boston College on Christmas Day

OFFENSE

POSITION		KSU	BC
LINE	K-State gets the nod in this category, as the Cats performed well for most of the season, except against Nebraska. Tackles Barrett Brooks and Jim Hmielewski are considered to be one of the best tackle duos in the league.	✓
WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS	The Cats have the top receivers in the Big Eight, and maybe the best group in the country. The Cats became the first Big Eight team to have four receivers with more than 40 receptions. The Eagles are led by tight end Pete Mitchell. He is an all-American, do-everything type of player. Mitchell can catch the deep pass, or make the key block on a running play.	✓
RUNNING BACKS	The Boston College offensive attack starts on the ground, and that's where running backs David Green and Justice Smith come in. Green finished with 1,018 yards, and Smith finished with 708 yards rushing. K-State's ground attack is led by the Cats' all-time leading rusher, J.J. Smith. He capped his season off with a 200-yard performance against UNLV.		✓
QUARTERBACKS	Chad May is probably the best pro prospect in the college ranks according to many NFL scouts. He finished with 200 completions this season, along with 18 touchdown passes. B.C.'s passing duties fall on the shoulders of Mark Hartsell, who finished with 1,864 yards passing. He had 10 interceptions with only 13 touchdowns.	✓

DEFENSE

POSITION		KSU	BC
LINE	The K-State defensive line rates as one of the best in the Big Eight Conference. Returners Tim Colston and Darrell Harbert anchor the tackle positions for the Wildcats. End Dirk Ochs is considered to be one of the top pass rushers in the league. Boston College is led by Mike Mamula, who is one of the best pass rushers in the country. He led the Big East in sacks with 13.	✓
LINEBACKERS	B.C. is led by Stephen Boyd, who was selected as an all-American by the Football News. He set the Eagles' all-time tackle record with 524 career tackles. The K-State linebacking corps have suffered serious injuries this season. Kirby Hocutt was hobbled in the last couple of games, but Laird Veatch has stepped up and had 83 tackles this season. Both Veatch and Percell Gaskins received all-Big Eight honors this season.		✓
SECONDARY	After coming in as the Cats' weak area in the beginning of the year, the K-State secondary has become the defense's strength. Joe Gordon, Chris Canty and Chuck Marlowe received all-Big Eight honors this season. Marlowe finished the season as the Cats' leading tackler with 95 tackles. The Eagles' leader is cornerback Daryl Porter, who finished the season as its third-leading tackler. Strong Safety Eric Shorter is one of Boston College's most consistent defenders.	✓

SPECIAL TEAMS

POSITION		KSU	BC
PUNTING	The Eagles have one of the Big East's best punters with Jeff Beckley. Throughout the season, Beckley has maintained a 43.9-yard average, and his longest punt is 64 yards. The K-State punting game almost cost the Cats a win against Missouri. Eric Hardy is the top punter with a 38.1-yard average, but he does have a 72-yard punt.		✓
PLACE KICKING	Even though the Eagles have David Gordon, who kicked the game-winning field goal against Notre Dame last season, the Cats have the advantage here. Placekicker Martin Gramatica is 6 out of 9 for the season, but he had two of those attempts blocked. Gordon is 9 out of 20 for the season.	✓

INTANGIBLES

AREA		KSU	BC
MOMENTUM	The Cats have something to prove. After being denied a Coalition bowl berth, K-State is out to prove that the Wildcats belong with the big boys. B.C. is coming off two-straight losses to West Virginia and Miami. With a win, K-State could remain in the top 10 for the first time ever.	✓
COACHING	K-State coach Bill Snyder is one of the country's best, as he turned the program around. That's why his name has been brought up in numerous job openings across the country. This is B.C. coach Doug Henning's first season. Henning does have experience, though — coaching in the NFL with San Diego.	✓
THE EDGE	The Cats should have the edge in Hawaii. Only if the rumors have an effect on the Cats' morale, they have the advantages in the key categories. B.C. is a strong rushing team, and the Cats have faced some of the best rushing attacks in the country this season. If the Cats can get their passing attack on track, K-State will send a message to the Coalition. That message is that they belong.	✓

Our players-of-year selections

JEREMY CRABTREE

Even though quarterback Chad May grabs the Wildcat Watch's Most Valuable Player of the Year honor, several other players had important roles on this season's team.

Defensive Player of the Year: Defensive tackle Tim Colston. Colston is the cog that keeps the K-State defensive machine running.

While smashing opposing running backs and quarterbacks, Colston earned all-Big Eight honors from both the Associated Press and Big Eight coaches.

Against Colorado, Colston had 12 tackles, which included 11 solo tackles and two sacks.

Special teams Player of the Year: Mitch Running. The Cats started the season off with freshman, Chris Canty returning punts. However, he had trouble handling the kicks, so Coach Bill Snyder turned to Running.

Running took over for Canty, and he finished the season with a 9.1-yard average on punt returns.

Running was so valuable to the special-teams squad that he even took over as holder for Martin Gramatica in the Missouri game.

Most Exciting Player of the Year: Ron Brown. No matter where Brown caught the ball, he made things happen. Against Oklahoma, he turned two short passes into touchdowns.

"Every time I touched the ball, I'd just try to make something happen," Brown said.

Brown's most exciting play came against Missouri in Columbia.

That's when Brown caught a short screen pass. As the Tigers went after Brown to make the tackle, he slipped through five defenders and scampered for a 35 yard touchdown.

Most Improved Player: Tyson Schwieger. Schwieger jumped into the Cats' starting line-up this season after being a reserve.

With the starting role now all his own, Schwieger had an immediate effect. He became the first Cat ever, since Greg Washington in 1988, to catch touchdowns in three consecutive games.

Schwieger also led the Big Eight in receiving with seven touchdowns and a 4.8 average per catch.

Newcomer of the Year: Cornerback Chris Canty. Chris Canty became an important figure in the K-State defensive backfield. After being redshirted last season, Canty stepped in to fill the shoes of Kenny McEntyre, who was an all-Big Eight selection last season.

Canty made an immediate contribution by spending time covering some of the best receivers in the Big Eight.

The freshman newcomer made his biggest play against Missouri, when he broke up the Tigers' fourth down attempt from the 3-yard line.

Most Valuable Haircut: Mike Ekeler. Ekeler is the Cats' emotional leader on the field. Students in the student section worship Ekeler.

What makes this walk-on linebacker so special? Maybe it's the fact that Ekeler has given his body up to make the K-State football program as successful as it is now.

No one knows for sure, but what would the Watch's Player of the Year team be without Ek-e-ler.

May controls K-State's reins

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Chad May is many things to the K-State football program. He is a leader, a motivator, and most importantly, May is a winner.

May

May's leadership can be seen on the field during every game. As K-State quarterback the past two seasons, May has led the Cats to a 18-3-1 record, while burning up the Big Eight Conference passing records.

"I take the leadership role seriously," May said earlier this season. "I feel if the team is going bad, then it's my responsibility to get things going."

Inside the huddle, May demands respect.

"I know that I am the leader of this team," May said. "They look to me in the huddle, and I just hope that I have the ball when the game is on the line."

With the winning record, pressure surrounds May everywhere he goes. However, he doesn't let that get to him.

"I put the pressure on myself," May said. "I don't let the media, alumni or the fans put any more pressure on me."

Along with being a leader, May brings a competitive attitude to the team that allows him to motivate the players around him.

"I have no doubt that he is the best college quarterback in the country," second-string quarterback Matt Miller said. "He demands respect from everyone inside of the huddle. He just motivates everyone around him to try their best to win."

One thing that separates May from other former K-State quarterbacks is the fact that he is a winner.

May has led the Cats to two straight third-place finishes in the Big Eight and two bowl appearances.

Last season, K-State coach Bill Snyder said May was the best quarterback in the conference.

"He's my all-Big Eight quarterback," Snyder said. "There are some excellent quarterbacks in this league, but Chad went head-to-head with Tommie Frazier and Kordell Stewart and didn't come out on the short end of the stick against anyone."

Apparently, the Associated Press agreed with Snyder this season, as he tied Stewart for first team all-Big Eight.

Despite leading K-State to nine victories this season, May will probably be most known for leading the Cats to a 21-17 come-from-behind victory against Oklahoma State last season.

"The drive that Chad put together in that time frame was the best I've seen in my career," Snyder said.

The Drive, as it has become known to K-State fans, came with the Cats trailing 17-14 with just less than a minute to go.

K-State was out of timeouts, but May wasn't fazed as he led the Cats on a six-play, 80-yard drive for the victory.

"I've been coaching for a long time. I've been around a lot of great two-minute drives — nothing matches the one Chad engineered."

This season, May broke a Big Eight record by throwing touchdowns in 16-consecutive games.

"All I want is a shot at the NFL," May said.

Student dies from stab wound

Early Monday morning, two first-floor Goodnow Hall residents found Ross Taton leaning on and gulping water from the fountain 30 feet down the hall from his room.

"He wanted to go back to his room and just lie down," Eric Ziegler, freshman in business administration, said.

However, Taton, sophomore in engineering, felt faint and lay down in the hallway.

Realizing that Taton was bleeding, Ziegler assisted him while the other resident ran to call 911. First-floor resident assistant Shannon Moore joined the three to wait for an ambulance.

"Ross asked for his glasses and just kept talking about how he didn't want an ambulance," Ziegler said.

Taton was taken to Memorial Hospital for treatment of a single stab wound to the upper chest. He was then to be transported to a Topeka hospital by ambulance, but his condition quickly worsened on the way, and the ambulance returned to Memorial Hospital, where he was declared dead at 6:35 a.m.

A knife with a 6-inch blade was recovered from the 19-year-old student's room, and investigators said they believe it might have been the weapon used.

Capt. Robert Mellgren of K-State police said the police's goal is to put as much law-enforcement coverage on the case as quickly as possible.

Taton remembered as quiet

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Goodnow Hall resident Ross Taton, 19, died early Monday morning at Memorial Hospital because of a single stab wound to his chest.

He graduated in May 1993 as an honor student of Argonia High School and began attending K-State in the fall with academic scholarships. Taton was a sophomore in engineering and was known by his friends as a quiet person.

Jacob Arnett, sophomore in electrical engineering, said he lived next door to Taton on the third floor of Goodnow Hall.

"He played football in the hall with his friends a lot," Arnett said.

Richard Allen, a close neighbor, said he would miss Taton.

"I'm going to miss seeing Ross walk by the front of Goodnow and saying 'hi' and him saying 'nothing much, gotta go,'" Allen said.

Ken Bradfield, Argonia High School director of bands and Spanish teacher, said Taton enjoyed playing his trumpet and read a lot of science fiction novels.

"Ross was a very intelligent kid with a keen sense of humor that usually went over the other kids' heads," Bradfield said.

Taton's mother, Teresa Taton, said Ross was a good kid and loved to read.

"He loved his books, and he loved his computer," she said.

His parents, Ralph "Dean" and Teresa Taton, will have a memorial service Friday afternoon at the Argonia Friends Church in Argonia.

Thieves target Greek houses

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

When Eric Stonestreet, senior in accounting, entered the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity the evening of Dec. 26, he was expecting to find a cold, dark house.

What he wasn't expecting to find was his fraternity burglarized.

Stonestreet wasn't the only member of a K-State fraternity to come home to find items missing and destroyed during the semester break.

Members of the Acacia and Phi Kappa Theta fraternities also returned to burglarized houses.

Capt. Allen Raynor of the Riley County Police Department said one suspect has been arrested in connection with the burglaries.

The arrest took place in the lawn of the Pike fraternity.

Stonestreet said he called the police after realizing a break-in had occurred.

While police processed the information with Stonestreet, he said one officer went outside to the car to make a phone call. At this time, Stonestreet said the officer noticed a male jogging with a large sack.

The officer tackled the male in the Pike lawn, he said. The contents inside the bag included some of Stonestreet's belongings.

"I'm not sure if he was in the house at the same time I was or not," he said.

"Now, it's not that I feel more insecure, but I do feel more vulnerable," Stonestreet said. "When shit happens to you, you no longer feel immortal. You know you are something that can be touched."

The Acacia fraternity also had several items stolen.

Complete assessment is not finished, but Kurt Guth, Acacia fraternity treasurer, said three bikes, a portable compact disc player, a car stereo and two car amplifiers were stolen. In addition, each room in the house was ransacked, he said.

Guth and Stonestreet said the burglars seemed to take strange items.

"There were items such as CD players, portable stereos, TVs and VCRs not stolen, but one person in our house, Steve Stolen checks almost cost Triangle fraternity more than $7,000.

Don Gay, president of Triangle, discovered the missing checks Dec. 21.

"There were 60 checks stolen, and six have gone to the bank," he said. "The person signing the checks was using a student ID. The name they were using is that of someone enrolled at K-State, but the police don't believe it is that person."

The fraternity will not suffer a loss from the burglary. Commerce Bank caught the checks before they were charged to Triangle's account because they recognized that the signatures were unauthorized.

"There really are not any repercussions for the house because most of the checks were written out of town," Gay said.

The businesses and the bank that accepted the checks lose the money.

Checks were written to Westside Pets in Topeka, Wolf Camera & Video in Topeka, Computer Associates in Topeka, Radio Shack in Wichita, a water-bed store and various other businesses.

The items that were reported purchased included a cocker spaniel, two computers and a living-room set. Three of the checks were written for more than $1,400 each. The rest were each written for less than $300.

"They total $7,000 that we know of, but I get calls every day about more checks," Gay said.

It is not known how the checks were taken or who took them.

"It is very strange — usually the checkbook is locked away," Gay said. "It makes you leery of people coming in, and I don't like that feeling. We will still keep offering tours of our house and welcoming people in, but we are a little more cautious now."

We bring you the news between aspirin, cigarettes and yelling

Please allow me to introduce myself.

I'm the editor in chief of the Collegian for the spring semester.

A new semester means a new staff. Some are veterans, and some are just beginning their newsroom careers. This staff will have its own personality and character.

What do I do (that is, other than pop aspirin, smoke cigarettes and yell)? I'm responsible for everything you see before you now, from the crosswords to the cop reports.

In this first paper, we are trying to get our readers caught up with what happened over semester break in Manhattan and K-State. Unfortunately, this first issue isn't filled with uplifting news such as everyone passing their classes, inflation going down or every problem K-State had in December suddenly getting better.

We are saddened to report two students' deaths, two retired administrators' deaths and one former Aggieville businessman's death.

We are also saddened to report crimes that happened over break.

I am not apologizing to be reporting these items. This is news. We don't want, nor wish, people to die or buildings to be broken into to have a "good news day." But we will cover them nonetheless.

This semester you will notice a few improvements to the Collegian. The Life page from the fall semester now has two offspring — Campus Life and Greek Life. Campus Life will cover different aspects of campus, from residence halls to non-traditional students to classified employees. Greek Life will cover what happens or affects members of sororities and fraternities, from comparing living in or out of a house (today's Greek Life) to roommate relations to the black greek organizations. (Basically, the titles are pretty much self-explanatory, huh?)

The Wildcat Watch will no longer be its own section. It has moved into the Collegian, merging itself with the Sports page. It will continue to appear on Wednesdays.

You might also notice a slightly different design look for the paper.

"Why make these changes?" you might ask. (You're probably not asking that, but humor me.)

In journalism, if you're not trying new things, be it coverage, special sections or design, you can never improve your newspaper. If you are not improving your product for readers, then you are failing readers by not trying to give them the best newspaper you can.

Not everything changed. The original Life is alive and well on Thursdays. Migraines, those 3-D pictures that only 2 percent of the population can see, will appear on Friday's Weekend page.

One thing I wish to improve is reader feedback. We learn more from readers' impressions than any textbook or editors' meeting could give us.

If you don't like something or if you love something, call us at 532-6556, write us at Kedzie Hall 116 or e-mail us at collegn@ksu.ksu.edu.

My staff and I are always open to comments or criticisms.

My wish is to provide a newspaper that educates, enlightens and entertains. (Oh, and that little thing about graduating and getting a job, also.)

▶ STUDENT DIES FROM SELF-INFLICTED WOUND 3 DAYS BEFORE HOLIDAYS

Chris Julian, sophomore in construction science and management, died Dec. 22 from a self-inflicted gunshot wound.

Julian was found dead at his home, 1405 Hartman Place, in Manhattan. He was 22.

Julian was born Nov. 9, 1972, in Mount Kisco, N.Y., and graduated from Shawnee Mission Northwest High School in 1991.

He came to K-State in fall 1992.

Tony Jaime, senior in engineering, said Julian will be missed by his friends.

"He was a lot of fun," Jaime said. "We were always going over to his house and having fun with everyone. It seemed like he was smiling all the time."

Jaime said Julian seemed just like a regular college student. He said Julian was somewhat depressed during finals, but not more than anyone else.

"Sometimes I don't think he realized we cared about him as much as we did," Jaime said.

The funeral was Dec. 27 at Amos Family Funeral Home in Shawnee.

▶ TWO FORMER K-STATE ADMINISTRATORS DIE DURING SEMESTER BREAK

Two former K-State administrators died during semester break.

Dr. Lee Railsback, 83, died Dec. 18 at the Stoneybrook Retirement Center in Topeka. Norman Whitehair, 74, died Dec. 20 of emphysema.

Railsback was born May 31, 1911, in Langdon, where he graduated from high school.

Railsback attended Hutchinson Community College two years before receiving his doctorate in veterinary medicine from K-State in 1937.

Railsback was a member of the basketball and track teams at K-State and was the varsity basketball captain in 1935.

He practiced veterinary medicine in Harrison, Ark., from 1937 to 1941 and in Ellsworth, Minn., from 1946 to 1961 before he joined the K-State veterinary medicine faculty and eventually became dean of the college.

Railsback worked in the college for 20 years until he retired in 1981.

Helen Railsback, Lee's wife of 57 years, said another one of his passions was canoeing.

"He canoed in every state in the union," Helen Railsback said. "That's how people remember him around here because that's what he did every day since he retired."

He also headed the Kansas State University Agency for International Development, which established a College of Veterinary Medicine in Zaria, Nigeria.

From 1941 to 1946, Railsback served in World War II as a member of the Army Veterinary Medical Corps in China and Burma.

Railsback is survived by his wife, Helen; two daughters, Virginia Gunn and Beth Lee; two sisters, Myrtle Joyce and Faye Brooks; and five grandsons.

Memorial contributions can be made to the First Congregational Church, the College of Veterinary Medicine at K-State or the charity of the donor's choice. They can be left at or mailed to the Irvin-Parkview Funeral Home.

Whitehair was born Sept. 10, 1920, in Abilene. Whitehair had lived in Manhattan since 1949.

He received his bachelor's and master's degrees from K-State and his doctorate in agricultural economics from Purdue University in 1964.

During his education at K-State, Whitehair played for the football team.

Whitehair was a member of the Marines from 1943 to 1946 during World War II and served as a marine captain.

He began his extension career as an agent in Rollins County after graduation and became a professor in extension co-op with agricultural economics at K-State in 1949.

Whitehair retired from K-State in 1978.

"He helped farmers forecast and introduced them to using computers to predict the weather," his wife, Frances Whitehair, said. "He would help them know what crops to plant and when."

He married Frances Meade in 1944 in Clearwater, Fla.

Whitehair is survived by his wife and six daughters: Norma Battle, Rita Larsen, Mary Hosler, Therese Solis, Jane Whitehair and Margaret Michal.

He is buried at Sunrise Cemetery. Memorial contributions may be made to Seven Dolors Catholic schools.

▶ K-STATE ATHLETE, FORMER OWNER OF KITE'S TAVERN DIES AT 71

MANHATTAN (AP) — Keith "Kite" Thomas, the longtime owner and operator of the popular Kite's tavern in Aggieville, has died of cancer.

Thomas, 71, died Saturday at a Rocky Mount, N.C., hospital.

Thomas, a native of Kansas City, Kan., attended K-State on a basketball scholarship and later went out for baseball. Thomas later played baseball for the Philadelphia Athletics, the Washington Senators and the Chicago White Sox before he returned to Manhattan and bought the tavern in the 1950s.

Kite's became the most popular bar in Manhattan, at one point dispensing more beer than any other tavern in Kansas, according to public records. Thomas moved to North Carolina in the early 1970s.

Thomas is survived by his wife, Wynell; two sons, Gary and Kent of Wichita; and two grandchildren.

Services were Tuesday at the Johnson Funeral Home Chapel in Rocky Mount. A memorial service is planned for a later date.

The line at fee payment grows as students wait for the campus computer system to get back on line. Fee payment was delayed because of a power outage on a mainframe computer in the basement of Farrell Library. The interruption caused the administrative systems software to lock up.

Outage lengthens payment lines

JOE KLEIDOSTY
Collegian

Students scheduled to pay fees on Monday faced long lines because of a power outage that occurred in Farrell Library at about 9:45 a.m.

Others were unable to pay fees because they had no statement of account, Gunile DeVault, associate registrar, said.

The power outage interrupted a process in the mainframe in the basement of Farrell Library and caused the administrative systems software to lock up, John Bucher, director of Computing and Network Services, said.

When this software locked up, it directly affected the fee payment process because no statements of account could be printed.

The University did not drop the schedules of students who were unable to pay fees on Monday because of the computer problems.

Those who were unable to pay their fees were told to come back Tuesday, DeVault said.

Some students were able to pay fees without any problems.

"It was the smoothest time I've had so far," Angie Kuckelman, senior in secondary education, said.

Others felt the repercussions of the power outage.

"Normally, it would've taken me five minutes. It took me an hour and a half," Sharon Moreland, senior in English, said. "They didn't have my statement of account, and my line started at the road."

DeVault said there were no serious problems with fee payment as a result of the power outage.

"Under the circumstances, I think the students have handled this very well," DeVault said.

Things were running a lot better Tuesday, DeVault said.

K-State is planning fee payment by mail, DeVault said.

"Normally, it would've taken me five minutes. It took me an hour and a half."

Student Senate wants fitness requirement out

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Student Senate voted to uphold the Academic Affairs Committee's recommendation to take Principles of Physical Fitness out of the general education requirements.

"P.E. might be good for some curricula, but not for all people," said Scott Rottinghaus, Senate Academic Affairs Committee chairman.

The committee said the PE requirement didn't fit in with the other requirements, such as English composition and speech, Rottinghaus, senior in biology and classics, said.

"Our general feeling was that although it was mandatory, it wasn't living up to the requirements," Chris Ginn, Academic Affairs Committee member, said.

"We don't feel P.E. is as important as English composition or speech," Rottinghaus said.

While P.E. will help you in life, English composition and speech are skills needed in the job market, he said.

"Some people think it's a review of high-school health," Rottinghaus said.

Ginn, sophomore in secondary education and education senator, said the committee didn't feel the class fit with the requirements and the goals of the University.

"The last time it went through Senate, it was recommended to keep it," he said.

The fitness class would not be removed from the kinesiology curriculum, but the class would not be an all-University requirement, Ginn said.

"We don't want to kill the class or even the department,"

Cessna chooses Independence over Manhattan for plane factory

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

The race is over, and Manhattan has lost.

Cessna, the largest airplane manufacturer in Kansas, will open its new plant in Independence, not Manhattan.

Manhattan was one of the five finalist cities selected to compete for the 1,000-job plant that would have pumped about $20 million annually into the economy.

Dave Franson, director of public relations for Cessna, said the competition was extremely close.

"This was one of the most difficult decisions we've had to make. We wished we could have had a plant in each of the five finalist cities," he said.

The other three cities were Emporia, Hays and Pittsburg. Cessna would not elaborate on exactly why Independence was chosen instead of the other cities.

"It is not our intention to divulge the details of our criteria in the media. That's something we reserve for the highest levels of the corporation," he said.

Randy Martin, president of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said the mayor's economic task force is looking for other uses for the money generated by the mill levies and the half-cent sales tax approved by voters in November.

"That money will be able to be used for other projects," he said.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

University is right to keep public informed

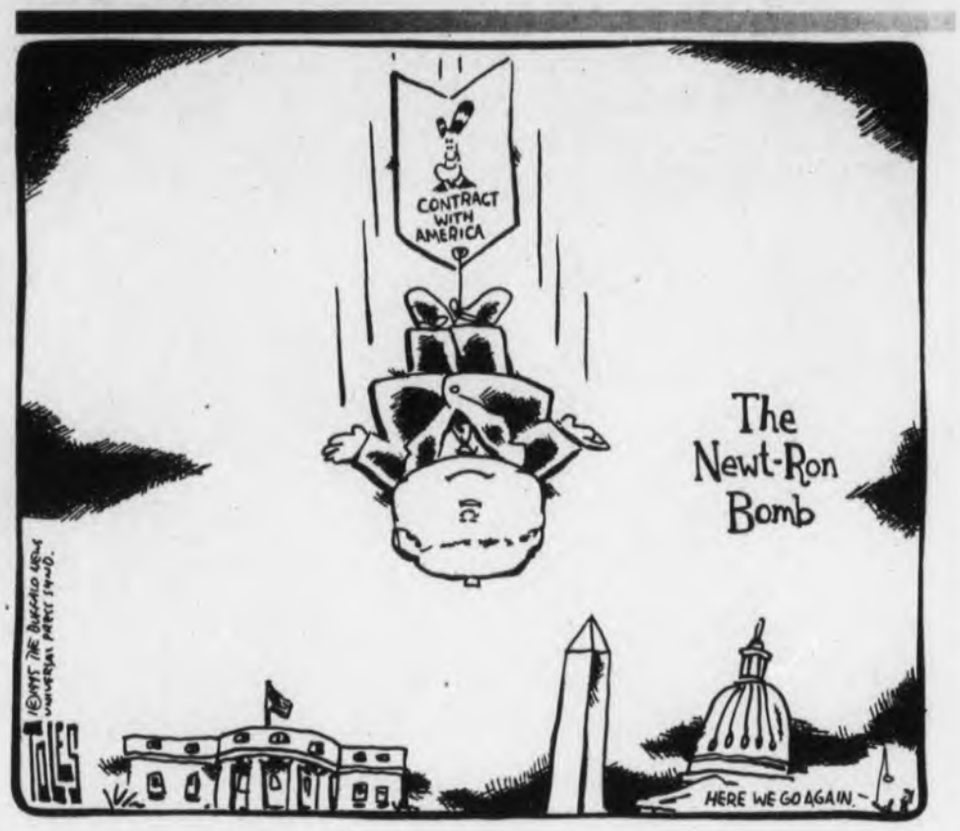
Both the residence halls and the University deserve a thumbs-up for keeping the public informed.

The University has done a great job dealing with the loss of a student.

Updates on the suspected homicide at Goodnow Hall have helped keep students informed, and rumors and paranoia to a minimum.

Signs posted near the lines at enrollment in Ahearn Fieldhouse and in the restrooms at residence halls have kept the facts straight.

Last fall, a pair of reported rapes, one off campus and another in Smurthwaite House, created many rumors. People said they didn't know what was going on.



Information could only be gathered at a few meetings or in the Collegian. Tight-lipped sources, both in the city and the University, kept information to a minimum. As a result, rumors and fear escalated about campus.

As much as these sources would have liked to, they could not keep people updated 24 hours a day.

Open information helps calm fears. Telling people exactly what is going on in a serious situation puts out flash fires of bad information before they can start.

With the recent death of a K-State student, both the residence halls and the University deserve a thumbs-up for keeping the public informed.

TOLES

Saying no to cable can enlighten the mind, save cash

This is my first chance to have the ear of this many people at once and I don't want to abuse it, so I have chosen to start by revealing a rather personal bit of information about myself.

Are you ready? Here goes.

I don't watch television. (I know; you were expecting something much bigger.)

Why don't I watch television, you ask? Because, plain and simple, I haven't found much worth watching.

Believe it or not, I don't feel deprived because I don't know the words to the "Power Rangers" theme.

Don't get me wrong. When television is available, I don't run screaming from the room. I even own a television and a VCR. (Blockbuster gets a lot of my money.) As a matter of fact, I have been known to go into Letterman withdrawal.

I've thought about getting cable, but what would I do with it? All I really want to watch anyway is the Comedy Channel, and we all know how that works.

I guess the real reason I don't give Tele-Communications Inc. my hard-earned $30 is because I hate supporting monopolies, and they're a big one. TCI is the largest conglomerate in the country; it owns 75 percent of all affiliates nationwide.

KADY MASSEY

And, according to the people who have cable, they're raising the rates anyway.

So I say revolt.

We're in college, and the majority of us have proven ourselves literate, so sit your butt in front of a computer or pick up a pen and write to the cable company. It always claims to want to hear from its viewers. If you have cable, just put a note on the bottom of your bill so they'll be sure to see it. Tell them we want our "Star Trek: The Next Generation" and our "Monty Python" marathons just like everyone else.

Or even better, cancel.

Yeah, you read right, get the stinkin' thing turned off.

Donate your television to an art student, turn it into a terrarium or push it off the top of Durland Hall and time the fall. A friend of mine made a really cool aquarium from an old TV set.

But whatever you do, be sure to tell TCI why you're doing it. It's truly amazing what can be accomplished when a bunch of people all gripe at once. The powers-that-be make all the decisions in Denver and don't seem to know or care what their viewers in Manhattan would like. So show them by taking away the cash flow.

Money talks, right?

Once television is gone from our lives, think of all the things that can come in: more time spent in the lost art of conversation; men and women will learn to communicate; book sales will triple.

Once the nationwide audience for televised sports is decreased, pro athlete's salaries might return to a realistic level.

We won't have to watch commercials; we can give our fast-forward buttons a rest.

At the very least, we will be rid of "Beverly Hillbillies" reruns. I think that alone would make the whole thing worthwhile.

I know this sounds like a lot of effort, but it isn't, really. I think the cultural level of this country can be brought up to former standards one person at a time.

Maybe if we get rid of television, our nation's educational level will begin to approach Germany's. (I can hope.)

So this is it, do-or-die time. Television has reached a new low, and the money behind it doesn't seem to care.

Most network television caters to the lowest common denominator anyway; don't be among them.

Separate yourself from the pack and read a good book. Heck, read a bad book. Go lie on your back and find pictures in the clouds.

Just let the corporate giants know what you want.

Kady Massey is a sophomore in journalism and mass communications.

Reader input wanted for spring Opinion page

CHRISTY LITTLE

You know school is back in session when you see these three things:

- You see it's going to take you 25 minutes and a fender bender to get a parking space at the Union.
- You see your book receipt is actually too long to fit in your wallet.
- You see the Collegian return for another semester.

Hopefully, the Collegian is a welcome sight, unlike the other things you have to come back to, such as the tremendous defecit you see in your checkbook after fee payment and the beady eyes of your professors that make sure you aren't snoozing in class (or reading the Collegian, for that matter).

And hopefully, for those of you who read the paper on a daily basis, the Opinion page will be part of your morning routine.

This semester, you will see the return of well-known columnists John Hart, Dan Lewerenz, Erin Mansur-Smith and Scott Allen Miller.

You'll also see new faces Kady Massey, Kathleen Mastio, Jeremy Stephens and Bob McMannis.

These columnists were hired both for their writing abilities and for their diverse opinions. You should not see three columns on parking or Union expansion in any given week. Their interests, opinions and background make them as different as you could hope eight people would be.

A new feature on the Opinion page will be a pros-and-cons section between John Hart and Dan Lewerenz. They will tackle new issues every other Thursday and give you two sides to whatever topic they choose to undertake.

The editorial board, consisting of the Collegian editors and paid editorial board staff members, will target local and campus issues.

The editorial cartoon, Toles, will continue to run on the Opinion page on a daily basis.

But even with the variety you'll find on this spring's Opinion page, what makes it a truly diverse page is your input.

You can give input for the page through both letters and guest columns.

Your letters can respond to columns and editorials you find on the Opinion page or to other letters.

They can also initiate topics you have not yet seen on the Opinion page so far.

Guest columns are also welcome. They act as a more in-depth viewpoint on a given issue (much like the columns you see by our regular writers every day), and the Collegian welcomes them as a change from the regular faces that will be featured Monday through Friday.

Both guest columns and letters to the editor can be sent to the Collegian in three ways. They can be mailed to the Collegian c/o Christy Little, 116 Kedzie Hall, Kansas State University, Manhattan, Kan. 66506. Any mailed letters will be followed up by a phone call to verify you wrote the letter, so be sure to include your name and phone number, as well as your year in school and your major.

You may hand-deliver your guest column or letter to the same address, and a photo identification card will be necessary.

The third way to deliver your guest column or letter is by e-mail. You may send them to the following address: letters@spub.ksu.edu.

I can't emphasize enough how important your contribution to the Opinion page is to maintaining variety and generating new opinions.

This is not a group of people who assume that as the Opinion page staff, they are the only people with something to say. What you have to say is also very important. It is often your input that sends them onto their next topic.

Please take this message to heart and contribute when and how you feel. If you have any questions or comments, please contact me at the Collegian newsroom at 532-6556.

Christy Little is the opinion editor and a junior in secondary education.

COLLEGIAN OPINION POLICY

Editorials by the Collegian editorial board reflect the opinions of the editors and Collegian in general. Columns, however, represent only the opinions of the individual columnists.

READERS WRITE

Drop letters off at Kedzie 116 or send them to Letters to the Editor, c/o Christy Little, Kansas State Collegian, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, KS 66506. We accept letters by e-mail also. Our address is letters@spub.ksu.edu. Letters should be addressed to the editor and must include a name, address and phone number. A photo identification will be necessary for hand-delivered letters.

K-State supports new combine

Dear editor,

On Dec. 8, an article about a new combine, the Bi-Rotor, was featured in the Collegian. Many years have gone into the development of this new harvester, and we are very excited about the possibilities of turning this dream into a marketplace reality.

"These people should be an example to students on campus."

RALPH LAGERGREN
vice president
Agri-Technology,L.P.

We greatly appreciated the coverage highlighting the progress we have made, but I felt it would be remiss not to add some vital data to this story. It is true that this actual concept all started as a dream for my cousin, Mark Underwood, and myself, but the actual work started on this project at the K-State ag-engineering department with Stanley Clark and Mark Shrock consulting on design and administering the project, Darrell Oard overseeing the fabrication and construction of the lab module, and Sushil Dwyer, a graduate student from Allahbad, India, consulting on design and directing the lab testing.

Without a grant from Kansas Technology Enterprise Corporation (KTEC) and investors, and without the help of these people at K-State, this project would not have become reality. Again, we have come a long way, and this is going to be an American dream come true, but I want to be sure the people who deserve the recognition are not forgotten. K-State can be proud to have the quality of personnel who joined in the dream with us. I think these people should be an example to students on campus that following a dream is omnipotent.

Reunion for World War II soldiers

Dear editor,

Veterans who served in China, Burma and India in World War II are invited to a reunion Aug. 16-19 in Salt Lake City. This 48th annual national reunion is being organized by the China-Burma-India Veterans Association, which has more than 7,000 members.

If you are a CBI veteran, please send your name, address and phone number to Homer C. Cooper, 145 Pendleton Drive, Athens, Ga. 30606, so we can send information about the reunion. Please also tell us the name of your CBI unit and locations where you served overseas.

If you cannot attend the Salt Lake City reunion, we would still like to hear from you so we can notify you of future CBIVA programs, including those of local CBIVA units in your area.

Campus privilege fee a waste

"I had no problem with this until I went to pay my fees."

TED W. POPE
K-State graduate
KU Medical School

Dear editor,

I am a recent graduate of K-State now living in Kansas City and attending KU Medical School. Last semester, it was necessary for me to enroll at K-State in order to meet the graduate school's requirement that master's students be enrolled during the semester in which they take their final examination.

I had no problem with this until I went to pay my fees. They were $83 for tuition, $35 late fee, $50 engineering fee and $98.65 campus privilege fee, giving a grand total of $266.65 — all for a single credit hour that I didn't need to graduate! I could really feel those "campus privilege fee" dollars at work when my only visit to the campus was to take my exam.

GREEK LIFE

This semester, the Collegian will offer a page every Wednesday focusing on fraternities and sororities on campus. As the Greek Life page takes form, we would like to hear from you — whether you're in a fraternity or sorority or are an independent. What would you like to see covered that you have never seen before? Is there some aspect of greek life at K-State that you think nobody knows about? If you're a non-greek, is there anything you've been curious about but never read about in the paper?

If so, Greek Life is here to spotlight these issues. Call us at 532-6556 and let us know.

LIVING IN vs. LIVING OUT

For greeks, making the decision of whether to live in the house boils down to one factor — money.

The economic difference between living in or out of a greek house can be a simple matter of money management.

"If you can't manage your money, it's cheaper to live in-house. If you can, it's cheaper to live out of house," said Jerin Wurtz, Alpha Gamma Rho member and junior in agricultural economics.

Wurtz said he thought it was cheaper for him to live out of the house than in the house.

Wurtz said his house payments got more expensive both years that he lived in the house. When he left, his payments were around $400 a month. Wurtz said his rent and utilities are around $180 a month.

Alex Dean, Delta Sigma Phi member, said he thought it was cheaper for him to live in the house after living in the residence halls.

"Basically, I found it's a little cheaper to live in the fraternity than in the dorm," he said.

This is Dean's first year in the house. He lived in a residence hall last year. Although the first year in the house may be more expensive than the residence halls because of activation and pledge fees, they are one-time-only payments.

Dean, sophomore in biology and pre-medicine, said the house was more flexible on payments than Housing and Dining Services.

Meri Sias, Gamma Phi Beta member, said she also found living in the house to be less expensive than living in the residence halls. This is her first year in the house.

"We have a live-out fee," Sias, sophomore in park resource management, said.

"This year, we just pay one fee that covers our room and board," she said.

Susan Haeker and her roommate Christina Deines are Sigma Kappas who live out of the house.

"For me, I think it would be cheaper to live in the house," Haeker, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, said.

Haeker said she had to pay her apartment and food bills as well as bills she had to pay at the house.

Because this is Haeker's first year in the sorority, she couldn't live in the house.

"I'd already decided to live here when I pledged," Haeker said.

Deines said she thought it was cheaper in the long run for her to live out of house.

"There's a fee just to live out, plus a damage deposit," she said.

Deines said even though she had to pay more than $500 to live out of house, plus the $50 damage deposit, she thought it was cheaper than the $415 to live in-house and eat there.

Deines pledged informally in March. Because she had already signed the lease for her apartment, she elected to live out of house. She plans to study in France next year.

"If I stayed at K-State, I would have to live in-house next year," she said.

Haeker and Deines said not knowing what's going on is the biggest disadvantage to living out of the house.

"If I go to the house, I feel like I don't know what's going on like everyone living in does," Deines said.

Although Deines and Haeker don't live in the house, they are still required to attend all of the house functions.

Wurtz said he wasn't required to attend all the meetings and functions at the house. He said he remains active by attending chapter meetings and participating in intramurals.

"They encourage you to stay involved so you can help the younger members out," Wurtz said. "I try to do that."

Another thing Wurtz said he really likes about living out of the house is his freedom to plan his schedule. Wurtz grew up on a farm and often went home to help out on the weekends, which was at odds with his responsibilities at the house, he said.

"I'm glad I lived there for the first two years," Wurtz said.

Dean said although you might eat with the same people all of the time in the residence halls, meals in the house are more personal. Meals are served home-style, and everyone eats at the same time, Dean said.

Another reason Dean likes living in-house is the variety of people and interests in the house, he said.

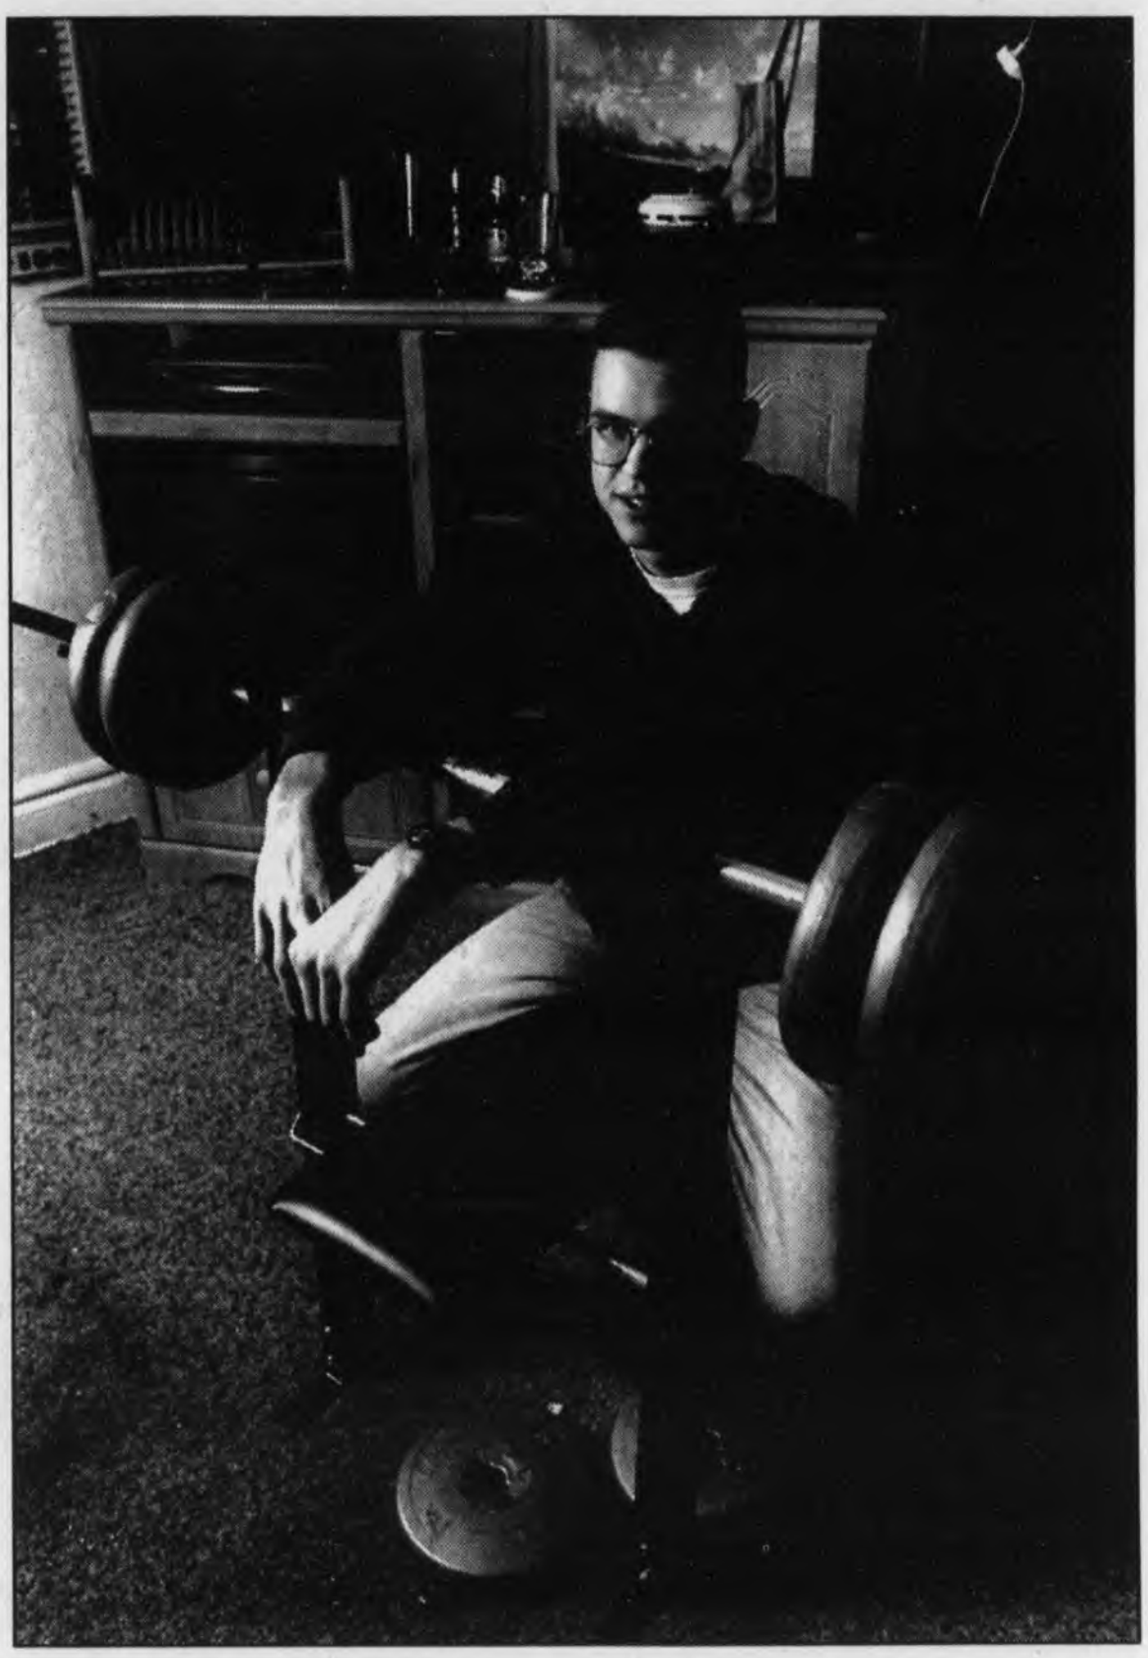
"I would rather stay in the house because of the people you get to know," Dean said.

Living in the house, members learn more about their fraternity brothers and get to know them better, he said. Members also get to meet more people in other houses through house functions, he said.

Sias said, "You get to know the girls a lot better."

She said living in-house has made her more comfortable with her sorority sisters. Being in-house also makes it easier for her to become involved in functions and activities sponsored by Gamma Phi Beta, Sias said.

"It's a little easier because you're not cut off from the house," she said.



Sias said she would consider moving out her senior year.

"I think everyone thinks about moving out," Sias said.

She said she loved living in the house, but she would like to have more privacy.

Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said every chapter makes its own policy on who can and cannot live out of the house.

"The only universal rule is that sororities don't house freshmen," Robel said.

Alex Dean, Delta Sigma Phi sophomore in biology and pre-medicine, says living in the fraternity house is cheaper than living in the dorms. Dean shares a sleeping room plus a living room, which has a television and a weight bench, with two other fraternity members.

Cassandra needs your letters

Dear readers,

Welcome back!

I hope you had a great break and paying fees wasn't too stressful.

Now it's time to get back to the grind.

In case you're new to K-State, I'll explain what my column is about.

Dear Cassie is an advice column. Students send me letters, ranging from the serious to the strange, and I try to reply to them.

I achieved somewhat of a tabloid reputation last semester, and I promise my faithful readers that I will be conscientious about which letters I print.

Most letters are confidential. Because of space constraints and the sheer volume of letters I receive, I can't publish every letter. But for those with serious problems, I will make every effort to see that you get a reply. In case you are wondering about my qualifications for advice, I do occasionally consult professionals for advice.

So bring it on. Roommate, pet and hygiene problems, sexualty and relationship queries — I tackle everything.

Diversions will be a page of diversity

Last fall, students moshed at the Live/Weezer concert, experienced the grace of New York City ballet at McCain Auditorium and witnessed the energy of K-State Theatre's production of "Chicago."

AMY ZIEGLER

The spring will also offer the K-State community a calendar packed tight with art shows, live music and theater.

If anything is going on in the world of arts and entertainment, we'll try to make sure that you will be the first to know about it.

As the arts and entertainment editor, I would like to create more diversity in our coverage and print what you, as college students, live for and care about.

If you know of anything that needs some attention and publicity, let us know.

So far, the spring lineup includes country star Sawyer Brown, alternative band the Urge, and the McCain musical "Guys and Dolls."

We will also have new additions to the arts and entertainment section along with the usual compact disc, movie, live music and theater reviews.

A new, ongoing series titled "A&E Spotlight" will feature performers, artists, bands, directors and others on stage or behind the scenes who are vital parts of the arts and entertainment community.

Each week, we will offer you personality profiles of local and national entertainers to give you an inside look at music, art and theater.

We will also showcase the creations of literary lovers by accepting poetry and writing more book reviews.

If you are a poet and would like to see your work in print, drop it by the newsroom or send it by e-mail. We would love to hear from you.

Another change in the A&E section is that we will have more recent CD reviews, explore options on the Internet, and have humorous sections such as "Movies We'd Like to See" on the Weekend page.

We will also have an A&E calendar on Thursdays that will list all the events going on during the weekend.

One change that is not welcome is the absence of the "Far Side" cartoon this semester due to Gary Larson's retirement.

Although we will be creating new features, certain sections from the past will still be a part of the A&E page.

The crossword puzzle is in the same place as always, and the A&E columns will again give our reviewers the opportunity to voice their opinions about everything from the local music scene to national issues.

Cassandra is also back, but letters like the one about the socks should not find their way back onto the page.

As you can see, we will have a variety of features, reviews, columns and news stories this semester. We hope you will enjoy the new A&E sections and will continue to support the entertainment events in Manhattan in the spring.

Investigation could be difficult homicide investigation.

"We are being extremely thorough in our investigation. Complete forensic analysis will take about four to six weeks. Suicide has not been ruled out," Mellgren said.

While investigating Taton's room Monday morning, University Detective Richard Herrman said he agreed with Mellgren on the inconclusive evidence.

"We can't rule out the possibility of murder or suicide at this point," said Herrman.

Mellgren said although there have not been many occurrences like this on campus, he expects a lot of time will be needed to examine evidence.

"It is typical, whenever you go into something in depth, you go slow and not rush things — so that you don't miss a thing," Mellgren said.

A stumbling block for the investigators is the lack of people near the scene of the crime at the time of the event.

"It is difficult to determine exactly what happened because there are no eyewitnesses," Mellgren said.

Mellgren said there were no suspects in the case.

"We are still trying to piece everything together and make sure we know everything that happened," Mellgren said. "We are trying to put together a reconstruction of the event."

Taton was from Argonia and was the only child of Ralph and Teresa Taton.

Goodnow Hall neighbors said Taton was known as the guy who always locked his door.

Richard Allen, freshman in theater, lives on first-floor Goodnow Hall and said he remembers Taton.

"We lost someone on our wing," Allen said. "We are all down about it."

Allen said he thought the investigation would be difficult because Taton kept to himself.

"If it is a murder, they are never going to find out who did it, because Ross never shared anything with anybody," Allen said.

Taton's roommate arrived at the scene late Monday morning and is staying with friends during the investigation.

Goodnow Hall, usually housing 500 students, was 25-30 percent occupied early Monday morning. Residents were informed of Taton's death as they checked in.

Security arrangements at Goodnow Hall were in place at the time Taton was found stabbed, said Shah Hasan, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services.

However, police security will increase on campus.

"The police have increased their presence on campus, and we have asked staff to spend more time with the students," Hasan said.

He also said information meetings were conducted for students in all residence halls Monday and Tuesday. Additional meetings are being conducted tonight for students returning late to the residence halls.

Counseling is available to students under emotional stress, Mary O'Donnell, University therapist, said.

"It is typical for students to feel irritated or have nightmares after an incident like this," O'Donnell said.

Goodnow Hall resident Page Getz, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications, said the incident has made her and everyone she knows nervous.

"I used to leave my door open every night and day, but not now," she said.

Miscellaneous items stolen; houses take steps to deter future break-ins

Collins, is missing $10 in pennies and a backpack," Guth said.

Guth said the burglars also broke a big-screen television and a VCR but did not steal them.

In addition, he said, the burglars ransacked the housemother's room and terrorized her cat.

Similarly, Stonestreet said at the Pike fraternity burglars opened every backpack in the rooms and stole small items such as mechanical pencils, drafting materials and calculators.

In his own room, Stonestreet said the burglars stole a Flippo lighter but left a camera sitting next to it.

At each of the three fraternities, the pop machines were damaged, and the change was stolen.

Jeff Wilcox, president of Phi Kappa Theta, said fraternity members found CDs in bags ready to be taken out.

"No one really had anything missing, but we haven't done a complete assessment yet," Wilcox said.

"In the future, we'll try to keep more people around," he said. "With the lights on, hopefully, this will deter burglars from thinking about coming in."

Guth said there is little the Acacia fraternity can do to prevent things like this from happening in the future.

"There's not to much more we can do than put bars on the windows," Guth said.

"We had people staying at the house over break. The break-in just happened to occur on the day they were all gone," he said.

Raynor said there is little more the police can do to prevent burglaries like this from happening.

"It's not unusual when students leave for summer or school breaks," Raynor said. "It's a common occurrence for places to be broken into."

Each of the fraternities' insurance companies will pay for damages to the house, but individuals will not receive money for personal property that was stolen unless students or their parents have insurance to cover the stolen property.

Because all of the doors were kicked in and damaged, the Acacia and Pike fraternities will receive new doors on each of the individual rooms.

"I guess the greeks are just as vulnerable as anyone else," Stonestreet said.

Course might still be needed

Rottinghaus said. "We just want to take it out as a general requirement."

Ginn said the class might still be required for some majors.

"If they do drop it as a general requirement, there's no telling how many majors will require it," he said.

Rottinghaus said the committee felt P.E. uses resources that could be used in other departments or to fund other classes in kinesiology.

The Academic Affairs Committee is working on its presentation for Faculty Senate.

Rottinghaus said he will be presenting Student Senate's resolution to Dennis Law, chairman of the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee. Rottinghaus said he hoped Faculty Senate has the opportunity to look at the resolution sometime this month.

"I think they will be interested in looking at this," he said.

Ginn said time is an important consideration.

"We're going to try to get it pushed through as soon as possible," Ginn said.

▶ARRESTS MADE IN SHOP QUIK ROBBERIES

The Riley County Police Department arrested two men and one youth Dec. 29 in connection with the robberies of two Manhattan convenience stores.

Shane M. Lingenfelter, 18, Brian E. Young, 19, and Jason R. Manis, 16, were arrested and charged with two counts of aggravated robbery.

The two convenience stores were the Shop Quiks at 2028 Tuttle Creek Blvd. and 3108 Anderson Ave. Police said both stores were robbed by a white, male subject with a long-barreled revolver.

"About $500 total was stolen from the two stores," Capt. Allen Raynor of the RCPD said.

Raynor said the three Manhattan teen-agers knowingly conspired and actively participated.

He said the three had plans to further their crimes to other stores and towns.

No tips from Crime Stoppers were used in this case. Raynor said it was just good police work.

▶POLICE HAVE SUSPECT IN BANK ROBBERIES

The Riley County Police Department has behind bars the man they believe is responsible for two Manhattan bank robberies.

Donnel Tracy White was arrested Dec. 29 by the Junction City Police Department. His arrest was the result of a tip from a Crime Stoppers call to the RCPD.

The First Savings Bank at the corner of Claflin Road and Denison Avenue was robbed Oct. 24, and the Aggieville K-State Bank at the corner of 11th Street and Bluemont Avenue was robbed Dec. 1.

Both banks were robbed in the same fashion. A plastic bag was presented to tellers, and they were told to fill it with money.

Police said that a gun was used in the First Savings Bank robbery, but no gun has been recovered.

Capt. Allen Raynor of the RCPD said the banks are reticent about releasing the dollar amounts stolen.

"He (White) is not cooperating, and the investigation is still going on," he said.

White, if convicted, could serve a maximum of 28 years in prison.

▶COST OF SUNSET ZOO ADMISSION INCREASES

It costs a bit more to go to the Sunset Zoological Park in 1995.

Effective Jan. 1, admissions have increased from $2 to $3 for adults and from $1 to $1.50 for children ages 5 to 12. Children younger than 4 years old are still admitted free.

"We're still one of the cheapest zoos in Kansas, which is good for Manhattan," said Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director for the zoo.

Don Wixom, zoo director, said the increase was to cover the costs of new facilities.

"In the last five years, we have added, along with private money, 33 facilities to the zoo, like concessions. That also includes our cheetahs and snow leopards," Wixom said.

The Sunset Zoo plans to add more facilities in the next few years, including a primate conservation center, which will be a 5-acre habitat for primates.

"We are adding habitats for birds, pythons and monitor lizards. People want to do things as well as see things when they come to the zoo," he said.

Cats wipe out in Hawaii

HONOLULU — K-State fans who made the journey to Hawaii had their hearts broken on Christmas Day.

The Wildcats' offense was shut out for the first time since Kansas allowed the Wildcats only an interception for a touchdown in 1992.

Joe Gordon created K-State's only score with a blocked punt recovered by Chris Sublette in the end zone.

"Chad (May) didn't throw the ball well," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I knew that; he knew that; and the fans knew that.

"We certainly didn't have them well-enough prepared. That's a coaching thing, not a player thing."

Snyder said the defeat will set the program back for a few days, but he is counting on his players returning next season to have the courage to come back and try harder.

"They had the chance to finish in the top five or 10, and we wanted to win. It just wasn't our day," Snyder said. "Our younger players are going to have to live with this for a year, and that's going to be tough. I believe that it will make them work even harder."

"The seniors knew they had a chance to do something that has never been done at Kansas State University. I told the seniors I felt sorry for them."

BILL SNYDER
K-State football coach

However, Snyder said the defeat might have been most disappointing to the seniors on the squad.

"The seniors knew they had a chance to do something that has never been done at Kansas State University," Snyder said. "I told the seniors I felt sorry for them.

"I remember six years ago when this program wasn't together. The seniors have brought this program together, and it's going to stay that way for a long time to come because of some of the things they did."

Senior linebacker Laird Veatch said the team expected to win after the week's preparation, and the loss was disappointing.

"We expect to win every game," Veatch said. "I was proud of the way our defense played today. We kept hanging in there and fighting."

The Wildcats defense limited the Boston College offense to a touchdown and a field goal, but the offense slowed by eight sacks and couldn't muster a single point.

Four of the sacks belonged to defensive end Mike Mamula.

The Boston College defense also rushed Chad May's throws on a number of occasions.

"We basically did everything we've been doing all season," Mamula said.

"We came out fired up today. I thought our defense played real tough today."

Boston College coach Dan Henning said the game was a nice thing for his seniors, who have endured three coaching changes in the last three years.

"What a wonderful way to end a season," Henning said.

"This trip was successful historically, culturally, and the win made it a successful business trip."

The game was the Eagles' second-straight appearance in a bowl game.

Last season, Boston College beat Virginia 13-3 in the Carquest Bowl in Miami.

Even with the offense's poor showing, the defense doesn't point any fingers.

"I don't look at it as the defense won the game, or the offense won the game," cornerback Joe Gordon said.

"We win as K-State, or we lose as K-State. That's it."

With the loss the Cats finished with a 9-3 record. K-State also finished ranked No. 17 in the CNN/USA Today Coaches Poll.

Boston College claims Cats talk trash

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

HONOLULU — The Wildcats might have been a little too confident about their abilities.

Eagle strong safety Eric Shorter claimed he was approached before the game by two K-State players who were "talking trash."

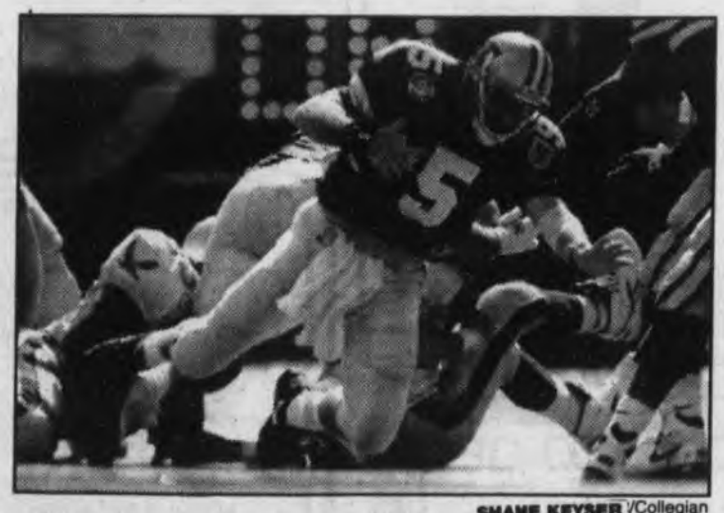
Shorter couldn't remember the names of the players, but he said they showed little respect for the Boston College squad.

"This is a time for giving, and we gave them a butt-kickin' out there today," Shorter said during a postgame press conference. "They talked so much trash before the game, and we showed today where we belong and that the Big East is by far the best conference in the nation."

Linebacker Steven Boyd said he was annoyed with the rankings coming into the game rather than the alleged trash talking.

"The atmosphere here was we weren't good enough to be here, and they were too good," Boyd said. "I think we proved something today."

K-State offensive tackle Jim Hmielewski said at a press conference Dec. 21 that it was Boston College players who were talking trash.



Hmielewski said Boston College players were showing little respect for the Wildcat football team.

"There were some things said that added some fuel to the fire," Hmielewski said during the conference.

Again, Shorter claimed the opposite was true.

"They should have known that this is a class program we have," Shorter said. "When someone disrespects our program, we're going to come after them."

The Eagles were cited for three unsportsmanlike conduct penalties during the contest. The last came on the heels of a 46-yard pass completion from Mark Hartsell to Kenyatta Watson.

SHANE KEYSER /Collegian

Chad May is dragged down to the ground by the Boston College defense. May was sacked eight times in the loss.

"You can celebrate after a play if it is spontaneous," Coach Dan Henning said. "The guy made a long catch and stood up and cheered to the crowd. If that's not spontaneous, I don't know what is.

"Maybe they're closer to the WAC (Western Athletic Conference) than we are, and that's the way they call it out there," Henning said, referring to the WAC referees officiating the game.

The contest resembled a K-State-Kansas game throughout, with both teams making comments to one another after nearly every positive play.

However, Wildcat cornerback Joe Gordon dismissed the confrontations as merely two teams wanting badly to win.

"You get a lot of competitive guys out there together, and both want to win. Bad tempers flare. Things get said back and forth," Gordon said.

Coach Bill Snyder said Boston College just did things better than K-State.

"Quite obviously we got beat by a very fine football team that on this given day was better certainly than we were." Snyder said.

Shorter said the schedule the Eagles played during the season might have had something to do with the win.

"If they're the eighth-best team in the nation, then we're the seventh-best."

The hospital serves children from Korea, Guam, the Phillipines and other islands.

Players bring Yule-time cheer to Shriners kids

HONOLULU — Strong, healthy arms reached out to help smaller, weaker ones.

The K-State football team paid a visit to the Honolulu Shriner's Children's Hospital on Dec. 23.

"It's pretty amazing to see Nyle Wiren's eyes get a little glassy as he reaches out to shake the hand of a little kid," offensive line coach Rod Humenuik said.

Shriner's Hospitals across the United States offer free corrective surgery and aftercare to children who otherwise could not afford it. None of the children at the hospital had life-threatening ailments.

The Shriner's Hospital in Honolulu took in patients from Korea, the Philippines, Guam and several other islands in the Pacific.

"The visitors here really cheer my son up, and it keeps him occupied," Sally Dominquez said.

Dominquez is the mother of Sammy Dominquez, who was scooting around on a toy truck despite casts on both legs from ankle surgery. Sammy was giving several of the football players all they could handle.

Sammy's father is stationed at the naval base on Guam. Sally said she had stayed in the hospital with Sammy the entire time, and he would be released within a few weeks.

"It just makes you thank God that you are so healthy when you look at some of these kids," wide receiver Kevin Lockett said.

"I'm glad I got the chance to make them feel better, because they didn't do anything wrong."

Another mother at the hospital who once faced a similar dilemma was Mrs. Hawaii, Bella Ortega-Tomas. She is a mother of three.

Her daughter Melilani, who is now 10, broke her leg in the middle of her thigh and had to be moved around in a wheelchair when she was only 6 years old.

"I was lucky that I had the resources to take care of my daughter when she was injured," Ortega-Tomas said. "I can't imagine how appreciative some of these mothers must feel. This place gives these children a chance to live normal, healthy lives."

All of the players had K-State T-shirts and stickers to give away to the children in the hospital. Several of the patients at the hospital couldn't speak English, but it didn't stop them from getting into a game of horse around the basketball goal with some of the players.

"How nice is that to see big Jimmy Hmielewski pick a youngster and help him slam dunk," Humenuik said. "That's a side of Jim that most of the fans don't get a chance to see of him very often."

The Boston College players visited patients at Tripler's Hospital in Honolulu the same day.

"I love football," 8-year-old Neal Byrne said.

"I hope I can get as big as them, 'cause I want to be a football player too."

Cats capture 1st Big 8 victory against Cowboys

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

Things can change quickly in four days.

Four days before K-State's Big Eight Conference opener against Oklahoma State, the Wildcats were whipped by Wichita State by a margin of 24 points.

Coming into Saturday's game in Bramlage Coliseum, some fans might have thought that K-State would have the same problems with Oklahoma State.

"We came back to play after Tuesday's game," K-State coach Tom Asbury said.

The Cats' defense came out to play Saturday night.

K-State forced Oklahoma State into 20 turnovers and 44-percent shooting and held Bryant Reeves to just two second-half field goals in a 74-66 victory.

K-State defended Reeves with a center-by-committee trio of Tyrone Davis, George Hill and Hamilton Strickland.

Asbury, whose team improved to 10-3 and 1-0 in the Big Eight, said he knew that Reeves would be hard to defend.

"That's a tough road to hoe when you're trying to defend that guy," Asbury said.

"He's an all-American, and he's a great player."

Reeves finished the game with 23 points, 16 rebounds and 3 blocks on 9-15 shooting during 40 minutes of action.

Strickland, a 6-foot-10-inch center, scored his first four career points in the Big Eight.

Strickland played 17 minutes and grabbed three rebounds. He made two steals and played an important role in defending Bryant Reeves.

"I knew to win the game we were going to have to try our best to keep him from doing what he wanted to do down in the paint," Strickland said.

Asbury said he was proud of the effort that Strickland displayed during the game.

"He really rose up to the challenge," Asbury said. "I am really proud of him."

K-State's defense also shut down Oklahoma State's shooting guard, Randy Rutherford.

Rutherford, who averages 21.5 points per game, finished with eight points on 3-15 shooting from the field and failed to score in double figures for the first time this season.

K-State used four different players to cover Rutherford during the game.

Hatcher started against Rutherford, but K-State also used Brian Gavin, Mark Young and Belvis Noland.

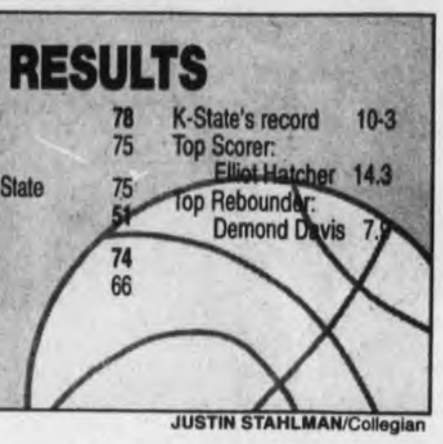
Rutherford ended up shooting 1-10 from behind the three-point arc, which is the most he has missed in a game in his career.

Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton, whose team fell to 9-5 and 0-1 in the Big Eight, said K-State did a nice job of defending against Rutherford.

"Randy had some good looks, but that was the worst I've ever seen him shoot while he has been at Oklahoma State," Sutton said.

After a driving dunk by Oklahoma State's Chianti Roberts to tie the score at 51 with 10:56 in the second half, K-State held Oklahoma State scoreless until Reeves hit a free throw at the 8:26 mark to make the score 58-52.

"We just turned it up a notch defensively," Asbury said. "That was obviously the key to the game."



Noland, a 6'4" senior forward, came off the bench to score a career high of 21 points, including four of 10 behind the three-point arc.

He hit a critical three-pointer

▶CATS GAIN NATIONAL EXPOSURE

With Thursday's game against Nebraska in Lincoln being televised on ESPN, K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury said the experience will be good for the program.

"I think that it will be great exposure," Asbury said. "Any time that you can play on national television, its a plus.

"It can help in so many different ways."

Coverage of Thursday's game will begin at 6:30 p.m.

The Cats will then return to the television on Jan. 21. That's when K-State will host Iowa State in Bramlage Colisuem.

K-State's Missy Decker wrestles with a Missouri-Rolla opponent in the Cats' victory in Bramlage Coliseum. The Cats have opened up Big Eight play with two victories.

Women's team captures road wins

Undefeated — in the Big Eight Conference, anyway.

That is how the K-State women's basketball team stands after road victories in its first two conference games of the season.

The latest victim, Iowa State, was defeated 63-51 Sunday by the resurgent Cats.

K-State post player Shanele Stires said that a 2-0 conference mark is a great confidence builder, but nothing to take for granted.

"We can't let down. We must keep the same type of mentality," Stires said.

With six games left in January, five of which are against Big Eight foes, playing well now is critical.

But despite its undefeated conference start, semester break did not begin so smoothly for the team.

Back-to-back road losses at Utah and at Michigan caused the coaching staff and players to take a long look at what the team was doing.

Stires said it was something Coach Brian Agler asked of the players that turned the tide.

"He asked the seniors to take on the roles of more vocal, off-court leaders and help the younger players," Stires said.

Since that time, the team has reeled off four straight victories.

Missouri-Rolla and Washington State were both defeated at Bramlage Coliseum by a combined total of 36 points.

Stires said those two victories gave the Wildcats momentum for the beginning of conference play, and now with four straight wins, the team's confidence is building.

"We can knock any team off," Stires said. "It's up to us to want it."

Stires also said the team is already thinking about postseason play.

"It's the first thing on everybody's mind. Each game is just a step toward it."

Stires also said that she believes the NCAA Tournament Committee really favors the road-competitive team. With back-to-back road wins in one of the nation's toughest conferences, Stires said the team seems to be in good shape.

With two Big Eight road victories, Stires thinks the Cats are starting to peak at the right time.

"I think everyone's starting to feel it," she said.

Cats get ready for 1st Big 8 road game after Stanley Hamilton rebounded a missed free throw from Davis with 5:11 left in the game, which helped extend the Cats' lead to 63-55.

"He's one of those guys who is really hard to guard," Asbury said. "Sometimes, I'm the only one who can guard him by taking him out of the game."

Elliot Hatcher also poured in 23 points on 9-16 shooting and added six assists.

Asbury said he realizes that this game is just one game in a long line of games to come.

"I can't sprain my wrist patting myself on the back tonight. We've got too much damn work to do," Asbury said.

"This is a confidence-builder for the guys. They know they can beat a good team, and hopefully they will continue that trend."

The Cats will return to action at 6:30 p.m. Thursday at the Bob Devaney Sports Center against the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

The Huskers, who have lost two in a row, will enter the game with a 12-3 record in a game that will be televised nationally on ESPN.

"I hope that we are ready to go on the road and win in the Big Eight," Asbury said.

"I think that we will be able to carry with us some momentum from Saturday's win.

"We will need to play at a quick pace, but still under control."

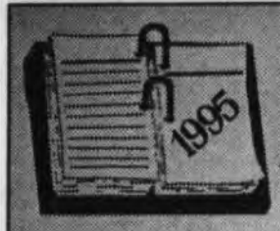
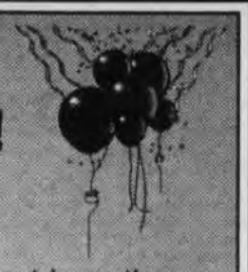
Who's Who at Rec Services





JASON GUGELMAN, senior in management information systems, has worked as a computer programmer at Recreational Services for three years. Gugelman attended Seaman High School in Topeka, KS before coming to K-State in the Fall of 1991. Upon graduation, Gugelman said he would like to find a job that will allow him to travel while using his computer experience. He enjoys sports, reading, and playing the guitar. Gugelman said he has enjoyed his time at Recreational Services. "I have the opportunity to meet a lot of people while gaining valuable on-the-job experience," he said.

CHRISTY HAYES, senior in accounting, has been a building manager at the Rec Complex for three years. Hayes, also a native of Topeka, Kansas, attended Shawnee Heights High School before coming to K-State. Upon her graduation this May, she plans to move to Dallas and begin her career in accounting. Hayes enjoys watching sporting events and working out, and said the Rec Complex is a great place to meet people. "As a building manager, you learn to deal with people in many different situations," she said.

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION: GET FIT!!

The Benefits of Exercise--When you get yourself moving, you set in motion a process of change that affects virtually every part of your body and almost every aspect of your life. The benefits of fitness start to come in on the very first day of activity. Over a relatively short time, you start to show signs of improving fitness.

Fitness benefits are not exclusively physical. How you perceive yourself, how much more personal time you have for family and friends, are as much the benefits as the physical improvements.

Fitness is change--change for the better. This change involves a process that produces fundamental improvements in your physical condition and expands your potential for life itself.

Physical activity is the greatest "anti-aging pill" available to us. In short, energetic activity will keep you fit for life-your whole life.

-Adopted from the Institute for Aerobics Research

Many questions

"This incident could cause a lot of people to be incredibly paranoid."

Evidence leaves no answers for police

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

The collage of evidence found in the Ross Taton homicide investigation has given investigators no clues to the reason of death or to possible suspects.

"Right now, basically, the investigation is like a big jigsaw puzzle," Ronnie Grice, director of K-State Police, said.

A single stab wound to the upper center-left of Taton's chest took the Goodnow Hall resident's life early Monday morning and sent the campus speculating as to the cause of infliction.

"Fear spreads across campus like a prairie fire," Grice said.

Fear for Taton's life flooded Nizar Kafity's limbs as he ran to call 911 on Monday morning.

Kafity, a sophomore in microbiology, is generally known by everyone as Guz. And although Taton was not a close part of his family on the first floor of Goodnow, Kafity will never forget Taton's reaction to a glass of water that Monday.

"This really sticks in my mind," Kafity said. "He asked me for a glass of water, and I went to my room and got a glass."

"We were trying to lift his head up to give it to him, and he just turned around and said, 'Thanks, Guz.'"

At that moment, Kafity realized Taton still remembered his name. In fact, Kafity said, Taton was talking well throughout the morning and not at all like a person who was dying.

The strangeness of Taton's calm, his untampered locked doors and the location of the knife causes Kafity to think of the event as a possible suicide.

"With all due respect to the family and everyone involved, I think it was suicide," Kafity said.

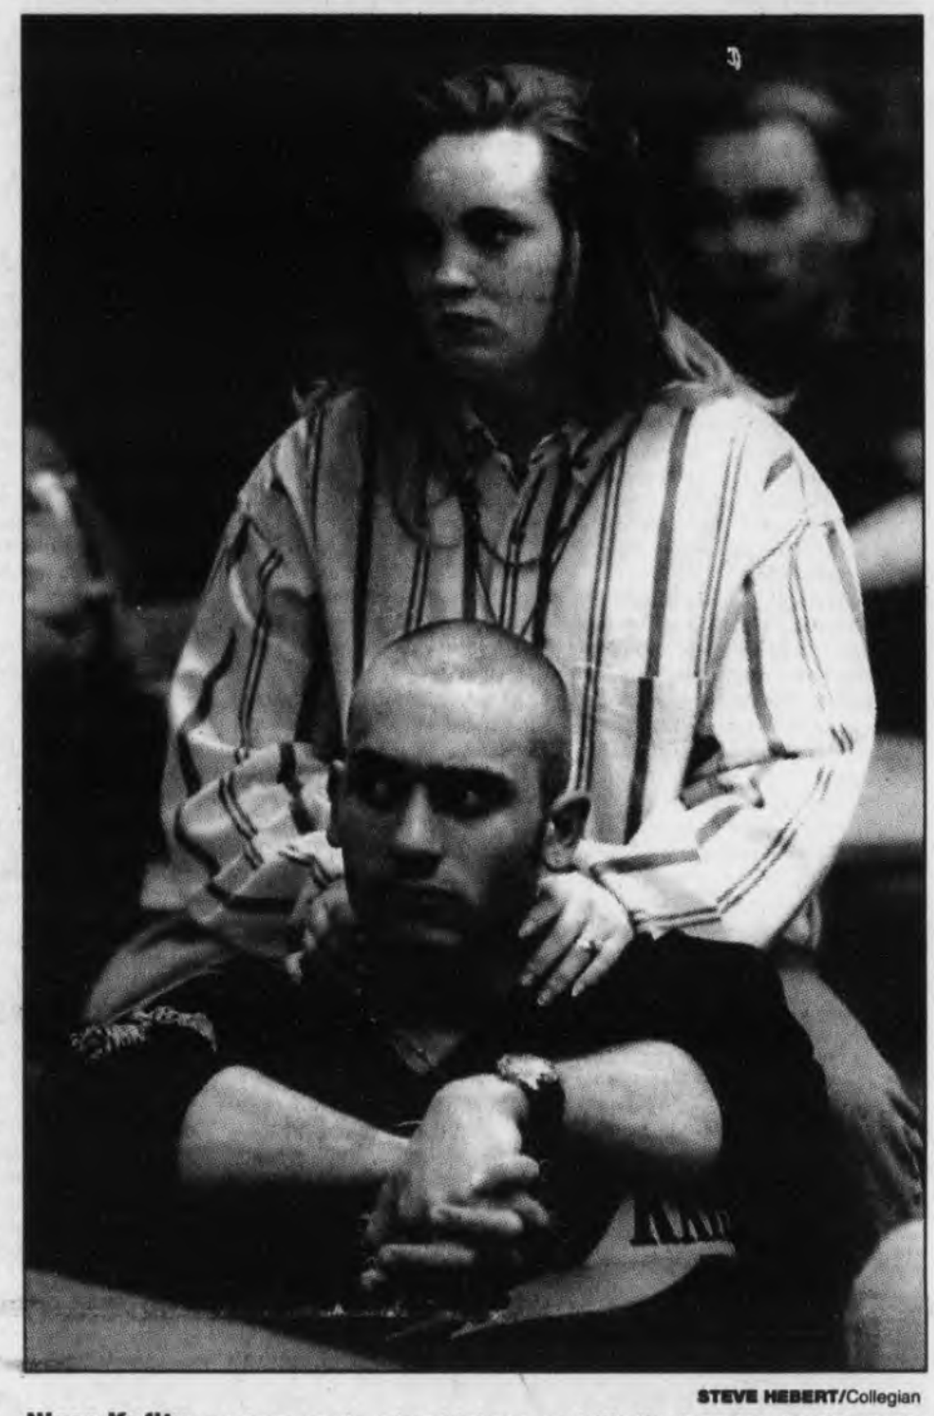
KSU police chief Ronnie Grice speaks to a group of Goodnow Hall residents about safety in the residence halls Wednesday night on the second floor of Goodnow.

But the conglomerated investigation of campus police, Riley County Police and Kansas Bureau of Investigation is not leaving any stone unturned.

"We are still digging through what evidence we have," Capt. Robert Mellgren of campus police said.

Forensic analysis of items and evidence from Taton's room are expected to provide some clues by late this week.

Waiting for information has sparked numerous discussions of safety among Goodnow residents.



"Personally, I've been in several discussions about safety, and I hear of parents calling and people buying extra locks for their doors," John Henderson, Goodnow resident and freshman undecided, said.

"This incident could cause a lot of people to be incredibly paranoid," he said.

Grice said he would love to be able to station an officer in every residence hall on campus to relieve anxieties.

However, he said this is the first possible homicide in the 130-year history of K-State and that the University's safety is excellent.

"When something like this happens, everyone's going to have a period of paranoia, and the best thing students can do is lock their doors," Grice said.

Ross Taton's funeral will be at 2 p.m. Friday at the Argonia Friends Church. Memorials will be given to the Argonia High School Library and can be given in care of the Argonia Mortuary.

▶ CAMPUS ESCORTS

Residence hall escort services consolidated

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

Students wanting an escort will soon be able to call one phone number from anywhere on campus.

When students call 395-SAFE, the line will ring directly to the K-State Police. The police will then contact the escorts who are on call.

The line will be in effect on Feb. 1. Until that time, people who need an escort can call the individual residence halls' front desks.

These individual escort services have been consolidated into one escort service to better serve students, Mateo Remsburg, assistant director of Haymaker Hall, said.

"We hope to cut down on response time and to become more accessible," he said.

All students can call 395-SAFE from dusk to dawn to receive an escort for no fee. Escort services include all University facilities and residences up to one block off campus, said Eric Keen, treasure of Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls.

"We don't mind escorting nonresidents, faculty, staff or anyone," Keen said.

The escorts are in pairs with one man and one woman. One will have a pager, and one will have a cellular phone.

Keen said KSUARH is working with Kansas Cellular to get the phones donated or at reduced rates. Telecommunications gave the residence halls direct numbers.

Lin Bliss, president of KSUARH, said the changes in the escort system are to serve as many residents and students of K-State as possible.

"Now it's easier to remember one phone number that's simple. The escorts are more accessible to students on campus who don't feel comfortable calling the front desk of a residence hall," Bliss said.

Keen said stickers are being printed to go on all the campus phones, and a card was given out during enrollment with emergency phone numbers, including the escort number.

Bliss said some common places escorts are asked to meet or take people are Seaton Hall, parking lots and the K-State Union.

"We've even escorted people to tests," Bliss said.

▶ MLK WEEK

K-State to observe King week

KIMBERLY WISHART

Lunches, lectures and a candlelight vigil have been planned for Martin Luther King Observance Week from Sunday to Jan. 22.

The theme, "Where Do We Go From Here? Non-Violence: Learning It, Living It, Teaching It," is the same as the national theme of the Martin Luther King Jr. center in Atlanta, said Labarbara Wigfall, co-chair of the Martin Luther King Jr. recognition week publicity committee.

"We thought it was a good theme because it makes people aware just with the title," Wigfall said. "It's an educational and interactive process. The theme speaks what we intend to happen: learn it, teach it."

Veryl Switzer, co-chair for the Martin Luther King Jr. recognition week, said the week will begin with a community service and hymn singing at 3:30 p.m. Sunday at the Fellowship Temple at 201 Noxberry Drive.

"We generally like to kick off the week by including the community and students," Switzer said.

There will also be community celebration services at 6 p.m. Sunday at Manhattan Middle School.

Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity coordinated local events for the nationally observed holiday that commemorates King on Monday, Switzer said

There will be the traditional memorial walk at 6 p.m. starting at Waters Hall and ending at All Faiths Chapel. It will be followed by a candlelight vigil and religious services, he said.

▶ WARM WEATHER KEEPS FARRELL LIBRARY EXPANSION ON SCHEDULE

Winter weather hasn't hindered the expansion of Farrell Library.

"The cold weather hasn't really held us up," Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said.

Carter said he had expected the weather to slow the construction down as soon as November, but the beginning of the winter was unseasonably warm.

"We had two months of unbelievably good weather. The longer we have good weather, the better it is," Carter said.

Carter said although the construction is progressing according to plan, K-State students might not be able to see any obvious results for a while.

"We're still several months away from anything sticking up above ground," he said.

There is still only one place to enter and leave the library, but that may be changing soon, Karen Cole, associate dean of the library, said.

"We're maintaining the same entrance and exit we had during the fall semester. Sometime this semester, that entrance and exit will be changed," Cole said.

Cole said the entrance will be moved from the southeast corner of the library near Denison Hall to the northeast corner of the library near Willard Hall.

Right now, workers are pouring concrete for the new foundations and basement, and basement walls are going up on the east side of the building.

"Most of the work going on now is below the ground," Carter said.

The renovation and expansion of the library is not expected to be completed for another two years.

Students can expect to see a fence around the construction site until then, not unlike the fence that remained around Throckmorton Hall, Carter said.

▶ 4 K-STATE STUDENTS NOMINATED FOR $14,000 GOLDWATER SCHOLARSHIP

K-State has nominated four students to compete nationally for the Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship, which is worth up to $14,000.

This year's nominees are Jennifer Brisson, sophomore in molecular biology; Antoine Perchellet, sophomore in microbiology and French; Joseph Schmidt, junior in chemistry and mathematics; and Jonathan Winkler, junior in physics and mathematics.

The scholarship was established by Congress in 1986 for eligible students studying in the fields of mathematics or the natural sciences, said Gerald Smith, executive director of the Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship and Excellence in Education Program.

"Goldwater was concerned about how other nations were overtaking the United States in technical fields," Smith said.

After completing the University application process and being selected in November, students had to edit and fine tune their applications, which included a 600- word essay concerning an issue of interest in their field of study — all by the end of finals week.

Schmidt estimated he spent 100 hours working on and proofing the project, and he said the hardest part of completing the whole process was finding the time.

If selected, the work will pay off. The student will have the rest of their expenses at K-State paid.

"Virtually all winners will be sought out by graduate schools," Smith said.

Schmidt said he believes the scholarship would help him in the future.

"It will be a stepping stone for other things," he said.

Smith said winners of the scholarship have gone on to other levels of academic success.

During the last two years, eight of the 64 students selected as Rhodes scholars had been Goldwater scholars the year before. The significance of this is that the Rhodes scholarship isn't for students in math and science fields.

"These are the best-rounded youngsters you've ever seen," Smith said. "These kids are so bright it just boggles my mind."

K-State nominees have met with success in the program since the first winners were selected in 1989.

Only Princeton and Harvard universities have had more students win the scholarship.

K-State is tied with Montana University for the public institution with the most winners.

Smith attributes K-State's success to the way the University promotes and attracts students to the program.

"K-State has been super," Smith said.

The winners of the scholarship will be announced in late April.

▶ FINNEY LEFT WITH $156,000 BILL FOR FAILED PUBLIC INITIATIVE CAMPAIGN

TOPEKA (AP) — Former Gov. Joan Finney spent more than $156,000 in campaign funds last year to wage a campaign for her public initiative proposal and to tout her accomplishments in office.

Finney, a Democrat, who decided against seeking re-election, listed the expenditures in a campaign finance report filed with the secretary of state's office on Tuesday.

She began the year with $234,780 in her campaign fund. She raised another $4,273 and spent a total of $202,697, leaving her with $36,356 at the end of the year.

Finney is an advocate of initiative, a change in the state constitution that would allow voters to put proposed laws and constitutional amendments on the ballot without going through the Legislature.

The House approved a watered-down version of her proposal last year, but a Senate committee rejected it.

COMING JANUARY 13TH TO A CRYPT-PLEX NEAR YOU

Jean Riffel stands outside the new Java Espresso and Bakery at 1219 Moro in Aggieville. The shop, which will serve bagels, sandwiches, salads and desserts in addition to coffees and teas, is set to open in late January or the first week of February.

The joy of JAVA

NIKOLA ZYTGOW

Coffee connoisseurs from all over Manhattan will soon have yet another place to gather.

The Java Espresso and Bakery, opening in late January or the first week of February, is the latest addition to the Aggieville community.

The coffee shop at 1219 Moro St. is still in its renovation phase, but Manager Jean Riffel said she knows exactly how she wants it to look.

"The display cases will be right here in the front," she said, pointing to the area that is now occupied by a few scattered boxes and a huge metal stove.

"We will bake all of our own breads right in this stove," she said.

"It can produce 90 loaves of bread an hour."

Riffel, who will manage the business that her husband, Gwyn Riffel, owns, said she is especially proud of the bagels they plan to serve.

"They will be the highest-quality bagel you can get — the real thing."

Besides bagels, the coffee shop will serve soups, sandwiches, salads, various desserts and of course, coffees and teas.

Round tables will soon fill the checkered red and white floor, the oven will start humming, the cappuccino machine will be set up, and Riffel said she hopes the place will be buzzing with a variety of customers.

"We want to attract students, of course, but we would also like to have the whole Manhattan community," Riffel said.

"We would really like to emphasize that this be a social place to gather, not just to grab a cup of coffee, but a place you want to come and socialize."

The nonsmoking Java Espresso and Bakery will have a conference room that can be used upon request by groups, Riffel said. It will also have five-minute parking spots so people in a rush can get their food and go.

The Java Espresso and Bakery is only around the corner from its competitor, Espresso Royale.

"We'll probably lose some business," Bonnie Zack, Espresso Royale manager, said about the opening of the coffee shop.

But Zack said she thinks the Java Espresso and Bakery will be a positive addition to Aggieville.

"Aggieville could use more pedestrian businesses," Zack said.

Patty Meier, a regular customer of the Espresso Royale, said that the clientele at the Espresso is very loyal.

"The only reason that I would not come here is if the lines were out the door," Meier said.

Along with bringing some competition to Aggieville's coffee shop scene, the Java Espresso and Bakery will also bring 24 new jobs and possibly some opportunities for local musical talent to perform.

"I was thinking it would be really nice occasionally to bring in live musicians. Maybe some jazz," Riffel said.

Coffee shops are becoming the "in" thing of the '90s, she said.

"The bars were a big thing of the '70s and '80s. But now coffee houses are becoming very popular. ... People are becoming more particular connoisseurs of coffee. They are more interested in the types of seeds and the kind: dark roast, light roast or flavored coffee," Riffel said.

▶ STUDENT SENATE

Election guidelines vetoed after spending limits eliminated

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Student Body President Jeff Peterson vetoed the revised election guidelines because the spending limits were eliminated.

The elections guidelines were passed by Student Senate on Dec. 8. Along with the guidelines proposed by the Elections Committee, an amendment from the floor eliminating all spending limits was passed.

"I didn't accept that," Peterson said. "I feel there needs to be some limit."

The Elections Committee began working this fall to combat some of the problems experienced during the past two campus elections.

"We've had a lot of complaints and problems with the elections in the past two years," he said.

David Norris, Elections Committee chairman, said he favors no spending limits for candidates.

"You cannot buy an election," Norris said.

Although it could happen, Norris said it wasn't very likely on a college campus. The reason candidates win is because they get out there, talk to people and get their names known, he said.

Another reason Norris said he favored no spending limits is that it makes the process easier. State and national elections have no spending limits.

Norris said he knew of a couple of senators who found loopholes and were able to spend more than the allowed 10 percent of tuition on their campaigns last year. He said if he can't close the loophole, then he would like to eliminate the need for it.

"If you don't have the resources, you can still win," Norris said.

One of the new changes is that the Elections Committee will not pull names from the ballot before the election, Norris said. Last year's problems stemmed from candidates failing to turn in expenditure reports. The reports will still be filed, but they will not be as important to the process without spending limits.

The Elections Committee will only gather information concerning violations. Candidates will be notified of any violations and will be given a certain amount of time to comply, Norris said. If the violations are excessive, a hearing will be conducted.

Once the election is over, the Elections Committee will present the violation information to Student Senate. Senate will then decide who will be disqualified as the evidence is presented. All elections results are approved in Senate.

"I think it will go pretty smoothly," Norris said.

Norris said it was important to remember that the spending limit issue, not the disqualification process, was the reason the guidelines were vetoed.

The election guidelines are reviewed annually, Peterson said. As a result of the problems in the past two elections, the committee was formed and began working during the fall semester.

The amendment was presented because there was little equity in the amount of money that could be spent on the campaigns.

Students running for Union Governing Board and the Board of Student Publications, two campus-wide offices, could spend the same amount as Senate candidates, who only need to campaign within their colleges.

Peterson said he felt it was important to maintain the spending limits so each student had the ability to run and win.

"Some senators have run and have won on zero dollars," he said.

Peterson said there needed to be some equity in the amount that could be spent on campaigns depending on the amount of campus the candidate needs to cover.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, and Clayton Wheeler, Senate chairman, worked with Peterson during break to write an amendment reinstating the spending limits.

In the amendment, which will be presented at the first Senate meeting this semester, spending for student body presidential candidates will be set at 100 percent of tuition, Board of Student Publications and all other campus-wide offices will be set at 20 percent of tuition, and Senate will remain at 10 percent.

Vetoing election guidelines is a smart choice

Unlimited spending would allow as many posters and signs as the candidates could buy.

Student Body President Jeff Peterson vetoed the election guidelines passed by Student Senate.

He said that because the guidelines did not address spending limits, which would in effect eliminate the limits, a student could buy an election.

He is right.

David Norris, Elections Committee chairman, said, "You cannot buy an election."

The unfortunate truth about elections is that flashy signs count. They count a lot.

Many people get to the polls and realize they do not know where every candidate stands on every issue. They usually vote for the candidates they are truly interested in and fill in the rest with names they recognize.

Unlimited spending would allow as many posters and signs as the candidates could buy.

Student Senate passed the guidelines as they were so candidates for campus-wide positions, like student body president and vice president, could spend more than candidates for Senate, who only need to advertise within their respective colleges.

Senate needs to concur with Peterson's wise veto soon before an overlooked matter goes awry during the upcoming student elections in spring.

Universities must educate beyond limited point of view

JOHN HART

It is difficult to break habits and traditions that are a hundred years old, but that is precisely what universities need to do if they are to maintain their integrity as institutions of higher learning.

Universities like K-State are increasingly saying absolutely nothing with greater precision. This trend came about because of a change in modern man's concept of truth. For centuries, humankind believed absolutes (unchanging, objective truths) existed in the fields of knowledge and ethics, for example.

Although people disagreed about absolutes, it was possible to reason about them because everyone accepted the antithesis method of acquiring truth.

This method says simply that if one thing is true, its opposite is false. For instance, the statement "God exists" could be reasoned about because one could conceive its antithesis, "God does not exist."

People then argued about the truth of that absolute statement because they accepted the same framework of understanding truth.

It was possible to deal with life's more important issues like meaning, purpose and significance simply because people believed they could reason about those things on the basis of antithesis.

All of this started to change in the 19th century, when the modern concept of truth began to be shaped in Europe. According to philosopher Francis Shaeffer, the German philosopher Hegel opened the door for the new concept of truth by replacing antithesis with synthesis.

Hegel thought that the partial truths of a thesis and antithesis could be combined to form a higher truth. Essentially, Hegel thought you could achieve a higher truth by combining God existing and not existing at the same time, for instance. If this doesn't make sense, don't fret, because it didn't make sense to Danish philosopher Soren Kierkegaard, the father of all modern thinking, either.

Kierkegaard wanted to find a higher truth or synthesis but understood that it could not be achieved through reason. The next step Kierkegaard took has come to be the dominant feature of higher education.

He completely separated faith from the logical and rational. The only way to draw any conclusions about questions of real importance was through a giant non-rational leap of faith.

The difference between the old concept of truth and the new concept becomes clear. While the old concept held that virtually anything could be reasoned about, the new concept holds that only matters that are logical and rational are open for discussion.

Faith is considered absolutely non-rational, so it is impossible to deal with anything of real significance in higher education. Logic and reason are held to be absolutely rational, the dichotomy of faith.

This approach can only deal with the particulars of life and provides no sense of purpose.

The tragedy of higher education and modern man's new concept of truth is that students are, for the most part, no longer encouraged to acquire an understanding or truth about the world around us.

Instead, universities train students to think in the terms of one specific world view that only considers material evidence to be valid and rational. At K-State, we are told to look at the world through the eyes of Kierkegaard whether we are aware of this or not.

The problem with this new concept of truth and higher education's religious adherence to it is that it teaches a warped view of reality, limits education and fails to consider its own implications.

The best examples that illustrate the problems of narrowing the scope of higher education because of the false and baseless dichotomy between faith and reason are the implications of not considering God, a deity or higher power in our understanding of the world.

If God does exist, it would dramatically alter our understanding of biology and the origins of life, physics and ethics, for example. By ignoring these possibilities because faith is supposedly completely non-rational, universities are guilty of being anti-intellectual because they are not as interested in answering important questions as they are in indoctrinating students with a limited way of perceiving the world.

As a result, our education becomes void of meaning. We merely learn to speak with great precision about nothing.

If universities persist in the business of promulgating insignificant material, their status as institutions of higher learning becomes dubious at best.

Republicans can't balance budget

Dear editor,

Republican congressman Dick Armey said that the Republicans cannot tell the American people how they plan to balance the budget. If they did, then the Constitutional amendment for a balanced budget would not pass in Congress. The Republicans do not trust the American people, but we as citizens have a right to know.

"We do know the major cuts will fall on the middle class and the poor."

MARIE PETERSON
Winfield resident

We do know that the major cuts will fall on the middle class and the poor. The first thing that the Republicans did when they took over Congress was to make it very difficult to pass taxes on the wealthiest Americans by passing a super majority rule. It takes only a simple majority vote to cut Medicare, Medicaid, education and other programs.

Republicans have not allowed reforms in campaign and congressional ethics laws. We can only assume that they will make the cuts necessary for a balanced budget with guidance from lobbyists and special interests. We are told to close our eyes, hold our noses and take the unnamed medicine.

We may be sorry we ever opened our eyes. By the time lobbyists exchange favors with the Republican Congress, and the unknown contributors to GOPAC give congressman Gingrich their secret advice, who knows what may happen?

James Madison wrote, "A popular government, without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a prologue to a farce or a tragedy... a people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives."

"Balanced budget amendment" consists of three easy words, but what are the consequences? We have a right to know. I do not want Republicans or Democrats telling me that I do not have a right to know what a balanced budget amendment really means.

'Far Side' should continue on Diversions

CHRIS BLOOM
sophomore, construction science and management

Dear editor,

As I sit here reading the first Collegian of the new semester, I saw something that shocked me — no "Far Side!" My day is now very gloomy. I mean, thank you for leaving "Calvin and Hobbes," but "The Far Side" is the best! I don't know about everyone, but the comics are something that I read out of the Collegian every day. If you can't find any new ones, could you please just give us some old "Far Side" sketches? I think that the community as a whole would be grateful to you.

Fitness is useful for job market

Dear editor,

In an article printed yesterday, the statement was made that P.E. will help you in life while English composition and speech are "skills needed in the job market." Is this to say that P.E. will have no value as a skill you need for the job market?

I disagree. People in the job market are a total package, not just a bunch of acquired skills. You have to sell yourself as well as your education. People who are energetic and self-assured tend to climb the corporate ladder faster than lethargic, insecure people. I would argue that personal fitness can have a significant effect on these attributes.

There are so many messages we all get from different sources on how to stay fit or monitor our weight. Many of them are hoaxes intended to capitalize on the insecurities of us all. It was nice to have a class where they teach you things about personal fitness that aren't hype. Sure, I learned some things in high school, but I think P.E. covered it much better.

If P.E. is eliminated as a requirement, then so be it. I just feel it should be evaluated as more than a trivial class. If students actually try to learn what the class is trying to teach us, then it could help shape us as people. How we feel about ourselves affects how others look at us, and fitness does play a role.

Textbook publishers elude blame for prices

DAN LEWERENZ

Most students are of the opinion that they pay too much for books. They're right, and it's easy to prove. Finding who is responsible — that is the hard part.

This is sort of a touchy subject for many students this time of year. I just spent $289.75 on required texts, and I still have seven books left to buy (thank God I'm not an engineering major).

How can you save a bundle without scrounging through used books for the one with the least "booger" comments in the margins?

Start by avoiding college bookstores. By going to Claflin Books & Copies or Waldenbooks, you can often save a fair amount of money on a new book. Those of you taking philosophy of religion, for example, can save $6.55 on Louis Pojman's anthology. That's enough for Pizza Shuttle and a movie at the Union.

But for the hundreds enrolled in environmental geography, don't bother combing Waldenbooks' shelves for Strahler and Strahler. Most textbooks are not available through the distributors who serve general bookstores.

For textbooks, you are stuck with what the Union Bookstore and Varney's have to offer. Although there might be some difference in prices between these stores, they generally charge about the same amount.

And they will tell you that these prices are not as high as they seem. The Union keeps a video titled "The Great Textbook Rip-Off ... Fact or Fiction" in case people ask why textbooks seem so expensive.

Produced by the College Stores Research and Education Foundation, a national organization of college book stores and publishers, the information presented is questionable.

Of course, the textbook publishers and bookstores will say that that they're not ripping you off.

But we have no way to objectively determine the truth, because the chain bookstores don't offer textbooks. It's the trade books that demonstrate the value in looking elsewhere.

By looking to a general bookstore for Hoebel's "The Cheyennes," anthropology students can save a dollar. Why the difference?

According to K-State Student Union Bookstore manager Kay Farley, the publishers might be to blame. Trade books are often offered to the chain bookstores at a lower price than they are to college bookstores.

The difference might even be in the number of books ordered. Farley said that in the past, she has been able to get a lower price when ordering fewer books. A large order signals the publisher that it is probably required for a class, and therefore they know it will sell at whatever price is given.

So what can you do about it?

"I believe the American Booksellers Association is in the process of doing a class-action suit against a bunch of publishers ... to address just that issue," Farley said.

But until that is resolved, we might be stuck with the higher prices of college bookstores or the inconvenience of the trade stores, which often don't have the necessary titles and quantities in stock.

Faculty may have some influence, but only if they threatened to boycott publishers who raise costs for bulk orders.

With the rising cost of tuition and the growing number of individuals who can't afford school, let's hope we will see the decline of book prices soon.

Class on gangs offered with help of technology

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

This spring, students can enroll in a class to learn about gang activities as well as technology.

HDFS 700: Gangs, Youth and the Community will be offered via TELENET to students both on the K-State campus and around the state at 33 different sites.

The course has several objectives, including the understanding of gang activities and membership, said David Balk, associate professor of Human Development and Family Studies and the instructor of the course.

Balk said he will be urging students to use e-mail and will be assigning team projects to encourage interaction between students outside of class.

Balk also said he has been surprised at the interest in the course. He said he guesses the majority of the students will be from outside of Manhattan.

"I've received several long-distance calls," Balk said.

He attributes this widespread interest to increasing violence and to worries of it spreading.

"If gangs get a strong foothold, they will spread into smaller towns," Balk said.

CLASS INFO

To enroll, students should call the Kansas Regents Network at 532-5995.
The course will start Wednesday and will be 7 to 10 p.m. every other week until May 10.
Students can enroll for either two or three undergraduate credits.

Sue White, program coordinator for the Kansas Regents Network, said the class will work over a telephone setup similar to a party line.

"We want to see if we can use technology to do distance education and interact with each other," White said.

The different sites across the state are connected through telephone lines, and the course will be broadcast to the different cities. An assistant will be at every site to help students.

Balk will be teaching from the Manhattan site in Dole Hall.

"Anyone at any site can turn on a microphone and give a comment or ask a question," White said.

K-State ROTC wins 2 regional titles

Fort Riley aids campus ROTC to win honors

CARY CONOVER
Collegian

The Kansas State ROTC Program has something new to brag about.

K-State's program won two awards at the Professor of Military Science ROTC Conference in San Francisco in September. It was named the best battalion in both Kansas and in the 4th Brigade.

The 4th Brigade consists of 11 universities in Kansas, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

"You have to think we're doing something right," said James Buster, gold bar recruiter for ROTC and December graduate of K-State.

K-State ROTC also received a rank of second in the Western region. The Western region consists of the 22 states west of the Mississippi River.

Portland State University ranked ahead of K-State in the smallest category.

Other colleges with medium- and large-sized programs were also compared.

Maj. George Stelljes, professor of military science, said the close proximity of Fort Riley and Manhattan is one of the factors in K-State's success.

Fort Riley is very supportive of K-State's program, allowing ROTC to train there occasionally throughout the year, Stelljes said.

However, even if K-State was not near a large military base, Stelljes said ROTC would still train somehow.

"It would make it harder, but we'd find another way to train," Stelljes said.

A strong commitment on the part of both the students and instructors also helped contribute to K-State's success, Stelljes said.

"It's a combination of the quality of cadets and the quality of cadre," Stelljes said.

It was no surprise for Stelljes when K-State received the honors for best battalion in Kansas and in the brigade.

"I felt we were definitely in the running for best battalion in Kansas and in the brigade," Stelljes said. "Our cadets always rank very high when they are compared to other schools."

Buster said he was glad to see his hard work throughout his four years in ROTC pay off.

"The truth is, we have consistently performed better than all the schools in the state and most of the brigade. And we usually place in the top five in the region," Buster said.

"It's not like bragging rights. It's just kind of something to hang on the wall."

"Our cadets always rank very high when they are compared to other schools."

FORMER WILDCAT HEADS SOUTH

David Chadd, a former all-America baseball player at K-State and an assistant coach for the Wildcats the past three seasons, has resigned his post immediately and has accepted a job with the Florida Marlins as an area scout. His coaching career began in 1989 when he was on the staff that guided the Wichita State Shockers to a second-place finish in the College World Series in 1991. Chadd moved on to K-State prior to the 1992 season.

Cats have to show desire every game

DEREK SIMMONS

I'll admit it, I'm guilty.

Following K-State's unexpected, 74-66 victory against Oklahoma State Saturday, senior Belvis Noland said, "A lot of people counted us out."

It seems Noland and some others weren't all too surprised to open the Big Eight Conference season with a win.

Gulp. I was.

And for anyone else who witnessed the same group succumb to Wichita State — by 24 points — just four days earlier, I'm sure the feeling is mutual.

They stunk up the court at Wichita, and then they left fans high-fiving and woo-hooing against Oklahoma State.

Go figure the logic behind that.

"I think we were just looking forward to Big Eight play," Coach Tom Asbury said. "It's a combination of 500 different things."

Add a helping of a poor performance by Oklahoma State to Asbury's prosperity stew.

Randy Rutherford, the Pokes' second-leading scorer, missed nine of 10 three-point attempts — the most of his career. Bryant Reeves left his scoring abilities in the locker room at halftime, connecting on two measly field goals the entire second period.

"I don't know if they were any better than we thought they would be. We just played poorly," Reeves said about K-State.

But the Cats undoubtedly played their best basketball of the season against the Cowboys — basketball I wasn't sure would surface this season. Intense defense and desire, among other things, hindered Rutherford and Reeves.

Asbury and the gang are certainly exceeding most expectations thus far. K-State is 10-3.

One joke before the season started was that the basketball team wouldn't win as many games as the football team.

Looks like the football squad is the one deserving of a joke. Something like ... what do a kickoff tee and Chad May have in common? Both spent the Aloha Bowl on the ground and were mostly unused. It was sad to see such an awesome season end on a sour note.

Back to basketball.

"A lot of people said we weren't going to win any Big Eight games," Asbury said. "None. Zero.

"We came back to play after Tuesday's game."

Those that snickered about the basketball-football gag, including me, are probably thinking "Hmmm ... OK, now what?"

What will the Cats do now with a three-game conference road trip including games at Nebraska, Missouri and then Kansas?

The contest with the Cornhuskers tonight on ESPN will tell whether the Cats' first league victory was bona fide or bogus.

Nebraska will be a middle-of-the-pack finisher in the league at best. A win in Lincoln isn't impossible, but I'm not convinced K-State will prevail.

And Missouri? Throw the Tigers in with the Big Eight also-rans, too. Once again, though, I foresee a loss. The Cats haven't won at Columbia since 19??. (I wouldn't want to give away the answer to Wednesday's trivia question in the Wildcat Watch. Let's just say it's been awhile.)

And Kansas? Let's move on.

By now, Cat worshipers are cursing my every word. So let me interject here by saying K-State showed an essential element against Oklahoma State: sheer will. Virtually no one except the Cats expected a win.

Abundant talent is important, but desire is critical. My baseball coach used to tell us, "We don't ask you to do extraordinary things. We only ask you to do the ordinary things extraordinarily well."

The same principles can apply to any sport. And hey, they can carry a team, too.

One more piece of positive information: In the 1992-93 season, when K-State lost to Wichita State, the Cats wound up in the NCAA Tournament. Here's to wishful thinking.

▶ MEN'S BASKETBALL PRECEDE

Cats, NU to meet on ESPN

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State men's basketball team will be riding a wave of emotion to Lincoln, Neb.

This comes after the Wildcats beat Oklahoma State Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

"Right now, we are at a high emotional level," K-State coach Tom Asbury said.

Asbury said the Cats will need all of that emotion to defeat the Cornhuskers, who are also riding high after erasing a 12-point deficit for a victory at Long Beach State on Tuesday.

"They have some outstanding perimeter shooters," Asbury said. "Three of their players have the ability to shoot from NBA three-point range.

"I think we will be able to take the emotion and energy from the Oklahoma State game into this game"

TOM ASBURY
K-State men's basketball coach

"I think that we will be able to take the emotion and energy from the Oklahoma State game into this game."

The three players Asbury was talking about are guards Erick Strickland, Jaron Boone and Tom Wald.

For the season, Strickland has been averaging 17.9 points per game.

Against Long Beach State, Strickland scored 18 points on 5-of-8 shooting. This includes a trio of three-pointers.

"Strickland is one of their best shooters," Asbury said. "He has legitimate NBA three-point range."

The Huskers' next long-range threat is Boone.

So far this season, Boone has been averaging 14 points, but during the Big Eight schedule last season, he lit it up from behind the three-point arc.

Against Big Eight opponents, Boone nailed 30 three-pointers.

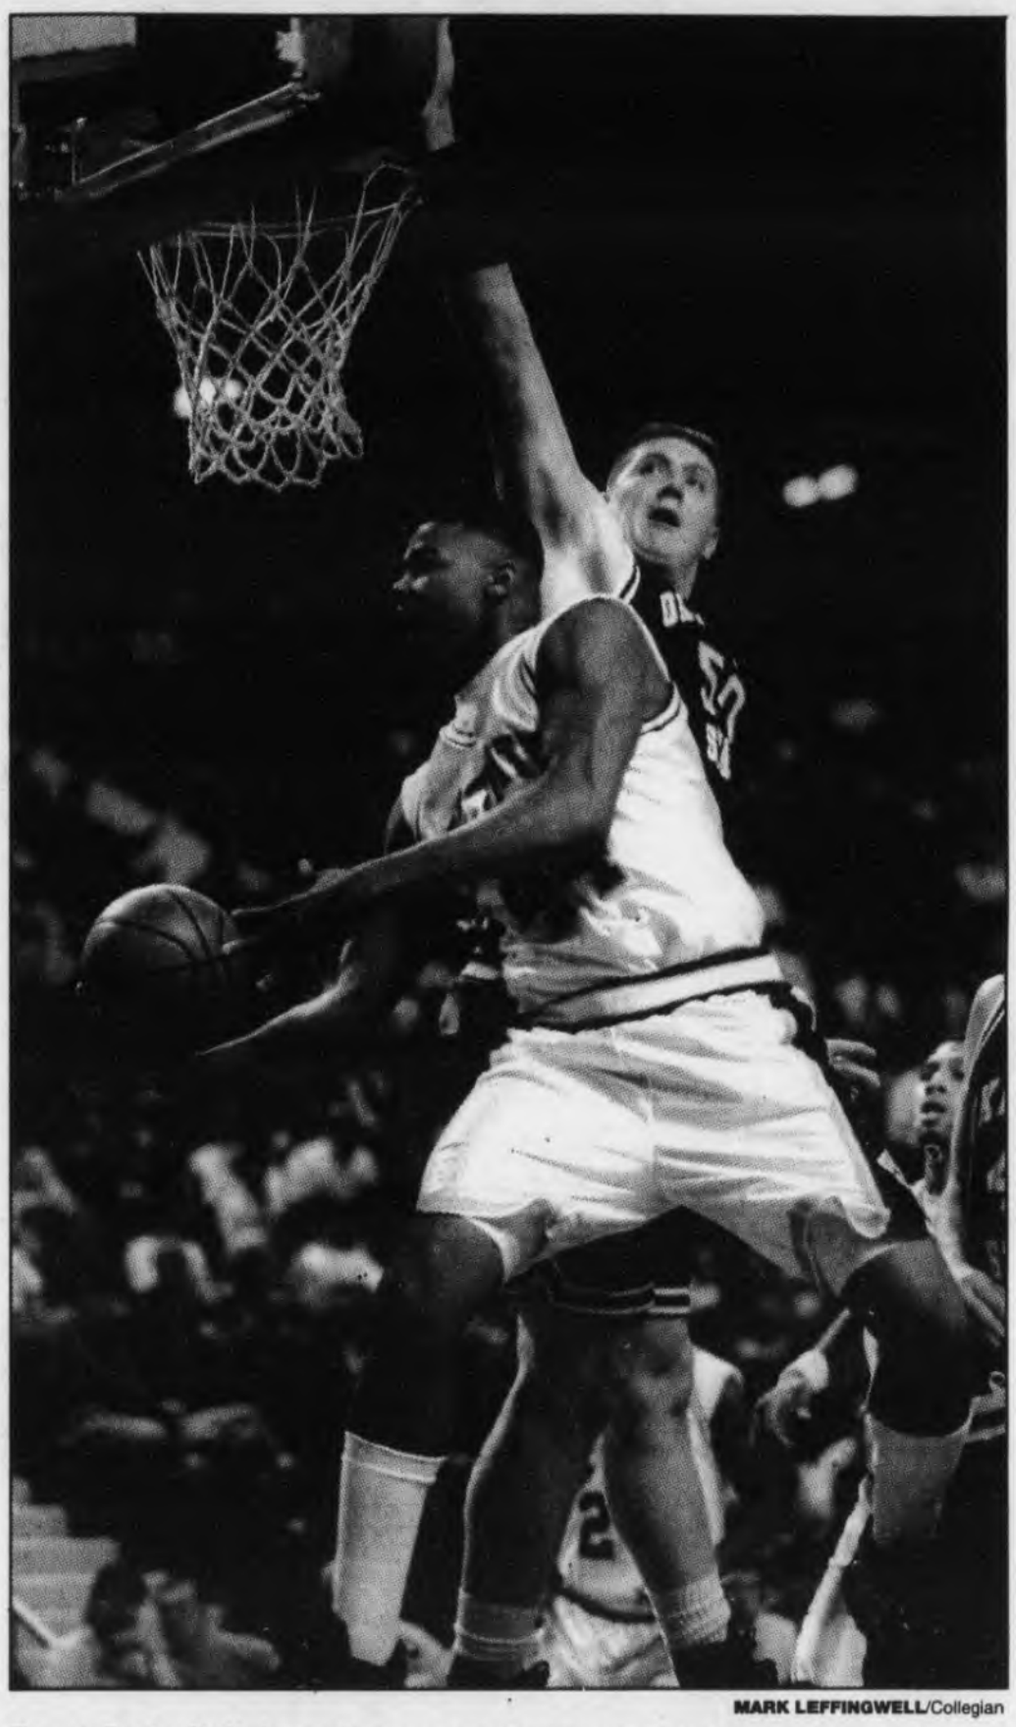
Wald only hit one three-pointer against Long Beach, but he did light up the scoreboard with 20 points.

"We're going to have to play tough on the perimeter," Asbury said. "They like to play up-tempo, and so do we, to a point. We can't play as fast on the road, but we still want to push it."

The Cats also possess a deep threat with point guard Elliot Hatcher.

Hatcher has more than filled in for departed point guard Anthony Beane.

Hatcher is the Cats' leader on the court. He directs the offense, he is the leading scorer, the leader in minutes and the three-point shooting leader.



"When we were looking for a point guard, we wanted someone who could come in and be the leader," Asbury said. "Elliot has done just that. He's playing very well right now. He's smart, competitive, and he's done some really nice things so far."

After starting the Big Eight season at home, the match-up against the Huskers is the Cats' first road test of the young Big Eight season.

"I hope that we will be ready to go," Asbury said. "You just never know. Just ask Missouri."

Tonight's game will be televised by ESPN, and it marks the first time that the Cats will be on national television this season.

"It should be good for the program," Asbury said. "Anytime that you can get national exposure for your program, it's a plus."

MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian

Tyrone Davis, K-State center, goes under Oklahoma State's Bryant Reeves for two of his seven points in the Cats' 74-66 victory over the Cowboys on Saturday. The Cats will try to stay undefeated in Big Eight play tonight at the University of Nebraska.

Cats return home against Cal State

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

After a successful road trip last weekend, the K-State women's basketball team returns to Manhattan tonight to take on the Hornets of Sacramento State.

Tip-off will be at 7 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats posted road wins over Nebraska and Iowa State last week, earning their first 2-0 start in Big Eight play since the 1989-90 season.

Tonight's match-up with Sacramento State will be the final non-conference game of the season.

The Hornets bring a 3-13 record to Manhattan without Kristy Ryan, last year's NCAA leading scorer, who lit up the Cats for 27 points and 20 rebounds.

K-State won 69-55 last year in the season finale, despite Ryan's efforts.

But with the upcoming game against KU on the horizon, the Cats have to be careful not to overlook Sacramento State.

"They've already got a win against Texas, and they're probably as well-coached a team as there is in the country," K-State coach Brian Agler said.

"They've got some returning players that are good."

However, the Hornets are coming in a bit bruised this year.

Starter Marcy Ralphs played in 10 games this season, averaging 12.1 points and 4.9 rebounds per game, but she is still recovering from abdominal surgery and likely will not return this season.

Sarah Stapp, the team's leading scorer, and three-point specialist Caree Anderson are projected to start despite nagging knee injuries.

Reserve guard Erin Enders will also play, though she is still suffering from back pain after a fall against San Francisco.

K-State's injury situation has improved since the return of freshman point guard Amanda Chamberlain.

A starter in preseason play, Chamberlain has been sidelined by shin splints for most of the season.

She returned to action against Washington State on Dec. 30.

Since her return she has averaged more than five assists in the three games.

Agler said it might be another three to four weeks before Chamberlain is 100 percent.

Following tonight's game, the Cats will hit the road and resume Big Eight play against arch-rival Kansas in Lawrence on Sunday.

Snyder will share coaching duties with Dick Toomey of Arizona and Spike Dykes of Texas Tech.

Lockout ends; hockey season to start soon

Players accept a six-year agreement with team owners

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Leaders of the NHL players' union accepted the owners' latest contract offer Wednesday, ending a bitter 103-day lockout and saving what would have been the first pro sports season lost to a labor dispute.

"We're happy that hockey is hopefully going be played very soon," NHL Players' Association president Mike Gartner said.

NHL commissioner Gary Bettman said he was thrilled that the conflict is over and that they can it get behind them.

"It was important that the league come together with the players. ... to take this league to the great heights that it can come to. I retain the optimism that I've always had for the future of this sport," Bettman said.

Bettman said the season would start late next week, probably with a 48-game season and four full playoff rounds. The NHL normally plays an 84-game schedule.

Gartner said a ratification vote on the six-year agreement still must be held among the union's approximately 700 members and that no practices would begin until the ratification was complete.

"It will require a 51-percent majority acceptance, and I'm confident the membership will accept," said union leader Bob Goodenow, who along with the NHLPA executive committee recommended acceptance.

"This has been a long, difficult process, one that has come to a conclusion that both sides can live with," he said. "It's important that we get the focus where it belongs — the competition.

"In balance, the committee decided that this was a situation that would be fair to both sides," Goodenow said.

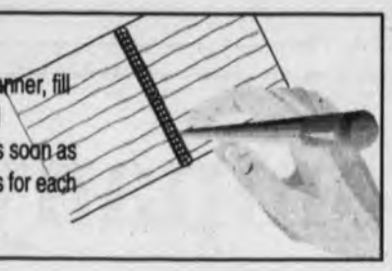
Negotiators have until noon Friday to finalize details of the contract, said Glenn Sather, general manager of the Edmonton Oilers. Camps could not open until then, he said.

"We thought it was a good deal," said Bob Corkum, player representative for the Anaheim Mighty Ducks.

The announcement came a day after a marathon session in New York of hard bargaining, proposals, counter-proposals and intense conference calls, with free agency the last major obstacle.

"Are we happy about the scars that have been created for the game of hockey?" asked Gartner. "Are we happy about losing millions of dollars? Are we happy about the relations between owners and players has been severely hindered?

"No we're not happy about that. But we're happy that hockey is hopefully going to be played very soon."



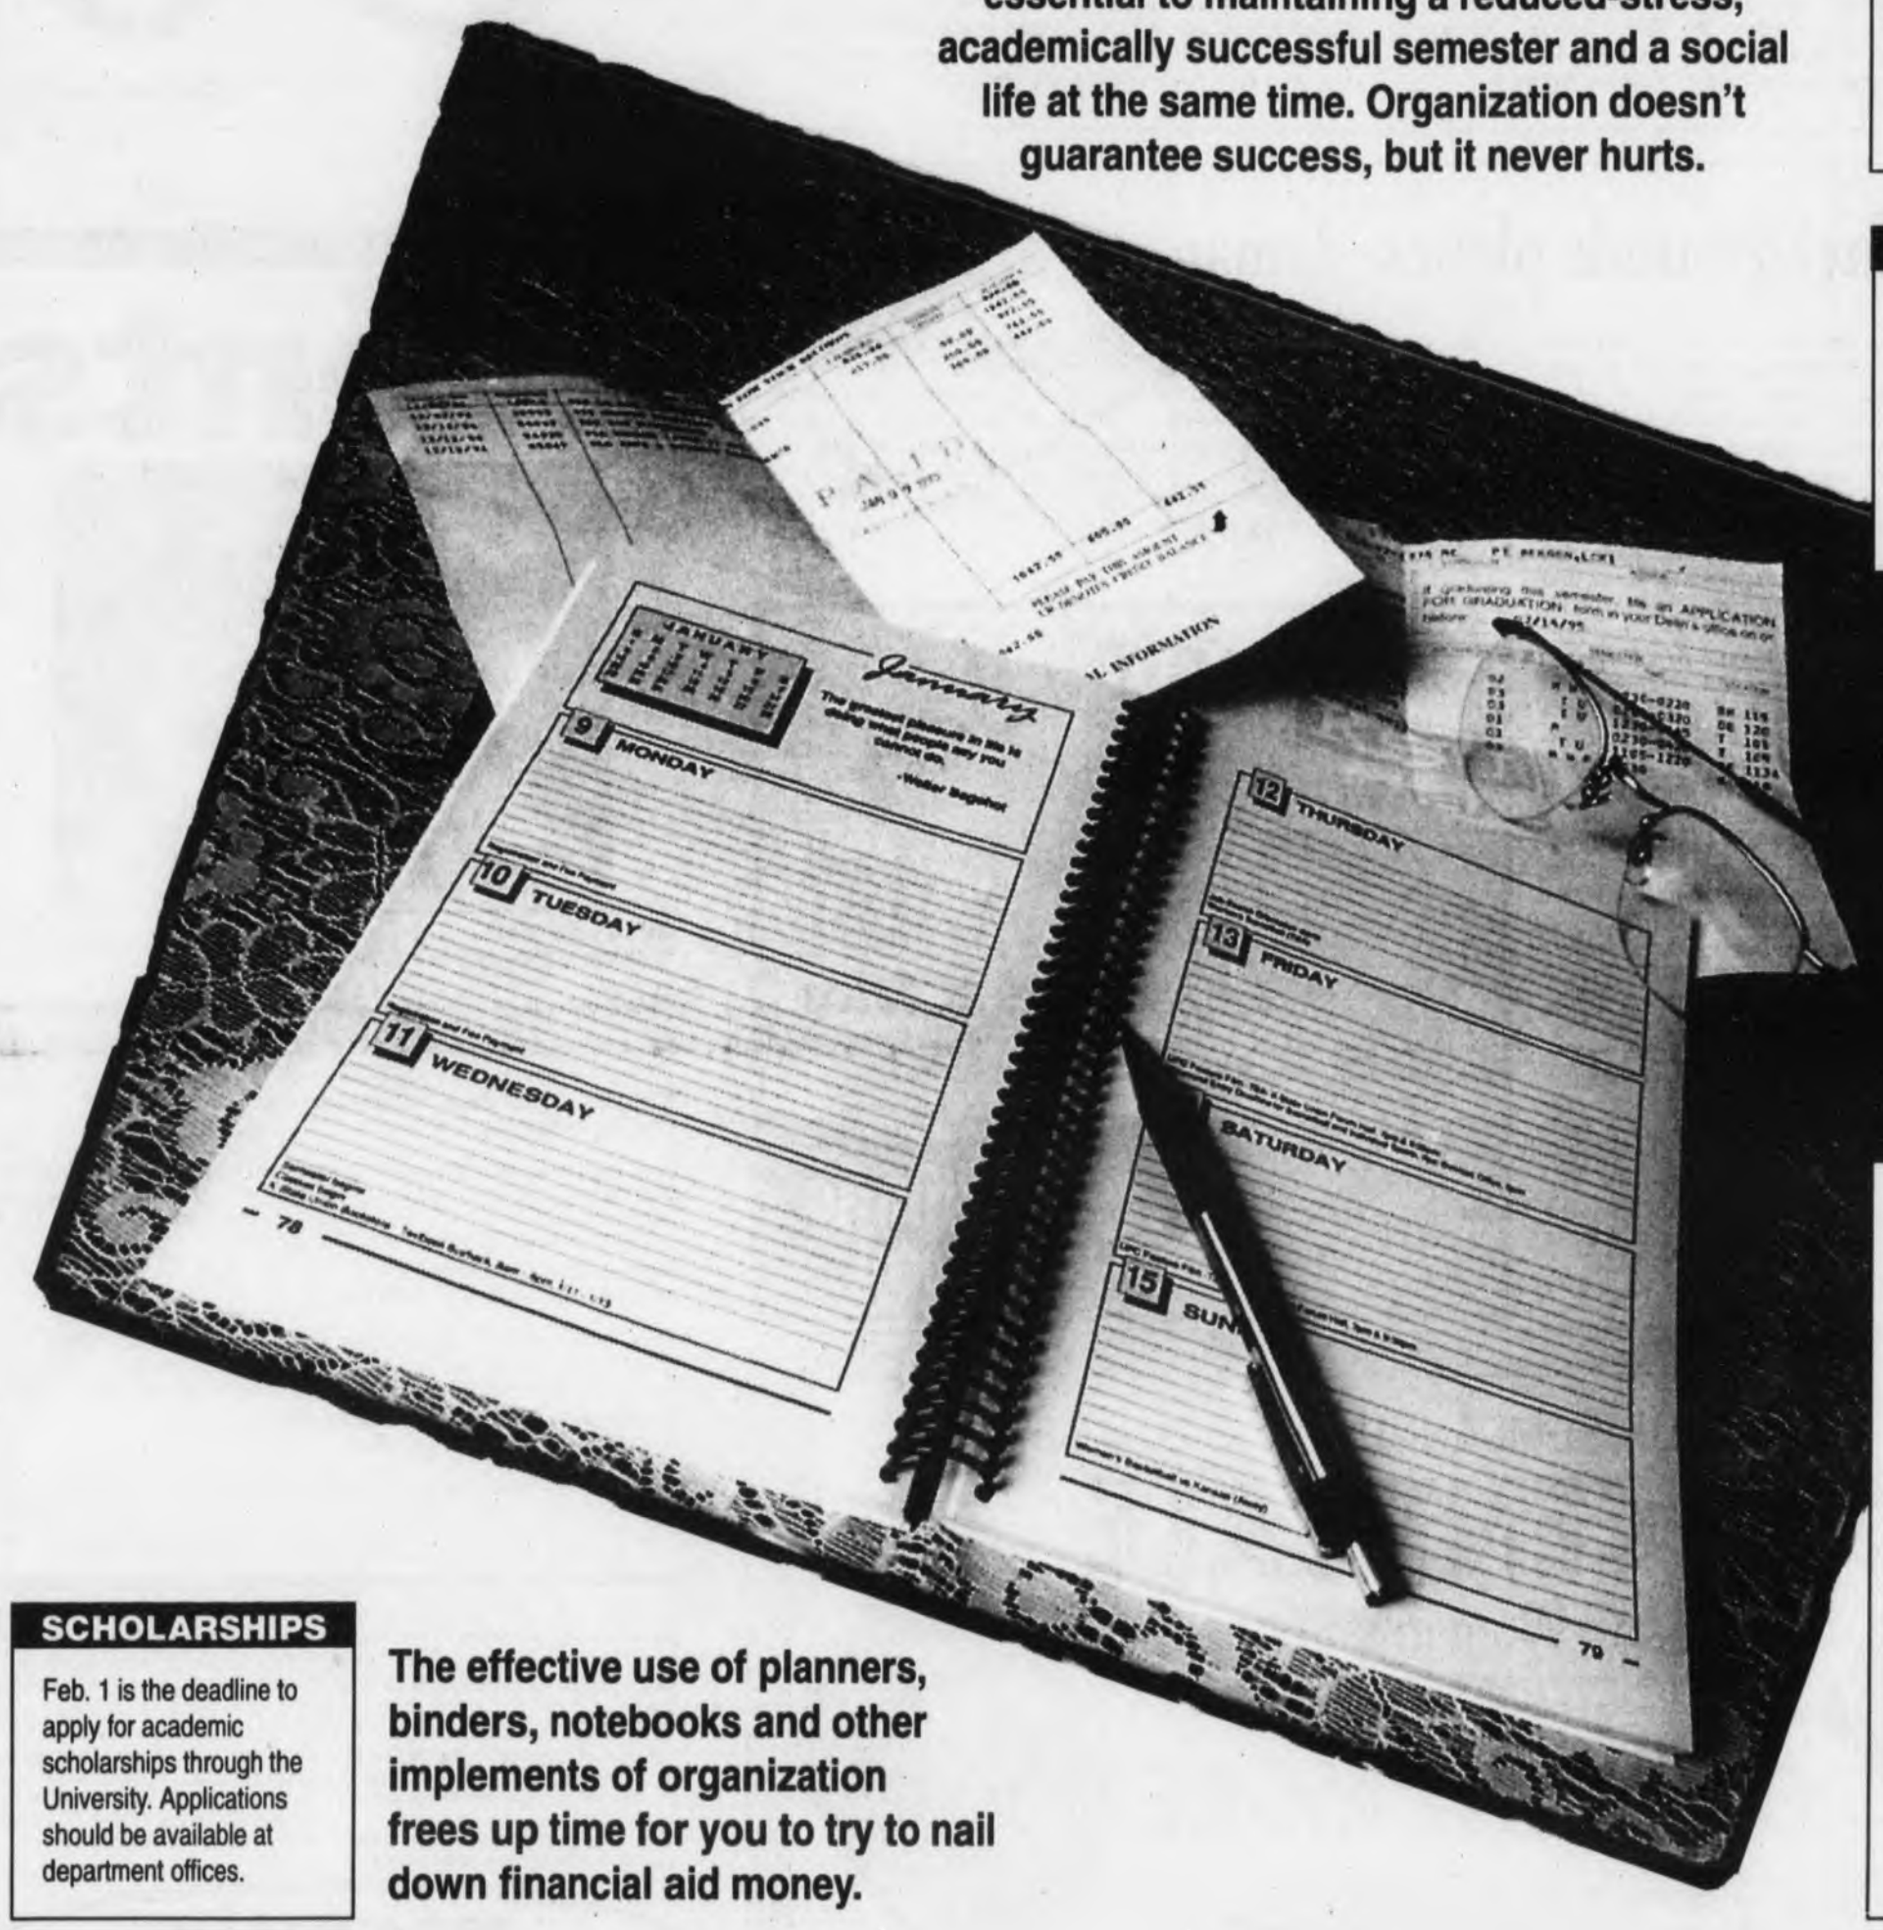
The lockout began over the owners' demand for cap on players' salaries, but in the end, free agency was by far the most contentious issue.

The owners didn't want players to become unrestricted free agents until after they turned 32 years old, but the players wanted it at 30. The contract the owners sent to players offered free agency at 32 in the first three years and at 31 in the last three.

Because either side has the right to scrap the agreement after the 1997-98 season, there might be only one year in which 31-year-olds have complete freedom.

Tidbits

When using your planner, fill in all your exam and assignment dates as soon as you get your syllabus for each class.



Tidbits

When going to any test, take more than one pencil and pen, a calculator and your student ID — just in case.

GET IT TOGETHER

It's now or never. Having everything organized is essential to maintaining a reduced-stress, academically successful semester and a social life at the same time. Organization doesn't guarantee success, but it never hurts.

AID DEADLINE

Summer applications are due April 15. This is also the normal deadline for 1995-96 financial aid.

FEE PAYMENT

Put your stamped receipt from fee payment in a safe place. Because student IDs are no longer validated, you may need the receipt sometime to prove you paid fees.

ESSENTIALS

There are a few things every student should have at the beginning of the semester:

- A planner.
- A study partner.
- An organized method of taking and compiling class notes.
- A reliable watch.
- A good, loud alarm clock.
- A balanced checkbook.
- A quiet place to study.
- A budget.
- A current phone list with numbers of friends, relatives, professors and study partners.

SCHOLARSHIPS

Feb. 1 is the deadline to apply for academic scholarships through the University. Applications should be available at department offices.

The effective use of planners, binders, notebooks and other implements of organization frees up time for you to try to nail down financial aid money.

If getting your act together academically this semester is your New Year's Resolution, then today is as good as any to get started.

It might be too late for first picks on used books, but it's not too late to get organized.

"I could be more organized, but I do try," Michelle Bennett, junior in interior design, said.

Bennett said she thought she would be much more organized if she just took advantage of her planner and used it more efficiently.

"I forget to look at it," she said. "I try to remember everything without writing it down."

Bob Kohl, an enhanced university experience leader, said using a calendar is a good way to keep track of things for the semester.

"The beginning of the semester is a good time to get out a calendar and make a layout of the semester," Kohl said.

Kohl said organizing activities and paying attention to what's in your planner makes it easier to plan ahead when you have a week with two tests or conflicting activities.

Kohl said he also recommends working with your instructor outside of class if you are having problems in a class.

"Use your instructor as a tool," he said.

As far as note taking, Kohl said there is not one universal way to do it.

"Whether someone is a visual person or a real organized person affects the type they'll choose for themselves," Kohl said. "It's not just learning a technique and doing it over and over again. It's finding what's best for you."

PLANNERS

A K-State Programmer can be purchased in the K-State Union Bookstore for $4.95.

Kohl said he recommends taking the Enhanced University Class, EDCEP 111, to learn about developing better study skills and about other current topics. Information pertaining to this class can be obtained in Holton 101.

Getting next semester's financial aid in order in advance is another way to get organized this year.

Applications for financial aid are available outside Fairchild 104. It is not necessary to see anyone or make an appointment to pick up an application.

"We realize this is a very difficult process to get through," Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance, said. "But it's a process we're stuck with."

If you are late applying for financial aid this semester, it is not too late to receive a check if you apply before Feb. 1.

AID DEADLINE

March 1 is the priority deadline to receive work study funds, supplemental grant funds and Perkins Loans.

With a little patience, money could be available in about four to six weeks, Moeder said.

It is important to pay close attention to each step in the financial-aid process, Moeder said.

"Read everything received in the mail and respond immediately," Moeder said.

To prevent confusion later, Moeder said to record everything that is turned in and include when and where in the records. Also, make copies of items mailed and turned into the bank or University.

Moeder said it is human nature to not read the directions the second time a form is filled out, but it will prevent problems from developing.

"Before filling out the form, read all the directions," he said. "They are clear and will guide you through."

If you want to save time and avoid lines when buying your textbooks this semester, try to shop early in the morning or late into the evening, said Dan Walter, textbook manager at Varney's Book Store.

Also, he said, try to buy your books as soon as possible.

"Normally, the earlier you can come in, the more likely you are to get used books," Walter said.

Eric Williams, sales clerk at Varney's, said the supplies students buy vary with the individual.

"If you do use a three-ring binder, make sure to buy dividers to separate notes for different classes," Williams said. "Also, use a three-hole punch on campus or buy one.

"This way, you can include things such as syllabuses with your notes."

For the overachieving, organized individual, here's a special tip: Stock up on paper products. Williams said rumor has it a paper shortage will increase prices on paper products in the upcoming months.

TEXTBOOKS

Make sure you keep your receipt when you buy textbooks — you never know if you'll have to return them if you drop the class or don't need the book for the class after all.

Local cable company adds 2 new channels

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Although the song goes "57 channels and nothing on," K-State students might very well sing "40 channels and nothing on."

TCI of Kansas, which offers cable service to Manhattan residents, has added two new channels to their service, The Learning Channel (Channel 39) and tv! (Channel 40).

They don't come free, though. Cable subscribers received a letter with their bill accounting for a 76-cent increase in expanded basic service fees.

Ron Frazier, general manager of TCI, said TCI has no plans to add any more channels to their lineup right now.

Frazier said he didn't have any say as to what channels were to be added to the lineup.

Those decisions, based on a nationwide survey, were made at the corporate level, he said.

The Learning Channel and tv! were added hastily, Frazier said.

Extra equipment had to be installed to make room for two new channels because the past setup allowed for only 36 channels, he said.

So, what does all this mean to students?

Kerby Clevenger, senior in electrical engineering, said he doubts he will watch the two new channels.

"I don't know what that tv! channel is," Clevenger said.

The tv! channel highlights different cable channels each day.

For instance, one day it might be HBO, and the next it could be the Sci-fi Network or American Movie Classics.

Even if TCI doesn't offer a channel, tv! will still highlight it.

Clevenger said he would like to see TCI offer the Sci-fi Network, Comedy Central and the Cartoon Network.

Frazier said TCI hasn't added the Sci-fi Network because it does not have a contract with the network.

Some channels are owned by TCI. Court TV, for example, is owned by TCI and is offered in Manhattan.

TCI currently offers two NBC channels, two ABC channels and two CBS channels.

"It's worthless. They could be doing something else than having two channels the same," Clevenger said.

Frazier said a lot of customers prefer two channels from the same network because when one station broadcasts a local event, such as a ballgame, they can turn to another channel and still see their usual program.

Rhonda McKinnon, assistant director of the Office of Student Financial Assistance, said she was disappointed with the two new channels.

"I was interested in the History Channel and the Sci-fi Channel," she said.

Karen Sottosanti, graduate student in English, said she is also disappointed with the two new channels because she is addicted to Comedy Central.

Comedy Central, the Sci-fi Network and the Cartoon Network were launched in the last few years as specialty channels that target younger audiences.

"40 CHANNELS AND NOTHING ON?"

Current Fees for TCI of Kansas

Basic service (14 channels)	$ 9.95
Expanded basic service (19 more channels)	$11.08
Each premium channel (HBO, Disney, etc.)	$13.95
Increase in expanded basic service for tv! and The Learning Channel	$.76
Total	$35.74

A package of one premium channel, Starz, Encore and a cable guide is available for $14.95. This week, installation is $9.95 for wired homes and $26.04 for unwired homes. Sometimes TCI offers special rates after the initial rate.

Contaminated fuel grounds planes; damage to be assessed

NOLAN SCHRAMM
Collegian

Eighteen of 45 planes at K-State-Salina were grounded last week when they were accidentally refueled with what is thought to be jet fuel.

The planes won't be allowed to fly because of safety precautions, said Ken Barnard, head of the department of aeronautical technology.

Jet fuel has a higher kerosene content than regular fuel does. It could be harmful to four-cycle engines if burned for long periods of time, Barnard said.

K-State has not yet determined if there has been any damage to the planes, but it is looking into the situation, Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, said.

"All we know is that we got a truckload of contaminated fuel," he said.

Samples of the fuel were analyzed, and the results were confirmed by two independent labs. The results showed that the fuel does contain kerosene, Barnard said.

The fuel supplier is now testing the fuel to determine the amount of kerosene in it, Barnard said.

"It is possible they will let us fly the planes on the fuel," he said. "It is also possible that the engines may have to be stripped down, or we may need to replace them all."

The fuel was sold to K-State by Flower Aviation, a Salina Conoco fuel supplier. The company is not sure the when, where or how the fuel was switched.

"We're not sure what happened yet. Our next step would be to find out where it broke down in the chain," Todd Engel, general manager of Flower Aviation, said.

The problem was discovered by Bill Garrison Jr., director of aircraft maintenance, during a routine preflight inspection, Barnard said.

One test involves inspecting fuel, in which a sample of the fuel is poured into a glass cylinder. If the fuel is the right shade of blue, it is OK. If not, there might be water mixed in, he said.

Kerosene mixed with regular fuel cannot be detected visually. It could have escaped Garrison's detection, but it didn't.

"He spilled some of the fuel on his hand, and when it evaporated, he smelled kerosene and felt an oily residue. Then he contacted me," Barnard said.

By the time Garrison had discovered the tainted fuel, 18 planes had already flown, he said.

Despite the possibility that half the fleet will be grounded, depending on the test results and the engine manufacturer's recommendations, students in the aviation classes will still be able to fly.

Fortunately, a number of planes were being serviced at the time the other planes were flown on the contaminated fuel, Barnard said.

"The whole fleet is not available, but there are enough planes to continue the program," he said. "We anticipate we will be able to meet our flight schedule for the next semester."

Sex in the room has to stop

Dear Cassie,

I have a problem that I hope you will help me with.

I live in one of the residence halls. My problem is my roommate. Or, more specifically, my roommate's boyfriend. Three or four times a week, he stays over in our room. I don't mind this.

What I mind is the fact that they have loud, noisy, animalistic sex several times a night, whether I am in the room or not.

One night I woke up, turned over and saw he was sleeping on top of the covers without any clothes. If I wanted to see that, I'd be the one sleeping with him.

I can't get any sleep on those nights, and I also am getting to the point where I can't look at him without laughing.

Help! What can I do?

Signed,
Mooned in Moore Hall

Dear Mooned,

Tell you roommate that it is not classy to have sex while someone else is in the room. Sit down and talk about this. Tell her you don't mind him staying over, but you do mind the moans and groans.

If it doesn't work, then simply give in and laugh at him the next time you see him naked. He'll get the point.

Chia pets, flu top worst gift list

Imagine yourself waking up Christmas morning excited, just like when you were a kid.

You gallop into the living room, spot the shimmering tree and those red, white and green presents so prettily packed underneath.

The suspense is killing you. You've shaken them, tossed them, even pressed your ear to them, systematically over the last couple of days. But you still can't figure it out. What could it be?

Maybe it's that compact disc player you've been asking for, or — even better — that diamond bracelet you hinted about to your man.

Sweat is dripping down your forehead as you rip into those well-deserved gifts and find — What? A tool box? Your mind races. You never asked for this, never even thought about it, and will definitely try to return it.

Who are the minds that breed these hilariously horrible gifts received every year?

Here are just some of the weirdest, wackiest gifts that K-State students received this Christmas:

1. "I got a Chia Pet hippo," Mike Moss, freshman in architectural engineering, said.

2. "My grandparents got me this zebra-striped pen and pencil set from Wal-Mart. They got one for each of their grandchildren," Brian Hall, freshman in architectural engineering, said.

3. "I got some stress putty from my father, who's like extremely stressed out all the time," Adam Galyon, junior in accounting, said.

4. "I got the stomach flu," David Wood, junior in agronomy, said.

5. "I got a whole stocking full of underwear from Santa," Deborah Hollis, sophomore in psychology, said.

6. "I graduated in December, and four people got me K-State stuff. Like I don't have enough K-State things already. One of the people even crocheted a K-State blanket," Nicki Sadat, K-State graduate, said.

7. Norman Sedillo, senior in pre-medicine, said he received a box labeled "Handle With Care" in the mail from a pen pal in Arkansas. The box was crushed on the outside and full of mashed, store-bought cookies and old Halloween candy on the inside.

8. Angela Kautzi, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education, said her boyfriend gave her a photograph of him and her together. The photo stretched out her face on purpose, she said, and made her look 20 pounds overweight.

9. "I got a door-knob cover from my mother — a Santa Claus door-knob cover," Angela Potter, freshman in arts and sciences, said.

10. "My mom got me a compass because I'm always getting lost," Dana Harding, junior in agricultural journalism, said.

11. "I got a miniature plastic Fisher Price golf set from my mom. I'm 24 years old," Mark Alber, junior in journalism and mass communications, said.

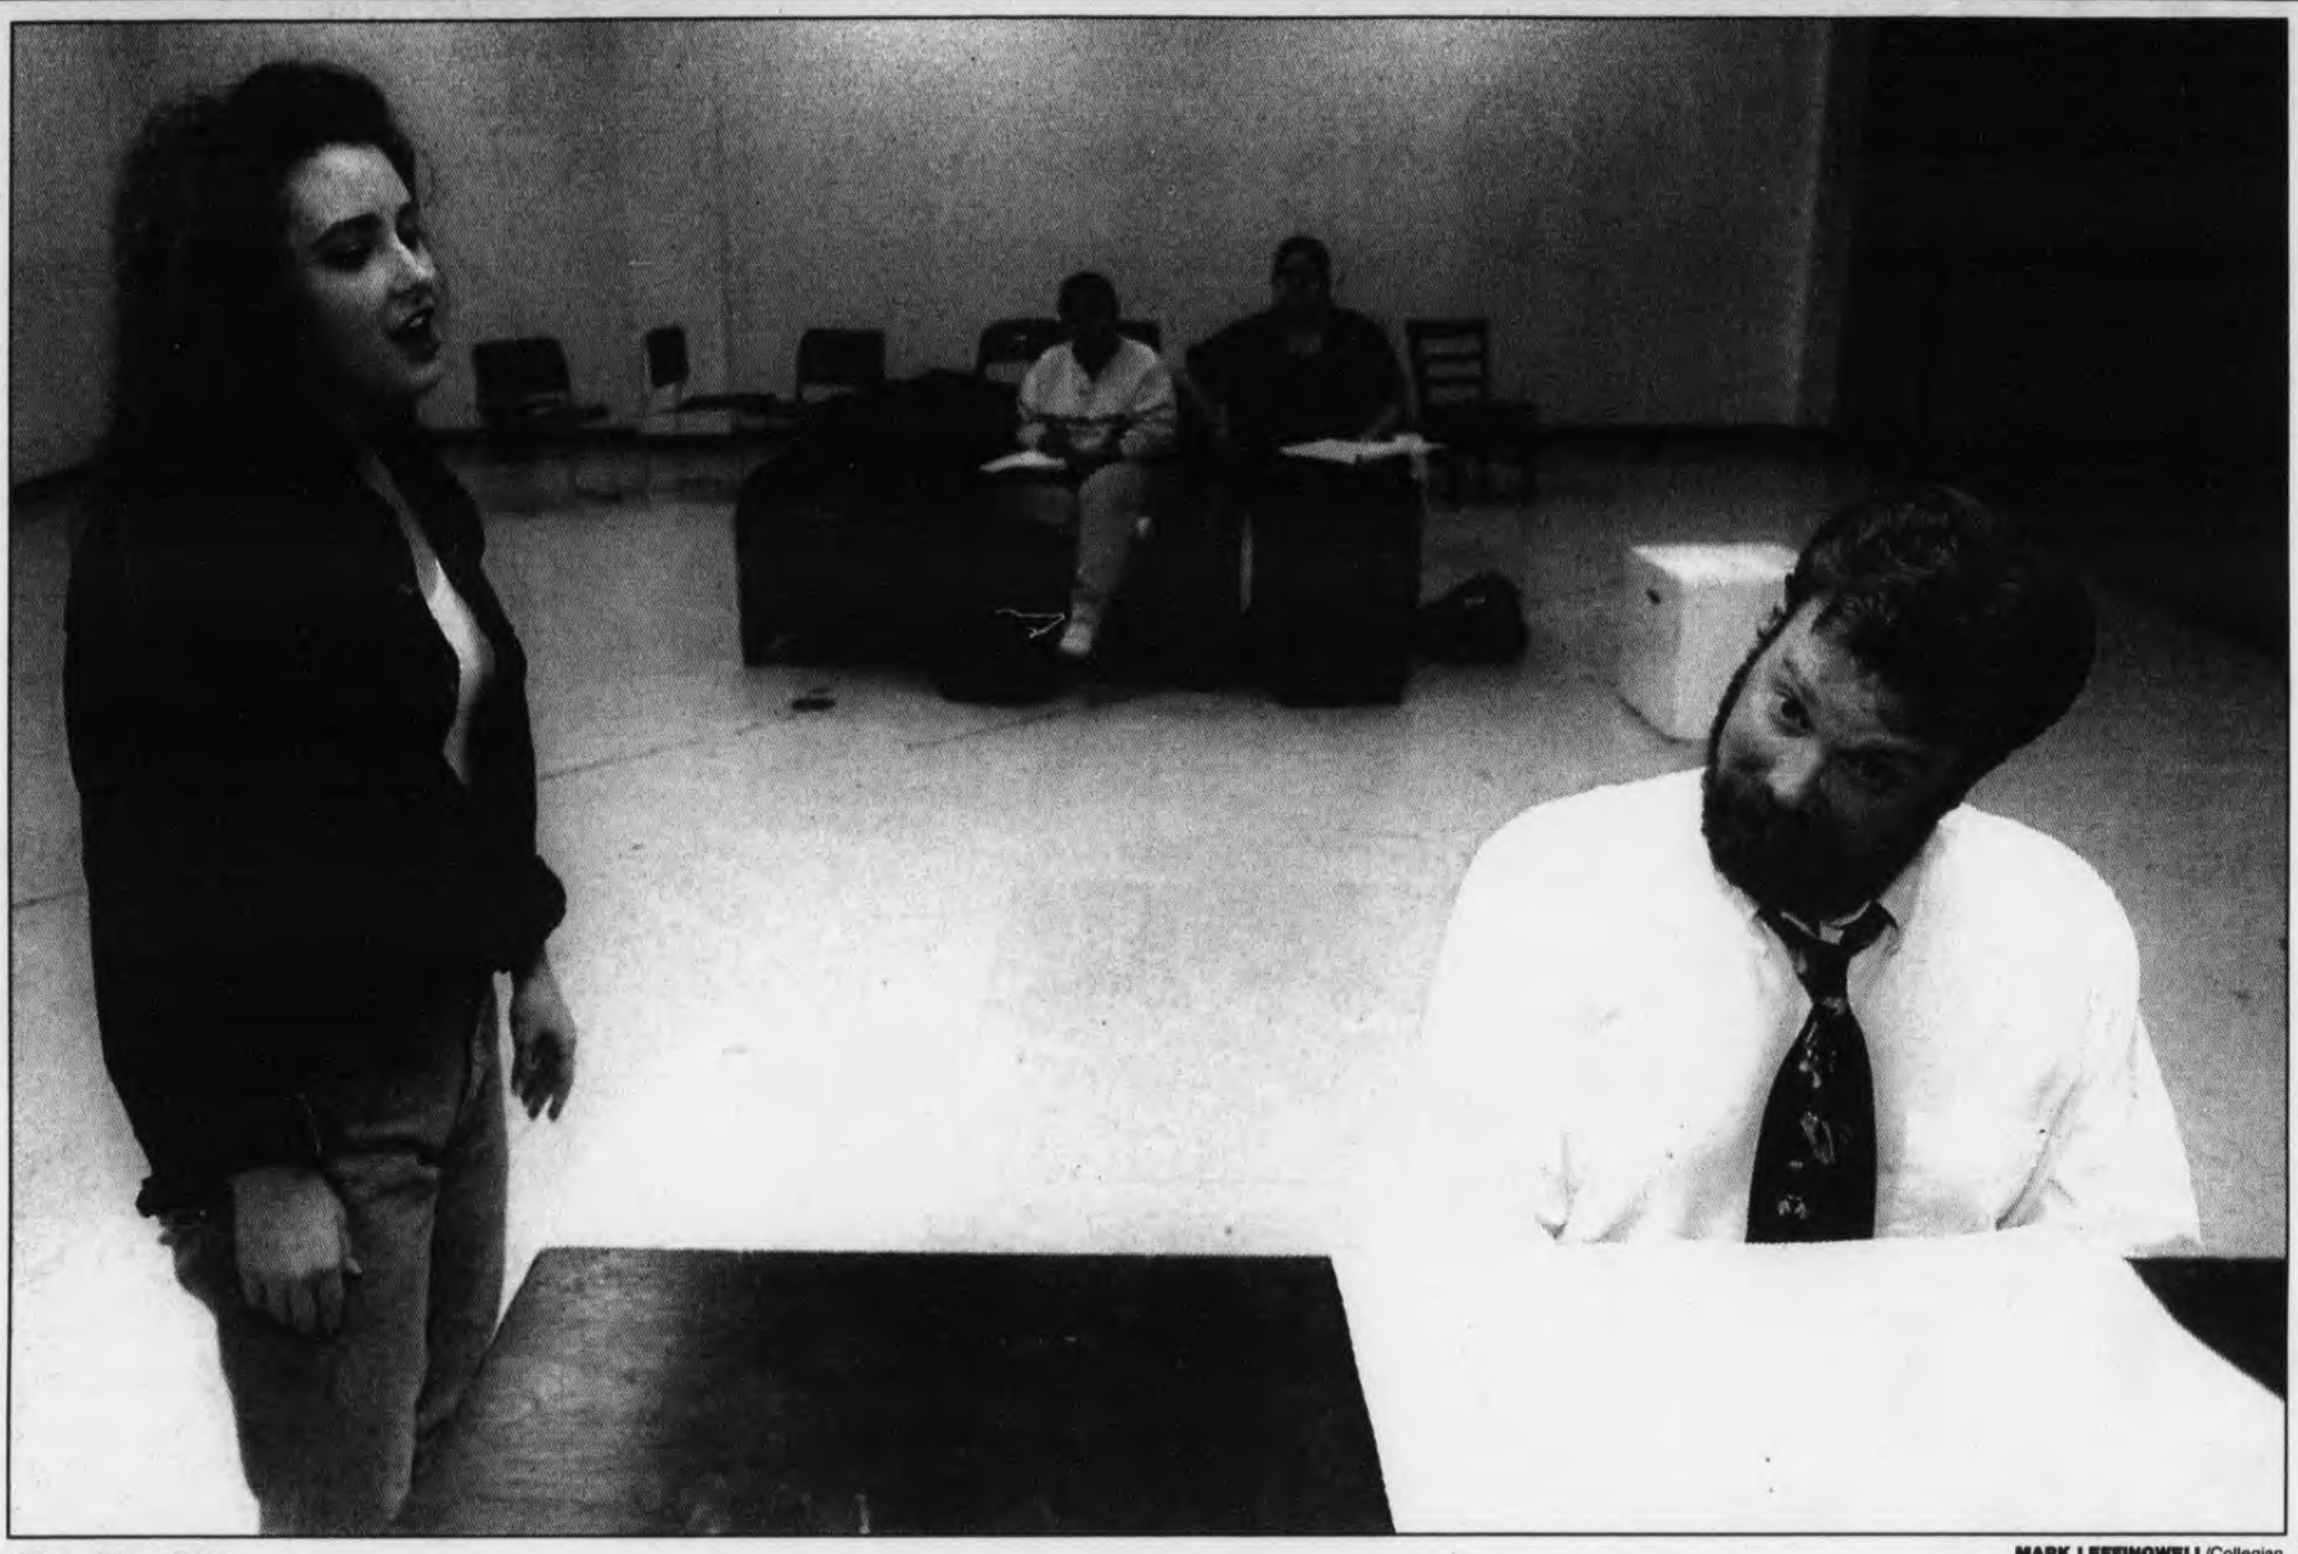
12. "I got a Barbie doll from my uncle, who still thinks that I'm a little girl," Myesha Pleasant, sophomore in industrial engineering, said.

13. "I got a tool box from my parents," Erica Duncan, sophomore in biology, said.

14. "I got a calender of the 365 stupidest things ever said from my aunt," Damon Dusin, sophomore in business administration, said.

15. "My sister gave me a candom. It's like a great big rubber you put over a beer can," Brent Barrett, senior in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

Giving eccentric types of gifts is not new. The tradition of gift-giving began in ancient Rome and northern Europe. People would give each other small gifts on a special winter day in celebration of the year coming to an end.



Back then it was probably an out-of-style toga or an edible loin cloth. Today it's the mustache trimmer for Aunt Bertha and a Barbie for little Chucky.

Nikola Maria Zytkow is a junior in print journalism and psychology.

ELECTIONS GUIDELINES CHANGES

Removal of the spending limits was not the only change made in the elections guidelines.

- Campaign materials must follow the guidelines of the Kansas State University Activities Board Sales, Solicitation and Advertising policy and Political Activity Guidelines. Otherwise materials will not be restricted in size.
- Posting that does not follow the guidelines will be removed by the candidate.
- Parties do not have to file expenditure reports. The amount of money donated to the party by a candidate must be reported on the candidate's individual expenditure report. All campaign materials used with party expenditures must have equal representation for each party member. All or no members must be represented on campaign material with the same typeset for all party members, such as font, size, color.
- Articles of clothing bought by the candidate must be reported as an expense. Articles of clothing bought by supporters are not required to be reported. The screen and the application charge for articles of clothing will be considered a campaign expense.
- Although the spending limits have been eliminated, the candidates must still file expenditure reports.

Veto can be overridden by Student Senate through," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said.

Peterson said that two years ago, student body presidential candidates were allowed to spend 100 percent of tuition. Last year, spending was cut back to 50 percent of tuition. The elections guidelines as passed would have no spending limit.

He said eliminating the spending limits could change the kind of student who wants to get involved in student government.

"Currently, KU is the only school in the state of Kansas that has no spending limits," Peterson said.

According to the constitution, Senate has two routes of action. Senators can move directly to a vote and try to override the veto, or they can discuss the new amendment, Finkeldei said.

"The amendment passed by only a few votes, so that's why we did what we did," Finkeldei said.

Observance week activities planned

There will be a panel discussion at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday in Bluemont 016, sponsored by the College of Education that will focus on King's deeds and contributions.

At 2 p.m., also on Tuesday in Union 212, a discussion of the legal significance of civil-rights legislation, will be presented by University attorneys Richard Seaton, Jennifer Kassebaum and Cheryl Strecker.

"We will be focusing on historic civil-rights acts since 1964, and particularly the civil-rights legislation that affects us in the campus community," Strecker said. "We also plan to reserve the last half for a question-and-answer period."

Barbara Baker, the founder of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, will also give a speech at 3 p.m. the same day titled "The Me Nobody Has Heard."

The highlight of Wednesday's activities will be a reception for Karen Martin, director of the minority engineering program, at 11 a.m. in the Union Cottonwood Room.

Martin is the 1994 recipient of the Conoco Presidential Award for Distinguished Services.

Tony Brown, host and executive producer of Tony Brown's Journal, the longest-running national black affairs television series, will be the keynote speaker for the Convocation Lecture at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

The lecture will be followed by the annual luncheon at 11:45 a.m. in the Union Ballroom. The guest lecturer will be Deborah Dandridge. She is a historian from the Center of African-American Studies at the University of Kansas.

Martin Luther King Jr. week has been observed in Manhattan since 1986, Switzer said.

"I encourage broad attendance from the Manhattan community and K-State students," Switzer said. "I look for people to enjoy themselves and to take advantage of the activities offered."

Escorts interview for jobs

Hall escort program, said the escorts are volunteers who go through an application and interview processes.

First, those who are interested in becoming an escort go to an informational meeting. After the meeting if they are still interested in applying, they fill out applications. The applications are then reviewed by the escort committee, and several applicants are chosen.

"We have some of the people who have used the escort service at the interview so they can tell us whether they feel comfortable with this person as an escort," Gebhardt said.

The committee does not do any background screening on the escorts because, in most cases, the members of the committee know the applicants, she said.

Remsburg estimated there are about 20 to 30 calls a week with requests for escorts.

"The idea is to maximize campus safety for a safer and better campus community," Bliss said.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

HOW TO KEEP PEOPLE'S HANDS OFF YOUR MONEY.

- Carry only enough cash to last the day. Anyone who tries to borrow your last five spot isn't a friend, anyway.
- Label your spare-change jar "beetle farm." Then, put your beetle farm in a jar labeled "spare change."
- Mark up every space on checks. Don't leave room for someone to fill in their name and extra zeros.
- Keep your wallet in your front pocket. It discourages pickpockets. So does wearing really tight pants.
- Put your picture on your credit card. A Citibank Photocard is tough for anyone else to use, unless they look just like you.

Budget proposes faculty salary increase

CORI CORNELISON

Gov. Bill Graves' state budget proposal for fiscal year 1996 includes increases in tuition and faculty salaries for state universities.

The budget, which was released Wednesday, includes a 3.5-percent faculty salary increase and a 7-percent tuition increase at K-State.

The increase in tuition is part of a self-funded enhancement program, which was requested by K-State, said Gloria Timmer, state budget director for Kansas.

The increase in tuition is in two parts. Five percent of the increase is directly for tuition, and the remaining 2 percent is for new instructional equipment, said Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for government relations at K-State.

President Jon Wefald said he is pleased with the governor's recommendation for K-State and other state universities for the next fiscal year.

"Because faculty salaries continue to remain as K-State's highest priority, we are pleased that the governor would recommend a 3.5-percent faculty salary increase," he said.

Wefald said he's happy that the governor chose to support an increase in funding for academic equipment and the regents' system-wide library access plan.

"All in all, we are very pleased with the governor's recommendations, especially in light of the governor's overall austere and lean budget recommendation for state government," he said.

Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said he thinks the 3.5-percent increase in faculty salary and the money that is being put back into the library is important, but said he doesn't think a tuition increase is necessary.

He said he is going to work with the Kansas Legislature to try to avoid a tuition increase but is happy with the proposal otherwise.

"So far, his budget is good for K-State and all the regents' schools," Finkeldei said.

"The trick is to get it approved by the Legislature."

Bar closing shocks jazz community

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

Manhattan might have lost its only microbrewery and a jazz spot.

Little Apple Brewing Co. closed down after New Year's Eve and might not reopen.

Since opening in the fall of 1993, Little Apple Brewing Co. offered a variety of beers, brewed on site, ranging from pale wheat lager to red ale and dark stouts.

In addition to micro-brewed beer and a full menu, Little Apple Brewing Co. began serving up live jazz each Monday night last fall by featuring local musicians.

Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies at K-State, said he was disappointed when he learned of the brewery's closing.

"There are a lot of people who are shocked and devastated. It's like losing a baby," Wilson said. "The Little Apple brewery provided a place for good quality jazz. It started a little niche."

Wilson said the community needs a place for live jazz. He said he was planning to organize performances at the brewery this spring until he found out about the closing.

Some teachers wonder if one class in the College of Engineering is up to the college's tough standards.

DEN 450, Impact of Engineering and Technology on Society, is not a required course for engineering majors, but it is often taken to fulfill a social science requirement.

Allen Cogley, professor of mechanical engineering, said DEN 450 has long been thought of by students as an easy A and a grade-point-average booster.

Cogley said he has heard from students that the class is easy and grades are mainly based on attendance.

"All I can say is that it's not a very intellectually rigorous class," he said.

According to a memo sent by Cogley to faculty in the Department

▶NOTE SPARKS TATON SUICIDE RUMORS

Just a few words scrawled on a piece of paper in Ross Taton's Goodnow Hall room sparked rumors of a possible suicide note.

"There was a piece of paper with a couple of words on it, but we can not confirm that it meant anything," Capt. Robert Mellgren of K-State police said.

In fact, the gossip kindled by a possible note showed how rumors can get out of hand, Mellgren said.

However, new information provided by the completed forensic analysis of items found in Taton's room is expected to be released today.

The evidence was transferred to the Kansas Bureau of Investigation in Topeka for a complete assessment.

▶ K-STATE ROTC HONORED AS BEST CADET UNIT WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI

K-State ROTC can add yet another honor to its award list.

The Order of the Founders and Patriots of America has honored K-State ROTC as the best ROTC cadet unit west of the Mississippi River.

K-State ROTC received the award in 1992.

It did not receive it in 1993, but has gone on to receive it again for its accomplishments in 1994, Maj. George Stelljes, professor of military science, said.

"That's quite an honor," Stelljes said. "We've gotten it two out of the last three years."

Stelljes said the outstanding cadet unit award will most likely be formally presented to the K-State ROTC unit at the military ball on March 3.

The process of applying for the award requires the commanding officer of each ROTC unit to propose, in writing, all of the things that unit has done in the past year.

OFPA Region 4, which includes every state west of the Mississippi River, is headquartered in Fort Lewis, Wash.

"It's really the most prestigious order anywhere in the country," said Glenwood Barker, OFPA chairman of the committee on awards.

"We proposed to the regions that they choose one outstanding cadet unit. We as the order do not make the selection. It's made entirely by the region," he said.

Only three of these awards are given out each year — one for each region.

What is now Region 4 used to be both Region 3 and 4, but the two have been consolidated into one region. There are two regions east of the Mississippi.

Stelljes said two criteria must be met to achieve the award. The ROTC unit must be successful overall in its students' academic endeavors.

The unit's performance at military science camp also is important.

"It's something these young ROTC cadets have accomplished over the past year. It's really an outstanding event for the students. They really have worked hard," Barker said.

■ In a cutline on page 10 of Wednesday's Collegian, Laird Veatch was misidentified as Kirby Hocutt.

■ In a story on page 1 of Wednesday's Collegian, the number for the escort service was incorrect. The correct number for the service is 395-SAFE. Also, the escort service is not available until Feb, 1. Until then, anyone needing an escort should call the front desks of the residence halls.

■ In the front-page story in Wednesday's Collegian on the recent burglaries of greek houses, Eric Stonestreet was misidentified as a senior in accounting. Stonestreet is a senior in sociology. The story reported police saw a man with a large sack jogging along the street and tackled him. It should have included that the police asked the man to stop, and the man took off running before he was corralled in the front lawn of the Pike house.

■ On page 2 of Thursday's Collegian, a police report said that at 9:48 p.m., Belinda Manis, 1360 Flint Hills, reported the aggravated assault, battery, and terrorist threats by Jason Manis, 1360 Flint Hills, and Andrew Jones, 2532 Brockman. There were no arrests made.

It should have said, at 9:48 p.m., Belinda Manis, 1360 Flint Hills Place, reported aggravated assault, battery and terroristic threats of Jason Manis, 1360 Flint Hills Place, and Andrew Jones, 2532 Brockman, by separate parties. No arrests were made.

■ In Thursday's Collegian, it was reported that Steve Kolander would be performing at TW Longhorn's tonight. Kolander is actually performing next Friday. The concert is free, but a ticket is needed to get in.

■ In Thursday's Martin Luther King Jr. precede, it was incorrectly reported that Tony Brown will speak at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday. Brown will actually speak at 10:30 a.m. Thursday. The luncheon will follow Thursday's lecture at 11:45.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

Police director Ronnie Grice thinks K-State is a safe campus

SARA SMITH
Collegian

K-State has been a breath of fresh air for K-State Police director Ronnie Grice.

Grice came to K-State in the beginning of fall 1994 from the University of Arkansas-Pine Bluff, which Grice said is a much smaller but more problematic university.

Although the semester began with the death of Ross Taton, a sophomore in engineering, in Goodnow Hall, Grice said he doesn't think K-State is a dangerous place to go to school.

"Look at the 130-year history of the school, and this is the first time this has ever happened."

Besides the Taton incident, Grice said he has seen very little violence here as compared with the University of Arkansas-Pine Bluff. He said he credits this to the nature of K-State's campus.

"K-State is still relatively quiet for a school of this size," Grice said. "I'm going to say that this death is an isolated incident."

Although the investigation into Taton's death is still ongoing, Grice said he believes the campus will not be drastically changed.

"Everything will probably remain about the same, with the students more aware of their own personal safety," he said.

Grice said his first day at K-State presented him one of the biggest problems he has had to tackle.

"I walked into work at nine in the morning and found out there had been a sexual assault at Smurthwaite the night before," Grice said.

So far, Grice said the main problems on campus have been automobile break-ins and other run-of-the-mill complaints.

Some new programs Grice wants to develop are expanding campus escort services, getting more security cameras and developing a service to help with the problem of domestic violence on campus. He is still waiting to see if he can get the funding.

"Our biggest challenge is to always stay proactive. I like to solve a problem before it happens," Grice said.

Grice also said he wants to implement students in more areas of the campus police by using them for more than just radio and dispatch control jobs.

He said he hopes to have students doing patrol jobs and communications work to help those who want to pursue a career in law enforcement.

We would like to use more student employees," he said.

Grice said he is concentrating on administrative work and that it was only possible for him to do this because of the staff he works with.

"It's just like being president. If you have good people in key positions, you can deal with more administrative things.

"I have good, sound, competent employees," he said.

When he first arrived, Grice was told the campus police had an image problem. One of his first goals was to improve that image, but he knew he couldn't do it himself.

Grice said he tried to stress police visibility as a way of improving relations.

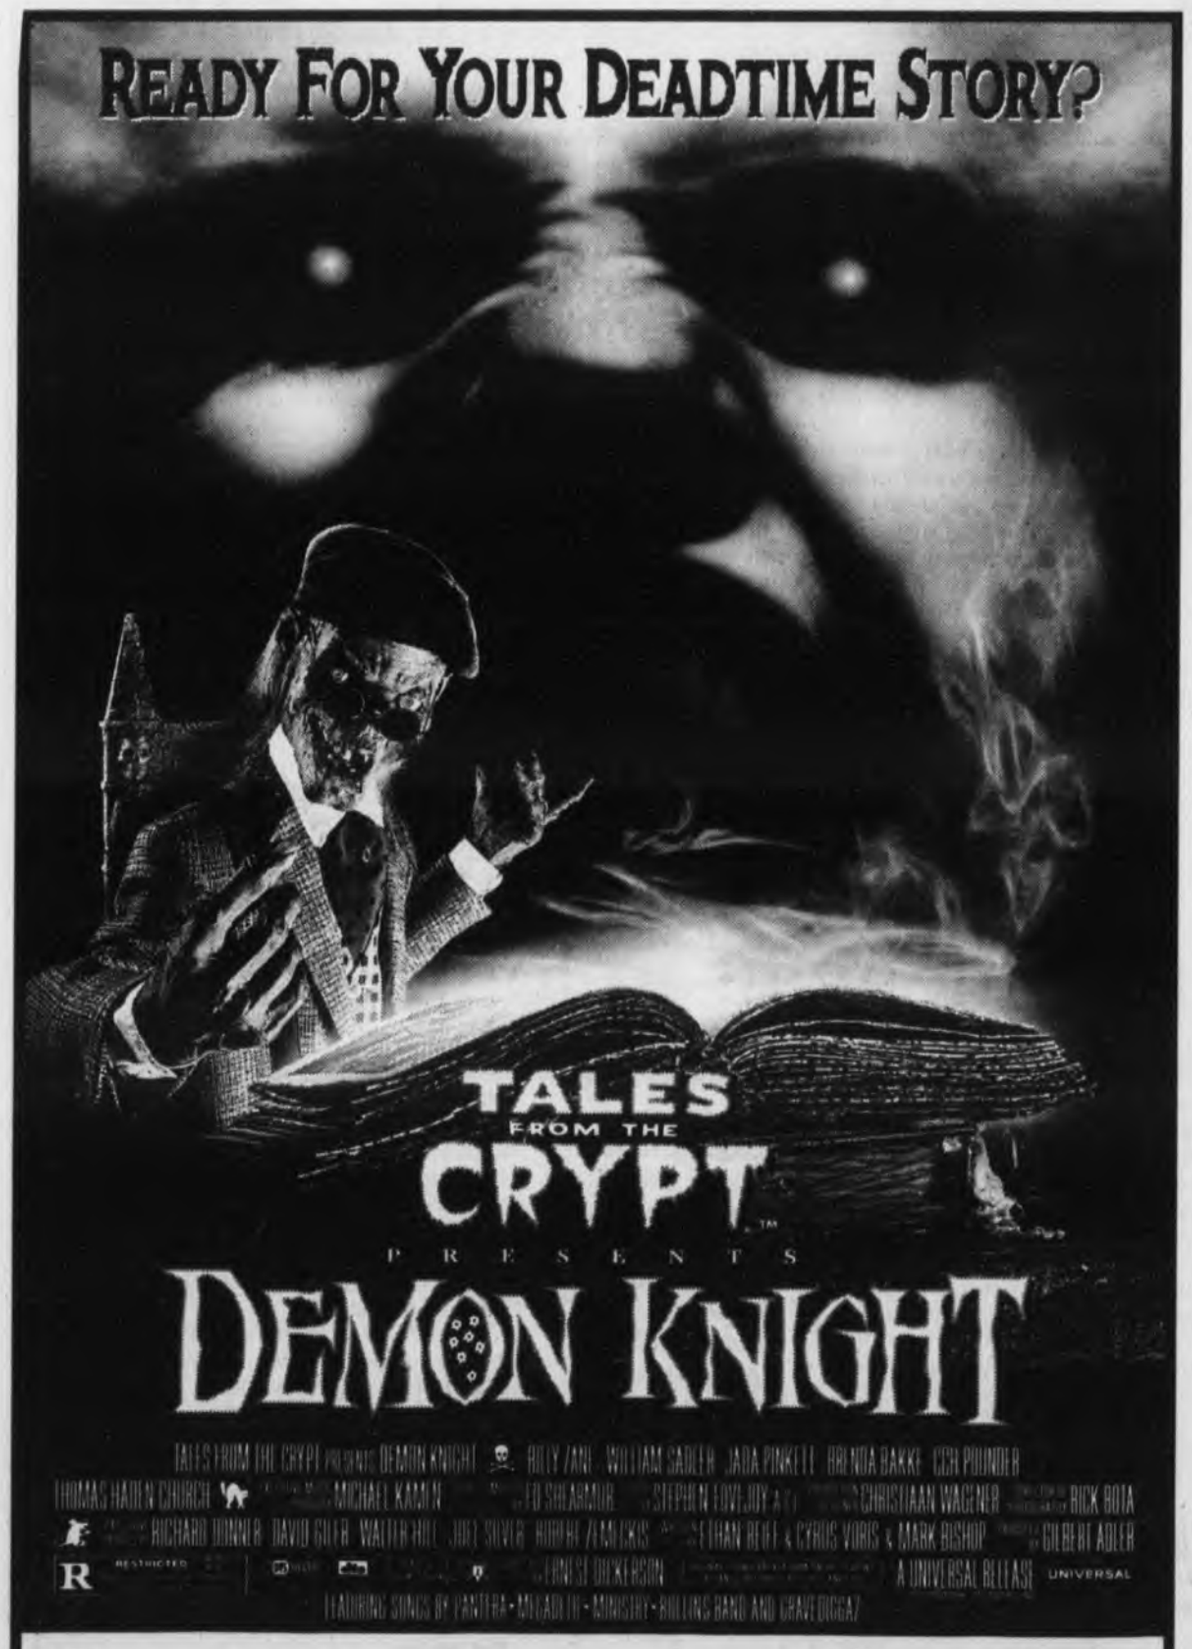
"That can be as simple as eating lunch in the Union with students," he said.

He also wanted to ensure that officers on patrol and everyone in the department offices performed professionally.

"Professionalism goes a long way. I tell my employees to be professional in whatever they do," Grice said.

"Can't have it any other way. As a matter of fact, I won't have it any other way."

Grice said it's impossible to please everyone, especially at such a large university.



"Sometimes it's also the students' responsibilities to have a good relationship with the people who serve and protect them."

With five different syllabi, six bus schedules and the constant life question of where the next meal is coming from, it's easy to get a little confused when it comes to details. That's why we've set up four convenient telephone combinations for you to choose from. For some info about these combos, give us a ring. We'll pay for the call. And for some more info about Call Return, read on.

call return

Call Return, always dreaded by prank callers, is another must-have for college students. This service does much more for you than call back the person who keeps calling and hanging up.

You come home from the grocery, arms full of Ramen and melting ice cream, and the phone is ringing. Four rings and the machine picks up. A whole lot of good that machine does when all it records is a dial tone. "I hate it when people don't leave messages." Then bust out a little Call Return and tell 'em about it. Let your emotions run wild. Let 'em have it for every bad thing that's happened today and then ask what they wanted when they called. It's a sure fire way to encourage people to leave messages!

College tuition is too expensive to skip class

Even though students pay thousands of dollars in tuition, they still skip classes and are happy when classes are cancelled.

College is one of the only places where some students are actually happy about getting less than their money's worth.

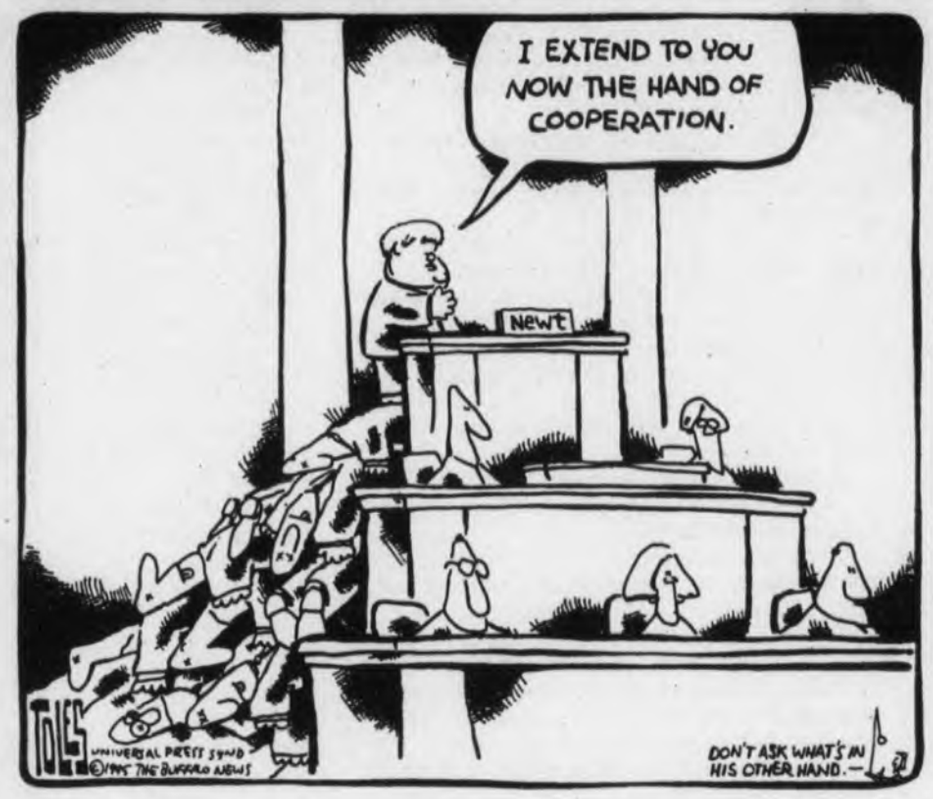
Even though students pay thousands of dollars in tuition, they still skip class and are happy when classes are cancelled.

If you went to the grocery store, paid for a loaf of bread and went home without the bread, in all likelihood, you would feel cheated.

Unfortunately, most students don't take their education as seriously as their groceries. Maybe it's because education and knowledge are intangible things.

The average student takes 12 credit hours a semester. For argument's sake, let's say that's four classes that meet three times a week.

For a student who pays in-state tuition, that adds up to $5.67 for each day of class. Out-of-state students pay $20.19 per class period.



Why is it when some students pay tuition, they are elated when the professor calls off a class? Why do they skip classes?

You have paid for that class. You are being cheated or are cheating yourself out of money if you do not go to class for one reason or another.

That usually doesn't affect students' decisions to skip class in lieu of laying out at Tuttle Creek.

Enjoy your $20 suntan.

Learning to love humanity can be accomplished in a few simple lessons

SARAH LUNDAY

Harry was waiting for me at the corner inside Eat's Cafe — on that cold and misty night in Amsterdam, it was nice to see the light on.

I didn't know Harry until stumbling into his cafe that night, but when I met him, I realized he had been a friend for life.

Harry has a unique philosophy. He feels all people are his friends until they prove themselves differently. With this philosophy, Harry changes people's lives on a daily basis. He waves at them from his shop windows and brings friendliness and warmth into their lives. He asks no questions except those you want to be asked, and he intently listens as if what you say is the very breath of life.

Oddly, everyone seems to know Harry. People wave at him, yell "hello" and make a special effort to come into the shop and chat. What makes Harry so special?

Harry loves human beings just as they are. He doesn't care about their material value or wealth. He doesn't even care what position they hold or if they are employed. Ideally, all of us say we are the same, but can others see that in our actions like I could in Harry's? That one-chance meeting with Harry in Amsterdam taught me something I can't learn in the finest courses — the value of life.

You see, for Harry, common ground with people is found on the basis of being human, not on profession or possessions.

There is a story of a British businessman who sat down in a pub for a drink. He began talking to the man next to him, and they found topics of interest for hours. At the end of the evening, the businessman turned to his new friend to shake hands and ask his employment. The friend replied that he was a truck driver, , and immediately the businessman blushed at his mistake for making an acquaintance with such a person.

This, unfortunately, is the attitude of the world. The truth is that society conforms us into believing that some people might be better than others in respect to power, money and education. This seemingly unintentional molding that takes place as we listen to lecturers, watch television and even look at billboards is often a not-so-unintentional effort by our peers.

"Already, educators are feeling the burden of dysfunctional families and poverty, and to counteract this we must show that love exists."

For example, studies show that an individual raised and accepted in an inner-city ghetto will likely avoid leaving that familiar environment, no matter how desperate the situation.

This is because of the acceptance and ideas given by close friends. Often if an individual chooses to abandon the situation, he or she will be ridiculed and rejected by those same friends.

But the real world, according to Harry, is a place where human value exists on the basis of love and compassion.

And somehow, the human race must trace back to where it lost its compassion and try to attain it again.

Harry suggests that we might begin with learning how to respect different cultures. A short jaunt around the world will inform any ignorant mind that other people exist and thrive in a variety of environments. People are different in actions, words and languages, but similar in their need for love.

Also, Harry said education in America must be upgraded. I am not talking about the college level. After all, anyone attending universities is required to take a curriculum of general electives.

Instead, we must focus on the younger and the many who will not have the opportunity to attend a university. Already, educators are feeling the burden of dysfunctional families and poverty, and to counteract this we must show that love exists.

This can be done through a general education program. Schools should introduce a broader understanding of other cultures and countries so they do not seem strange and inferior to ours.

Also, if possible, a variety of languages should be taught in all high schools. The fact that English is the predominant language in the world doesn't mean others are useless.

What would you call the radical ideas of Harry? Possibly the "Zen of Harry" or maybe the "Tao of Harry." No, Harry would just tell you it is love.

There are only a few Harrys left in this harsh, cruel world. Through realizing the need for love we can slowly create a generation of them. The fatal tragedy of war or holocaust should not happen again. The territory-related violence in Grozny and the injustice of human treatment in South America should not be tolerated.

These are warning signs from a generation hungry for love and acceptance. Where are the Harrys in this world?

▶ PHILOSOPHY BELONGS ELSEWHERE

Dear editor,

OK, John Hart, we're all impressed. Your mastery of 50-cent words and philosophical concepts is truly astounding. Maybe you'll get a date with it or something.

"You might just get to the point and say you want religion taught in school."

BRAD DEVADER
junior in history

For the rest of the campus who weeded through your rabble, you might just get to the point and say you want religion taught in school. Go figure — a blatant, Newt-lover, conservative Republican wants God and prayer in school.

This is an institution of higher learning, Mr. Hart, and introducing religious propaganda into the basic teaching concept makes about as much sense as allowing white supremacist rhetoric a voice.

Your God is your opinion, and just because most Americans believe in God does not mean we all do, and I do not want my class time contaminated with your kind of bias. If you want religion in class, take a theology course. Insignificant idea, Mr. Hart.

Paying tuition, fees results in usual amount of irritation; suggestions might improve tiresome wait in long lines

JEREMY STEPHENS

As I returned from my lovely Christmas break in the midst of the worst fog this side of London, I spent the time recollecting the experiences and adventures that I had participated in over this last vacation.

After recollecting, I have determined that there are three things, pieces of advice, and general comments that everyone should know.

Let me assure you that my Christmas break was much better than these pointers indicate. However, I thought they should be shared so that when you encounter these situations, you do not have to write a letter and wait for a reply from the Collegian's Dear Cassie advice column.

First, if Connie Chung ever asks you a question and promises not to tell anyone, don't tell her anything. Or better yet, ask her how her mother-in-law came up with the name Maury.

Secondly, if you aren't too fond of using airplanes as a means of transportation, do not be surprised to encounter a large patch of turbulence right after the pilot announces, "We've got clear skies all the way into Chicago."

Finally, if you are like me and detest waiting in lines to the point that you would rather spend more time driving around looking for shorter lines than simply waiting in the first line you come to, don't even think about taking ugly gifts back to stores on the day after Christmas.

Speaking of lines, I paid my fees earlier this week after waiting in one, while fully enjoying the fresh air, gentle breeze, and all 23 (this is only a rough estimate) on-location radio shows.

Please don't get me wrong, I must applaud those in charge of fee payment for organizing this difficult task.

Although some members of our campus community have proposed using other methods to pay fees, the current system will be better than any that have been proposed until the technology is available in enough areas to allow for electronic payment.

Doug Ackley, assistant controller for cashiering and student loans, said there is an effort being made now to move toward paying fees by mail, but this will not be accomplished before the 1997-98 school year.

The biggest reason for this is that currently, student loans are handled outside of the billings receivable system, and they need to be incorporated into the system before mail payment is possible. There are also not enough resources available at the present time to process payment by mail.

One drawback to paying by mail is that students must pay earlier than they do now. In exchange, however, class size can be determined earlier, and this will aid in improving the drop/add period.

However, there won't be a cold-turkey switch to the new system. For example, KU has had mail payment in place for a few years, but about 10,000 students still go through regular fee payment in the field house.

"Just be glad you were paying fees when the computer lost power rather than flying into Newark International Airport when the airport lost power."

Despite the horror stories, most K-State students don't spend that much time paying fees.

It takes less time to pay fees than it takes to lick an envelope and find a mailbox to put it in, and at the current rate of increase in the price of postage stamps, the day will come when the cost of sending in your tuition will be the same as tuition.

Because changing the way fees are paid is not a life-threatening issue, let us stop and think about how the current system works and how it could be improved.

In the final analysis, fee payment is simply the process of taking large amounts of money from lots of people as quickly as possible.

Because of this inescapable fact, I propose hiring politicians who lost their jobs last November but were very adept at raising taxes while in office.

This not only puts unemployed civil servants back to work, but their experience in finding ways to take more money from more people will make the lines go even faster.

Secondly, I think there should be first-aid personnel on hand to treat those who are knocked unconscious after being pelted by coupon books, newspapers and flyers.

In addition, dumpsters should be provided to dispose of the free gifts given out for applying for your very own Kleenex MasterCard.

In the current system, the three words heard more than any other words combined are "computers are down." There really isn't any way to correct this because according to Murphy's Law, everything that can go wrong will go wrong.

Just be glad you were paying fees when the computer lost power rather than flying into Newark International Airport when the airport lost power.

To paraphrase an old proverb, there are two things in life you can always be sure of: death and fees.

So the next time you pay fees, remember to secure your oxygen mask before assisting those around you and remain calm until the line starts moving backward.

SGA selling discount cards to raise money

Money raised to be used to make promotional video

SHELLY FOGLE
Collegian

Student Governing Association is selling discount cards to students for use at 15 Manhattan businesses.

Businesses participating in the program offer students a 10- to 20-percent discount of goods or services. The cards are good throughout the year.

The discount cards cost $3 and can be purchased at the SGA office.

SGA usually focuses on the fund-raising activities of other campus organizations, but this semester, SGA members are making their own money.

Liz Ring, vice-chair of Student Senate, said when campus organizations ask Senate for money, Senate always asks the groups if the organization has done any fundraising.

Although SGA asks other campus groups about fund-raising efforts, SGA has not conducted its own fund-raising activities.

"So we are not hypocrites, we are doing our own fundraiser," Ring said.

The money earned from selling the cards will be placed in a discretionary fund.

Some of the money will be spent making a promotional video of campus highlights. The video will be used during high-school seniors' campus visits.

Tim Kukula, chairperson of the Communications Committee, said all of the money used for the video will be taken from the profit earned from card sales. The video will be produced by local businesses.

The fund-raising project has already broken even on the cost of printing the 500 cards.

Clayton Wheeler, Senate chair, said, "We did the screening, printing and laminating of the cards on campus at low cost."

Copy Co. is one of the businesses participating in the discount-card offer.

"We try to support the campus organizations and work with the University just because it is K-State," Scott Boyd, manager of Copy Co., said.

It's Greek To Me also honors the discount card.

CARD INFO

The Student Governing Association discount cards can be purchased for $3 in the SGA office on the first floor of the K-State Union and can be used at 15 Manhattan businesses for 10- to 20-percent discounts.

Women's team slaughters Sacramento State

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

K-State notched its 10th win of the season Thursday with a 93-35 pounding of Sacramento State in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Cats posted their highest scoring total in their last 144 games, scorching the Hornets from the floor at 56-percent shooting.

K-State was paced by freshman Brit Jacobson with 19 points.

Jacobson didn't miss a shot in the second half, shooting seven of 10 for the game.

Shanele Stires added 18 points, nine of 12 from the field, and Andria Jones poured in all 15 of her points in the second half.

Jones didn't miss from the field in the second half, hitting seven of eight for the game and nailing a three-pointer, only the second of her career.

Despite the big numbers on offense, K-State's stifling defense was the story of the game.

The Cats stole the ball 13 times, contributing to Sac State's 26 turnovers.

The Cats allowed only three field goals and 13 total points in the second half, a Bramlage Coliseum record.

Sacramento State shot a dismal 27 percent from the field for the game.

The Hornets' 35-point total was the lowest by a K-State opponent since 1988, when the UMKC Kangaroos, in their first year under now-Wildcat coach Brian Agler, were defeated 54-35.

Sacramento State came in averaging 67.6 points per game.

The team's previous low was 53 points in a loss to Pacific.

"Sacramento State is a lot better team than they played tonight," Agler said. "They just didn't play real well.

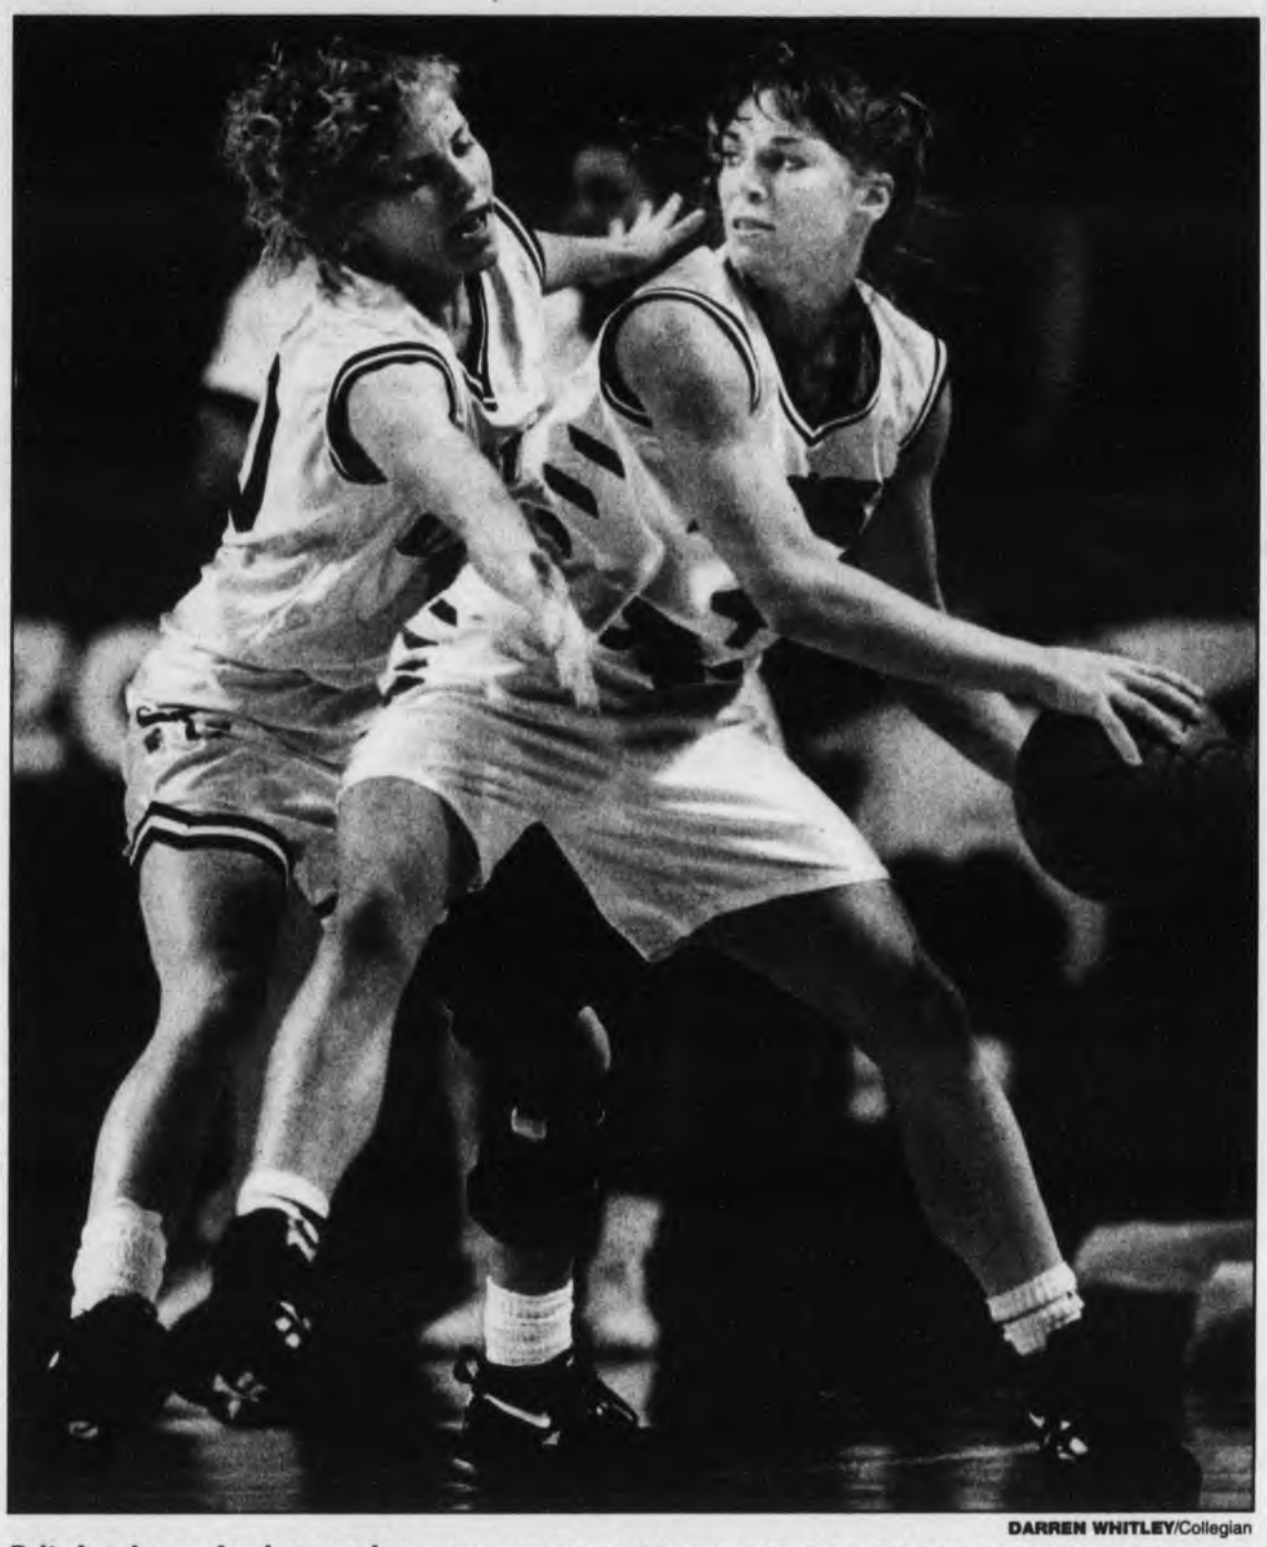
"They didn't shoot the ball very well, and they're a lot better basketball team than they played."

The Cats will take their 10-4 record, 2-0 in the Big Eight, on the road Sunday for a match-up with the 14th-ranked University of Kansas Jayhawks.

KU enters the game with a 12-2 record, 2-0 in the Big Eight, and hasn't lost a game since December 18.

Kansas is the highest ranked team the Wildcats have faced so far this year.

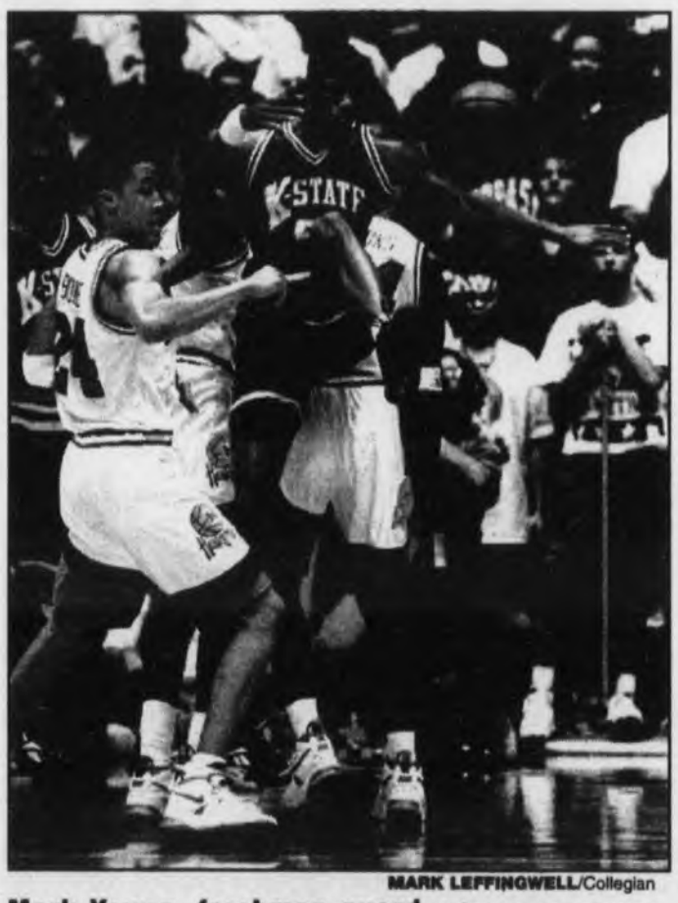
"We're going to have to play better than we did tonight," Jones said.



The Hawks are lead by senior guard and forward Angela Aycock.

Aycock is averaging 23.8 points and 5.9 rebounds per game.

Aycock was co-Big Eight Player of the Year last year, and she is a preseason choice for all-American.



Jacobson is likely to draw the defensive assignment on Aycock. Jacobson said she is looking forward to the challenge.

"I can't wait. ... That would be an honor. It would be a huge challenge, and I love challenges," Jacobson said.

LINCOLN, Neb. — Thursday's edition of the K-State basketball team was a faint shadow of the team that upset Oklahoma State last Saturday.

The Wildcats had the same players, the same look and the same coaches.

However, the end result wasn't the same. Nebraska pounded K-State 78-56 to even the Cats' Big Eight Conference record to 1-1 and bring their season record to 10-4.

"We ended up a step slow tonight," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "I thought that we were ready to play. We had a great practice yesterday. Evidently, we weren't ready.

"We just stunk tonight."

The key to the game was the first half, in which K-State shot just 18 percent from the field.

As a result, the Cats found themselves staring at an 18-point deficit by halftime — a deficit they never recovered from.

"You're not going to get a real psychological lift when you shot 17 percent," Asbury said. "We just didn't get it in the darn basket. You can't expect to beat anybody doing that. We had a lot of easy layups that we just couldn't convert."

Asbury's statement could be understood — the K-State front line of Belvis Noland, Demond Davis and Tyrone Davis combined for six out of 35 shooting for the game.

Another example: The Cats missed their last 19 out of 20 shots in the first half.

The Husker defense came on strong and blocked 11 shots for the game. Nine of those blocks came in the first half, and center Mikki Moore led the Huskers with six blocks.

"We didn't know where No. 32 (Moore) came from," Stanley Hamilton said. "He made us adjust our shots. We're going to have to go right up with it strong, instead of faking like we did tonight.

"We didn't expect them to be that tough. I thought that we could have taken inside more. I don't know where he came from."

Asbury said the Huskers' blocked shots affected the Cats' mentality.

"Maybe after the blocks, they started to doubt themselves," Asbury said. "We didn't expect them to that big of a force inside."

Husker coach Danny Nee said he was happy with his team's inside play.

"I'm very pleased about the win," Nee said. "We came out and did the things necessary to win.

"We played good defense and did the thing we had to win a Big Eight game."

Things didn't get too much better in the second half for the Cats.

After cutting the Husker lead to 14 with four points from Tyrone Davis, the Cats could never get closer.

The rout was on.

Part of Nebraska's 40-point bulge in the second half was due to forward Jaron Boone's 12 second-half points.

Boone led the Huskers with 19 points.

"We're still struggling a little bit," Boone said. "We're not running on four cylinders. Once we do get four cylinders, you better watch out. It's going to come like the plague.

"We're going to be a tough team to stop."

K-State next travels to Columbia, Mo., to face the Tigers on Saturday.

Wildcats fail big test against Nebraska's defense

LINCOLN, Neb. — Thursday's basketball match-up between K-State and Nebraska seemed more like a case study.

The question?

If the Wildcats shoot mostly from the outside while the Cornhuskers go to the inside, which team is likely to win?

The conclusion: Inside shooting good. Outside shooting bad. Nebraska 78, K-State 56.

Most of the evidence occurred in the first period, where nine of the Huskers' 13 field goals were made in the paint.

Meanwhile, the Wildcats sought to stay close by firing away from long range. Five of their seven successful shots came from three-point range.

"Our game plan was to keep them on the perimeter and make them shoot perimeter shots," said Nebraska's Erick Strickland, who scored 18 points. "The first half really helped. We felt we could go inside."

But a few variables also aided Nebraska, as the Huskers jumped out to 38-20 halftime advantage. It appears the case study might have a glitch.

Some first-half statistics:

■ K-State shot just 18 percent from the field in the first half and collected a mere two field goals in the final 10-1/2 minutes. The Cats missed 19 of 20 shots inside.

"We just couldn't get the ball in the basket," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "We're not a great offensive team, but we have to be better than that."

The Cornhuskers shot 50 percent from the field.

■ During the Wildcats' scoring debacle, the Cornhuskers stretched a 21-17 lead by engineering a 17-3 run in the last 10:05 of the first stanza.

■ Maybe K-State would have gone inside if they could have — Nebraska blocked nine shots, including five from Mikki Moore.

"We made Moore look like Olajuwon," Asbury said.

Moore said the Husker coaches told him to anticipate the shot.

Did the Wildcats try any head fakes?

"Not until the second half," Moore said.

■ The Cats were denied most of their chances to redeem missed shots — the Huskers out-rebounded them 23-10 when K-State took a shot.

K-State was unable to gain ground in the second half, although the Wildcats did shoot better at 37 percent.

Nebraska improved to 1-1 in the league and 13-3 overall.

"I think Kansas State really struggled shooting the basketball, but I think it was a combination of that and good defense on our part," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said.

Elliot Hatcher was the only consistent shooter for K-State, leading the team with 13 points and 50-percent shooting. The Wildcats other four starters — Demond Davis, Mark Young, Tyrone Davis and Kevin Lewis — combined for six of 27 shooting from the floor.

"We missed a lot of layups. I can't explain," Hatcher said. "You'd have to ask our big men. Once I get it inside to them, I can't shoot it for them."

K-State, 1-1 in the Big Eight Conference and 10-4 overall, travels to Missouri on Saturday and to Kansas next Wednesday.

Students get opportunity to build, showcase robots

JOE KLEIDOSTY

A PBS special and some information on the Internet helped a K-State student develop a robot contest at the University.

The PBS special was about a robot contest at MIT, Jon Freise, a continuing student, said.

He decided to try the idea at K-State.

"I saw that it was at MIT, and I basically transplanted that program here," Freise said.

EECE 609D: Mobile Robotics, a two-credit-hour course, is offered to all engineering and computer science students during the spring semester.

The class gives students an opportunity to build robots and present their final project during the College of Engineering's open house robot contest on March 31 and April 1.

One of the selling points of the class is that there are no prerequisites, said Chris Hunt, graduate student in electrical engineering.

"Any engineering major can sign up for the class," he said.

Freise and other students developed the contest.

"It was pretty much left to us, the students, to organize it, and we did," Freise said.

"To whatever extent possible, the students are doing this," said Jim DeVault, associate professor in electrical and computer engineering and co-coordinator of the robotics class.

DeVault said that he and another staff member conduct the lectures because much of the information is new.

"In the future, hopefully this will be a student-run event," DeVault said. "Faculty will just be advisers."

Some of the students enrolled in the course have had no prior experience with electronics.

Freshmen are encouraged to enroll in the course.

"A lot of them have never picked up an electronic," Freise said. "In fact, MIT has a history of having their freshmen take and win their contest."

The course is split into two five-week sections.

Soldering and building is taught during the first five weeks, and programming is taught during the last five weeks, Freise said.

"My intention for the whole thing, when it got started, was to give the students some hands-on experience on programming and electronics," Freise said.

Freise said the expenses for the robot contest, which is in its third year, have been funded by sponsors, such as Motorola, and by robot kit fees.

"They (Motorola) supplied us with a huge amount of electronics — a couple hundred dollars worth," Freise said.

The robot kits, which include tires, motors, parts and wire, cost the students $120.

A course book and a manual concerning the assembly of the robots is also required for the course.

A student in last year's contest was quite creative in his design, Freise said.

"He built the body out of a custom graphite epoxy. He put a stainless steel shell on it and painted it jet black," Freise said. "It was called the Black Widow."

Some past events in the previous contests include sumo wrestling and line racing.

Different events are being planned for this year's contest, Freise said.

"We're planning a maze contest — the fastest through a maze. We're also planning a robotic hockey," Freise said. "But all those are still up in the air."

Certificates for first, second and third place are given to the participants, DeVault said.

"If we find someone to donate prizes, we might do that," DeVault said.

Hunt said that besides being fun, the course is an opportunity for mechanical and electrical engineering and computer science majors to work together on a project.

"It's good practical experience," Hunt said.

SGA buys tests for 270 students with fee overcharge

CARRIE LININ

Student Governing Association has purchased about 270 AIDS tests for free student AIDS testing at Lafene.

"Lafene cut the administrative costs of the AIDS tests and gave us them for $14 instead of the normal $28 that they are regularly priced," Clayton Wheeler, Student Senate chair, said.

Those cuts allowed SGA to purchase more tests for use by students.

When the funds are depleted, the price goes back up to $28 per test, Wheeler said.

All students are eligible on a first-come, first-served basis, he said.

"Free testing will begin on the first day of class and will continue until the funds are gone," said Lannie Zweimiller, administration director of Lafene Health Center.

Students will have counseling before and after being tested, Zweimiller said.

All testing is confidential and might require up to two weeks for the results.

Senate decided to buy AIDS tests with the 50 cents in fees that students were overcharged last semester.

"The $17,000 collected was divided in two ways. $3,800 was given to Lafene Health Center for the AIDS tests. The rest was allocated to Access the Future, which is the process of keeping open admissions and tuition low," Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president, said.

A series of forums were conducted last semester to decide the fate of the money that was overcharged.

Many students also called in their suggestions to the SGA office on how the money could be spent, Nabeeha Kazi, public relations director for SGA, said.

The decision on how to spend the money was made in December.

"The Student Governing Association was required to make a decision before the fall semester was over so the money could be spent in the spring," Kazi said.

"Although the number of HIV tests available will only cover about 270 students, I hope that this provides an incentive for all K-State students to push for the adoption of some sort of policy which would guarantee each student one free HIV test per year," she said.

Instructor: Students deserve grades of Mechanical Engineering, he obtained information about the grades given in the class from fall 1992 through spring 1994.

During the four-semester span, 814 students took the class. Ninety-two percent of those student received an A.

Karen Martin, director of minority engineering programs, said she feels the numbers indicate that the course's instructor is a good teacher.

"I do believe that it's a fair course and that the teacher is a good one, but what is learned depends on what the student wants to learn," she said.

Tom Roberts, associate dean of the College of Engineering, said he doesn't think the number of students receiving high grades is bad.

"The College of Engineering as a collective group is normally a pretty good and intelligent group of students," Roberts said.

Cogley said he has spoken to Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, about removing or restructuring the course, but so far nothing has been done.

"In my opinion, the course is not of adequate standard for the College of Engineering or K-State," Cogley said.

James Koelliker, professor of civil engineering, said he has heard students and teachers comment that the class' standards were easy.

"I can't really judge, because I never sat in the class, but I do know that around campus there is rumor that if you play by the rules, you will be rewarded with an A," he said.

Koelliker also said that like all classes, DEN 450 is based on how much the student is willing to learn.

Kurtis Walter, senior in industrial engineering, took the class and said it is known throughout the College of Engineering as an easy A.

"It's definitely a GPA booster. It's mainly a class where attendance is the main thing," he said.

Walter also said he went into the class wanting to learn something and not just for the A.

"I thought it was pretty interesting, but if you're taking it just for the A, you probably won't get anything out of it," he said.

Rathbone said the course is not in need of any reform.

"It serves a purpose in the fact that it is an overview course, and it is important to have those kinds of courses," he said.

Donnert said he feels the students who take the class and fulfill the requirements get much out of the class.

"I have no interest in giving bad grades if they meet the class requirements," he said.

Micro-brewery won't reopen

A sign on the front door of the brewery said the Little Apple would be closed for the month of January. Employees, some of whom found out after returning from vacation, said they knew of no plans for the brewery to reopen.

Co-owner Andy Allison said the brewery had no prepared statement when asked when the brewery might reopen. The other co-owners could not be reached for comment.

If Little Apple Brewing Co. remains closed, jazz fans will be searching for a new spot for live entertainment. Harry's Uptown and Auntie Mae's Parlor might be possible alternativse.

Local jazz duo Seven performed at the Little Apple Brewing Co. and at Auntie Mae's last semester. In the spring, Seven will continue to play at Auntie Mae's on Wednesday nights with no cover charge.

The Kansas State University Jazz Festival will take place Feb. 3-4 on the K-State campus.

One of the highlights will be a performance by the New York group Smithsonian Jazz Masters at 8 p.m. Feb. 3 in McCain Auditorium. Tickets will be $10 for students, $18 for seniors and $20 for adults.

Other festival events include a historical lecture about Duke Ellington, a jazz faculty quintet performance, student clinics for high-school musicians and a performance by the KSU Concert Jazz Ensemble.

Smatterings

BY ANDREW TOMB

Compiled from Collegian staff and Associated Press reports

Smatterings. You can't live without them, and you can't stop me from writing them.

While they may start from Associated Press or Collegian staff reports, they are usually somewhat more than the plain truth. Thus, in the words of the Weekly World News, "The reader should suspend belief for the sake of entertainment."

Enjoy.

A hardy Smatterings welcome to ol' Fred

It wouldn't be Smatterings without our old buddy Fred "Liberace" Phelps.

It looks like Topekan Jeff A. Hoobler is suing the Westboro Baptist Church, claiming he was tackled and injured by picketers from the church. He filed a civil lawsuit Monday in Shawnee County District Court.

Hoobler said he was jogging on a sidewalk on Dec. 17 when he encountered Westboro picketers. A picketer yelled an epithet at Hoobler and began to chase him, and another picketer approached Hoobler, according to court records. Hoobler said he was struck by a sign, and several picketers tackled him to the sidewalk, where he was punched and kicked.

We here at Smatterings think that switching from harassment of gays to harassment of joggers is a positive step for the Fredster and his family.

Personally, I can't wait until he protests the 1996 Summer Olympics in Atlanta with classic Phelps signage like "God Hates Spandex" and "Three Minute Mile = Sodomy."

Run Fred, run.

Who cares what a hectare is anyway?

What's the difference between a meter and a yard? Millions of dollars when it comes to the cost of federal construction projects, a senator said.

Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., is seeking a two-year moratorium on requirements that architects and contractors use metric instead of traditional English measurements in constructing government buildings. Dorgan claims the requirement could add 10 to 15 percent to the cost of building a new courthouse in Fargo, N.D.

"There's no reason to build the courthouse in Fargo using metric measurements. This makes no sense," Dorgan said.

Of course, no one told the senator the savings were measured in metric dollars.

"What the hell are these metric dollars?" the dumbfounded senator asked.

Surprisingly, the formula is the same as Lloyd Bensten's formula for converting tax revenue into printed cash — you just double it and add 5 million.

You eat one more pork rind, and I will throw yer ass in jail

A 500-pound Wichita man facing prison for breaking his court-ordered diet has been ordered to a halfway house.

Sedgwick County District Judge Clark Owens decided Tuesday against sending 44-year-old Arthur Younkin to prison.

But as part of his order continuing Younkin's 1991 probation for forging checks, the judge ordered the man to keep dieting.

In 1991, Younkin claimed he couldn't pay $11,000 in restitution because his weight kept him from getting a job.

Owens placed Younkin on a 1,200-calorie-a-day diet. Younkin lost 60 pounds, was released from a halfway house and got a job.

Representatives of two tabloid TV shows and a German TV network attended Tuesday's hearing.

It appears that Younkin's plight is very important to German citizens — the televised hearings are preferred 2-1 over the O.J. hearings.

I guess we lied about not mentioning O.J.

Avoiding police, preventing theft and keeping everyone happy are all essential to a good

HOUSE PARTY

STORIES BY NOLAN SCHRAMM • ART BY BILL KRAAI

After three tough days of classes, a few students will probably throw parties this weekend. But along with throwing a party come some basic responsibilities.

Avoiding trouble with the police is of prime importance. This can be accomplished by taking steps to prevent violence, theft and damage.

Dale Silvius, former president of the Beer Drinker's Society, has been responsible for organizing a number of parties over the past few years.

The Beer Drinker's Society was never officially recognized by the University. Nevertheless, Beta Delta Sigma had about 200 members at its peak.

Attendance at the society's frequent parties was always stellar, and each party had at least 100 people in attendance, sated by two or three kegs.

Most people who came found out about the parties by word of mouth, Silvius, senior in management, said.

"This one big party we had a few years ago — we had around 20 kegs," he said. "It was right above Dean Liquor, and Domino's sold us pizza from their back door. It was crazy."

During that particular bash, the music wasn't very loud, and the back yard was fenced off, so there wasn't much trouble with the police, Silvius said.

"It used to be we'd call the cops to file a noise permit, but later we figured out that it only tipped the cops off to where our parties were held," he said.

Upset neighbors can also tip the local police off to parties. But Freda Budke, junior in preprofessional elementary education, said there is one sure-fire way to appease the neighbors — ask them to join in on the carousing.

"We figured if we invited our neighbors, there wouldn't be a problem," she said.

Keeping law enforcement away from the festivities is one thing. Another concern for party hosts is keeping personal belongings from being stolen.

"People who get drunk tend to get sticky fingers," Silvius said.

Budke said the best way to prevent theft and damage to personal property is by preparation.

"Most of it is shutting doors, so no one would get in my bedroom, and also moving things so they wouldn't get demolished," she said.

Because alcohol isn't cheap, big parties need to have some kind of financial backing and capital in order to buy and reserve kegs.

The obvious question follows: How much should the host charge guests for the beer?

Kurt Olenbush, sophomore in business accounting, said he just tries to break even when he has a party.

"I'm not running a business. If a lot of people have a good time, I don't care if I make a profit or break even," he said.

Silvius said he agreed on this point.

"Breaking even was making a profit. We threw the parties to be with friends and to have a good time," he said.

And while good, old-fashioned common sense is needed in order to stay out of trouble when having a party, Silvius highlights another important factor in celebrating and avoiding trouble.

"Most of the time, we avoided catastrophe by good luck," he said.

Forget surfing — drink on the Internet

Forget how to make a Long Island ice tea? A black Russian? A head shrinker?

No problem. If you have access to the Internet, you can be your own bartender.

A new on-line service provided by the Aristocats of Stanford University shows you the recipes for 72 drinks, as well as a drink of the week.

If you have a drink worth submitting to the "Ultimate Bar Guide," you can do it via e-mail.

One section titled "Vino Tinto Espanol" provides an excellent reference list for wine.

"No other wine can compete with its deep red color, its easy-to-open metal 'cork,' its 'bouquet' and its PRICE," according to the Aristocats. "As we say, never leave home without one (or two for a real good time)."

Clicking on certain icons will provide background information on each of the Aristocats' founding members.

Some of the history of the club is in Swedish, so you might as well skip it until it is translated into your primary language. (They are promising this will happen soon.)

Another section of the service provides a short course on how to start your own bar with as little effort as possible.

Video clips will soon be available for the visually oriented bartender, and the Aristocats call it "a step-by-step introduction to bartending using real professionals."

There is even a section that cross-references other Internet information on alcoholic beverages.

One in particular is the tequila home page, which elaborates on the variety of drinks.

Also in the references is an alphabetical list of mixed drinks.

One goal of the organization is to educate people who are interested in making and drinking wine, cocktails and long drinks.

As students who pay more than $1,000 per semester to go to school at this University, aspiring bartenders at K-State are entitled to use their privileged Internet access to obtain information on a variety of topics.

If you don't have an account yet and would like to see what the Internet can offer as far as different ways to pickle your liver, you can go to Computing and Network Services in Nichols Hall.

It takes less time than walking to the library, and you don't have to worry about overdue fines.

By the way, you've already paid for it.

Daughter of Malcolm X indicted in murder plot

Qubilah Shabazz charged with trying to kill Farrakhan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — A daughter of Malcolm X was charged Thursday with trying to hire a hit man to kill Louis Farrakhan, the Nation of Islam leader who Malcolm's family says had a hand in his 1965 assassination.

Qubilah Shabazz, who witnessed her father's murder at the age of 4, was accused of using the telephone and crossing state lines in trying to set up Farrakhan's slaying by an unidentified government informant.

If convicted, the 34-year-old woman could get up to 90 years in prison and $2.25 million in fines.

Authorities said the plot against Farrakhan didn't get past the planning stages, and he was never in any immediate danger.

Details of how he was to be killed were not disclosed.

Farrakhan, who lives in Chicago, couldn't immediately be reached for comment. The Nation of Islam scheduled a news conference for Friday. Shabazz appeared in court for a brief hearing Thursday and was released on $10,000 bail. Prosecutors refused to give a motive for the alleged plot against the 61-year-old Farrakhan.

But Shabazz's court-appointed lawyer, Scott Tilsen, said he expected the government to argue that Shabazz believed Farrakhan was involved in her father's murder.

Members of Malcolm X's family have long suspected that Farrakhan had a hand in the assassination of the Black Muslim in the Audubon Ballroom in New York City's Harlem. Malcolm X was shot to death on Feb. 21, 1965, as he gave a speech to followers.

A year after Malcolm X's slaying, three men were convicted in the murder. Two were Nation of Islam members. The three were sentenced to at least 20 years in prison. At least two have since been paroled.

Malcolm X's widow, Betty Shabazz, said as recently as last year that she believes Farrakhan was involved. Tilsen said Qubilah Shabazz was entrapped by the man who was supposed to assassinate Farrakhan. He said the man was a childhood friend of Shabazz's now working for the government.

"This case is about him enticing, luring and seducing her into the plot," Tilsen said. "Her friendship and trust in him was used."

U.S. Attorney David Lillehaug said that the man who was supposed to carry out the murder has cooperated with investigators and will be a witness. Prosecutors do not believe he is a member of the Nation of Islam.

Neither Tilsen nor Lillehaug would identify the man.

The indictment follows a seven-month FBI investigation of Shabazz, who moved to Minneapolis in September. She is formerly of New York City. She surrendered on Thursday.

According to the indictment, Shabazz made eight phone calls in July and August while living in New York to the man who was supposed to kill Farrakhan and gave him a partial payment after moving to Minnesota in September. Prosecutors said the man was living in Minnesota at the time.

According to the indictment the killing was to occur in Illinois.

Malcolm X had been the voice of the Nation of Islam under Elijah Muhammad but was exiled from the group in 1963. He subsequently came under verbal attack from other members, including Farrakhan, who was chief minister of the Nation's Boston mosque at the time.

Farrakhan, who was recruited into the Nation by Malcolm X, wrote in the Dec. 4, 1964, issue of Muhammad Speaks, the organization's newspaper: "The die is set and Malcolm shall not escape. ... Such a man is worthy of death."

More recently, Farrakhan has said attempts to link him to the assassination are part of a continual conspiracy to discredit black leaders. In an interview last year, he acknowledged he helped create "the atmosphere" that encouraged others to kill Malcolm X.

The Nation of Islam, often known as the Black Muslims, espouses a mixture of Islamic theology, economic independence, self-help and black separatism.

Once an outspoken separatist who referred to white people as "blue-eyed devils," Malcolm X broke from the organization a year before his assassination.

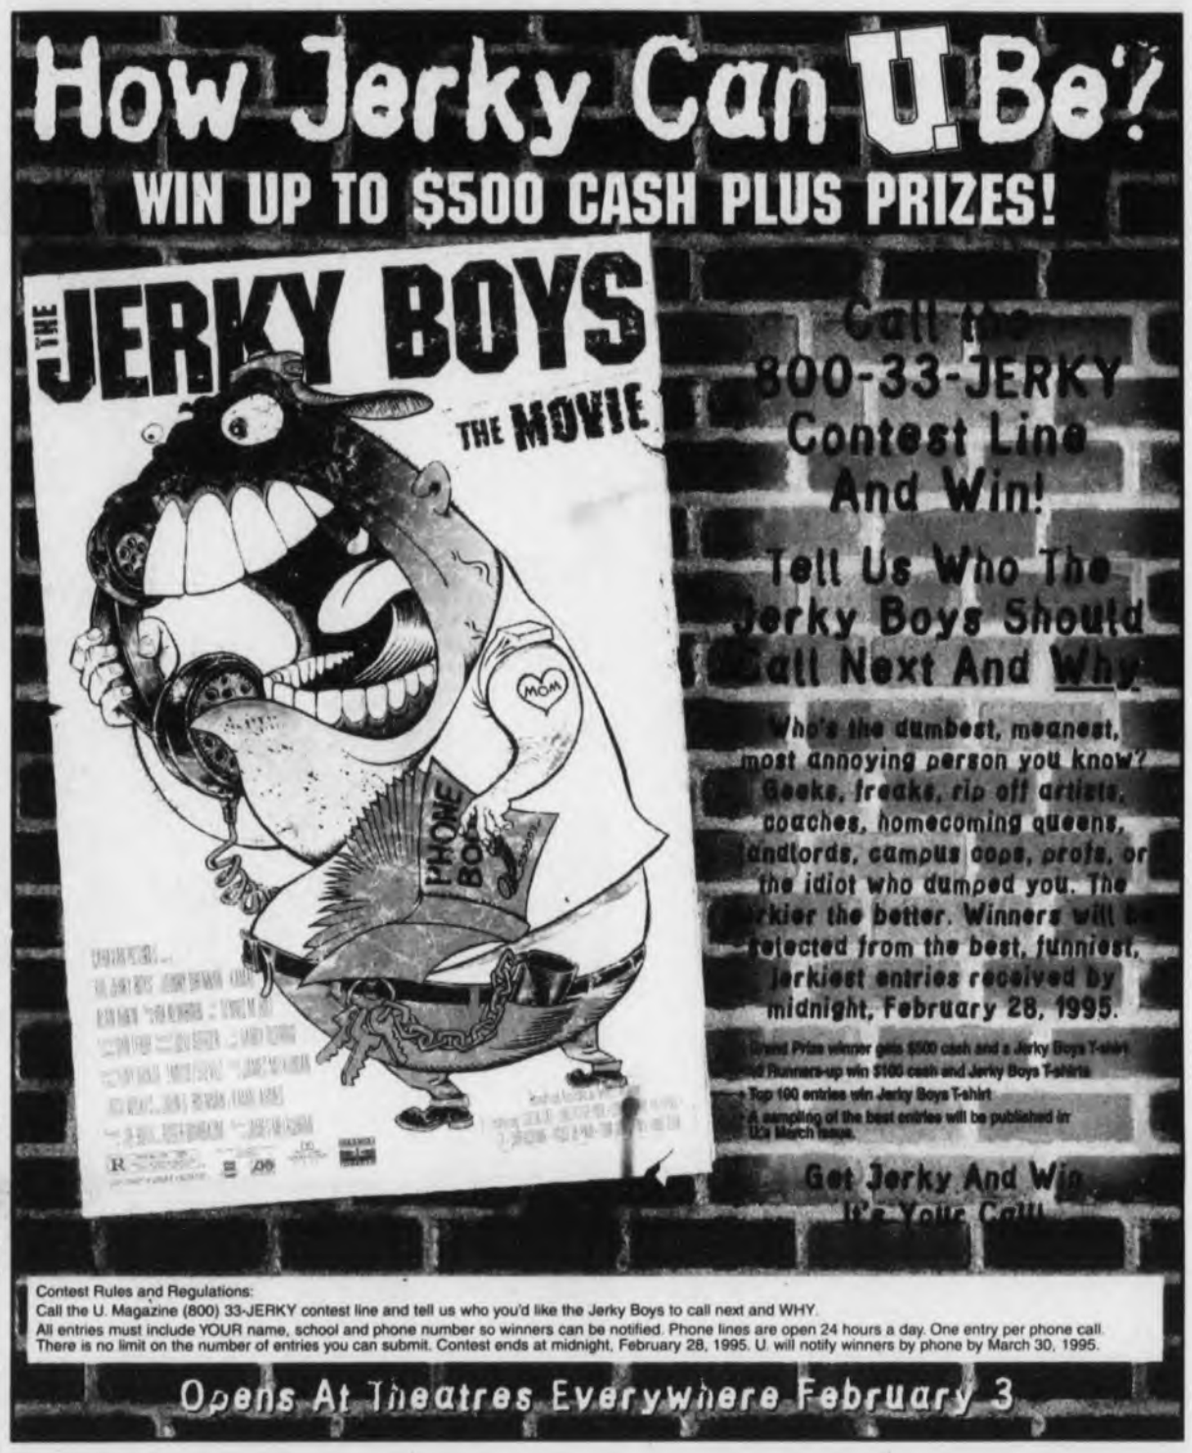
Affirmative action under fire in California

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Fresh from a bitter battle over immigration, California is heading into another civil-rights showdown, this time over affirmative action.

Gov. Pete Wilson has called for an end to legal preferences for minorities and women, and conservatives are launching a 1996 ballot initiative to end affirmative action in California schools and contracts.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson toured the state Wednesday to mount a "Resist and Register" campaign. The civil-rights leader compared Wilson to George Wallace and Southern governors who fought integration in the 1950s and 1960s.



"Pete Wilson of California is liken unto Wallace of Alabama. He wants to stand in front of the schoolhouse doors," Jackson said.

The proposed ballot measure, called the "California Civil Rights Initiative," follows Proposition 187, which was approved by voters in November and denies schooling and medical services to illegal immigrants. It is not being enforced while the courts consider whether it's legal. The proposed affirmative action measure also would meet a court challenge, Jackson promised.

"But they would succeed in poisoning the atmosphere and polarizing the state of California with the continuous suggestion that white males are being taken advantage of," he said of the proposal's supporters.

The early push to stop the initiative contrasts with the campaign against Proposition 187. Jackson said this time civil rights and women's rights leaders will fight early. Jackson was joined at a news conference by Hispanic, Asian and black leaders, as well as the head of the National Organization for Women.

"We believe that this is one of the most significant attacks on our rights that has come through this state in our recent history," said NOW's Elizabeth Toledo.

Have a heart-to-heart with 'friend'

Dear Cassandra,

I recently slept with a very good friend of mine. Prior to the "big event," he made his "I-want-to-be-more-than-friends feelings" quite obvious to me. I realized I had feelings for him too, so in a drunken passion, we had sex.

His friends claim he likes me, but I don't see it. He rarely calls and never returns my calls. What should I do?

Signed,
Need a Real Man

Dear Need a Real Man,

If the relationship means anything to you, I'd have a serious heart-to-heart with this guy and tell him you aren't sure what's happened to your friendship.

He might not understand you still need reassurance that he still cares about you.

It could also be this guy just snowed you over. If that's the case, I'd tell you to pour liquid heat in his underwear drawer and get on with your life.

'Little Women' timeless classic

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

★★★★ Little Women

Ratings:
★★★★ Must see

★★ Good future rental
★ Bastardization of cinema

A select number of stories enter our culture and remain there for generations.

"The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," for example, has been re-made in cinema countless times. Some of those times were even good.

Such is the good fortune of Louisa May Alcott's endearing, semi-autobiographical tale "Little Women."

Director Gillian Armstrong ("My Brilliant Career") has crafted a classy movie that wonderfully sparks the ensemble cast to life as the interminable March sisters.

The well-adjusted March sisters of "Little Women" are so personal and thoughtful that by watching the movie, we begin to consider ourselves part of the family. We're so comfortable with our new family we start mentally arguing with their decisions. "Oh, I think Jo should go to Europe, not Amy!" "I hope Meg doesn't marry that tutor!"

Perhaps the strongest point of this movie is its cast. Winona Ryder fills veteran Katherine Hepburn's shoes as the headstrong Jo March. (Hepburn starred in the wonderful George Cukor-directed black-and-white version.) Ryder gracefully fills those shoes and offers what might be considered her best performance in a serious movie. She has shed her "Age of Innocence" awkwardness of last year and has finally grown into an adult role that genuinely showcases her talents.

Kirsten Dunst, hot off of her little vamp role in "Interview With The Vampire," excites the atmosphere of the March home with her precocious remarks as the youngest sister Amy. The teen-age Dunst is a captivating creature who I am sure we will be seeing more of on the big screen.

Trini Alvarado and Claire Danes — playing Meg, with her honest grace and her careless frivolity, and Beth, the lone, contentedly silent sister, respectively — are everything you could expect.

Susan Sarandon gives a fine performance (which could be said for nearly all of her movies) as Marmee March, the wise, progressive mother of the girls. Marmee encourages the girls with broad-minded advice, yet she never expresses her hidden expectations. She never admits to thinking her girls will be successful, but her encouragement of Jo to travel to New York is tinged with a hint of complacency.

Orchard House, the home of the March family, has been lovingly re-created from the Alcott's original home in Concord, Mass. Armstrong filled the wooden dwelling with quilts, dolls, piping-hot food and other sorts of New England delights. Just remember to keep your eyes dotting around the rooms; you will surely find lovely little nuances.

One shouldn't ask if this movie will garner any Oscar nominations, but rather, which nominations. Armstrong could very well get a nod for best director. Ryder should get a best actress Oscar. Jodie Foster, from "Nell," is her competition, but Foster has won two Oscars. Moreover, "Little Women" was reviewed much more favorably than "Nell."

I would like Dunst to pick up a nomination for best supporting actress, but I doubt she could win because that would make two wins in a row for a young girl. (Anna Paquin won last year for "The Piano.")

On the road again

County Road 404, just south of Tuttle Creek Reservoir, had a brief traffic slow up around 3 p.m. Thursday while a group of cowboys moved some cattle down the road to Cedar Springs Ranch. A feed truck led the herd, dropping food pellets to entice the cattle into following it.

Stolen property recovered

"Whatever we do, we're not going to please all 20,000 people."

Grice said he believes one of the reasons the K-State police have an image problem is that publicity tends to focus on the negatives.

"People might complain about us a lot, but you never hear about the good things we do. The good things are never brought out."

As an example of this, Grice points out the recovered stolen property from eight cars that were broken into in one night in Lot B-3.

Stereos and speakers are stacked against walls and desks in the investigations room. Next to them are boxes of recovered cleaning supplies that had been stolen from washrooms in Jardine Terrace Apartments. In both cases, four suspects were apprehended.

"We have a recovery rate equal to the state and national averages," Richard Herrman, University detective, said.

Herrman also investigated the students charged with cheating in Principles of Biology last semester.

Grice said he is enjoying his job at K-State for the same reasons he originally became a campus police director at the University of Arkansas-Pine Bluff — he thought he could do more good there.

"I thought to myself, this is not bad. I guess I like it. So here I am."

Dole close to presidential bid

"I haven't yet officially thrown my hat in the ring, but you could say this is the first step."

BOB DOLE
R-Kan.

Fund-raising committee formed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole stepped closer to a third presidential bid by forming a fund-raising committee Thursday, while Jack Kemp called a meeting with his braintrust to discuss his own White House prospects.

"I believe we must rein in the government at home and reassert American leadership abroad," the Kansas Republican senator said in announcing formation of the Dole for President Exploratory Committee.

"I haven't yet officially thrown my hat in the ring, but you could say this is the first step," said Dole. "I am deeply honored by the outpouring of support, and it's time to give our donors and volunteers a vehicle for getting involved early."

Dole promised a final decision in late March or early April, and several of his political advisers said all signs pointed to a Dole candidacy. Before their official announcements, presidential hopefuls often form exploratory committees to get a head start on fund raising — and to signal potential sup-porters of their intentions.

Kemp's backers have been clamoring for such a signal for months, and many have read the former housing secretary's ambivalence as a sign he will not run. Just back from a trip to Israel, Kemp was sitting down to discuss the race over dinner with five former House colleagues — a group of onetime backbenchers that now includes several major players in the GOP resurgence.

Included in the group were Speaker Newt Gingrich, Majority Leader Richard Armey, former Rep. Vin Weber and two Kemp allies who have moved on to the Senate — Majority Whip Trent Lott of Mississippi and Connie Mack of Florida. Kemp advisers said they did not expect any immediate announcement.

By the time Dole makes things official, Texas Sen. Phil Gramm and former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander are likely to be formal candidates. Gramm's announcement is scheduled for Feb. 24, and Alexander plans to officially declare a week or so later.

Dole and Gramm have had a bumpy relationship, particularly during the past year when the Texan tried to position himself as the leading force behind the defeat of President Clinton's health care plan, often rushing to the Senate floor for attack speeches without giving the GOP leader's office the traditional notice.

But Gramm issued a statement Thursday saying, "I love and admire Bob Dole, and I know that he will be a formidable contender. Republicans are united in their commitment to beat Bill Clinton and complete the revolution we started in the 1994 elections."

Former Vice President Dan Quayle could be an official candidate within weeks as well, and in recent days he has signed on several operatives and begun to sound out GOP fundraisers.

In a traditional year, the formal candidate announcements would not come until this fall. But a new, front-loaded primary calendar and Clinton's political weaknesses have combined to propel the 1996 campaign to an extra-ordinarily early start.

Commentator Patrick J. Buchanan, who bruised President Bush with a 1992 primary challenge, also might run again, and Pennsylvania Sen. Arlen Specter has an exploratory committee. Several GOP governors are assessing their prospects, including Tommy Thompson of Wisconsin and William Weld of Massachusetts.

By virtue of his high name recognition and leadership position, Dole would enter as the reputed front-runner, and he now runs ahead of Clinton in head-to-head polls. He has labored to appeal to Ross Perot supporters, and he will appear as Perot's guest Monday night when the 1992 independent candidate is the guest host on CNN's "Larry King Live."

▶ KANSAS BUDGET

Graves reveals 1996 budget

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The state would operate government under a four-year plan that avoids both tax increases and large cuts in programs under budget proposals from Gov. Bill Graves.

Graves asked legislators Wednesday to practice restraint and promote stability by putting aside $50.5 million for future years.

As expected, he also proposed eliminating the state's 2.5-percent sales taxes on energy used in manufacturing and on labor services used in constructing new buildings.

But he proposed a $30 increase in the base per-pupil budget for elementary and secondary schools and a 3.5-percent pay increase for state employees, including university faculty. He also proposed continuation of the state's comprehensive highway program.

Graves presented a $7.75 billion budget for fiscal year 1996, which begins July 1, a 4.4-percent increase in overall spending. He outlined it during his State of the State address to a joint session of the Legislature.

"I will not allow us to conclude this legislative session with a fiscal '96 budget that creates a fiscal '97 problem," Graves said during his speech. "That wouldn't be sound fiscal management, good government or fair to the taxpayers of Kansas."

The bulk of the spending — $3.46 billion — would come from the state general fund, where the state deposits most of its general tax revenues. Other sources of revenue are federal funds and fees, such as tuition at state universities.

Graves proposed an increase in state general fund spending of 3.6 percent, or $120 million.

Budget Director Gloria Timmer said Graves did not want to propose more spending because he wants state government's finances to be stable for the next four years. The state could avoid both cuts in programs and increases in taxes, she said.

In his address, Graves said: "Creating a four-year plan is a departure from previous administrations, but I think it is important the state of Kansas — just like Kansas families and businesses — has a realistic financial plan."

Spending on public schools, state universities and social services programs would account for nearly 82 percent of the general fund budget.

Graves' proposal to increase the base budget per pupil, from $3,600 to $3,630 per pupil, would cost $16.6 million. The state would spend another $22.4 million to pay for the growth in student enrollments.

He also would increase spending on special education programs by $8.3 million, to $185 million. The state would pay 83 percent of the excess costs associated with those programs.

The proposed budgets for state Board of Regents institutions includes $13.1 million for faculty, student and staff pay increases.

In social services, Graves' proposals generally represent the status quo. The only program Graves proposes to cut is one that provides money for the burial of indigent Kansans, which costs $850,000 a year.

His budget proposed no specific aid to counties to help them pay for the legal costs associated with the defense of persons designated as potential sex predators by county prosecutors under a 1994 law.

Graves proposes to shift the entire $55.4 million cost of providing refunds to retired military veterans who had their pensions illegally taxed by the state between 1984 and 1991 to the current budget year, rather than spreading it out over three years. Veterans still would get their refunds over time, however.

"There will be people who are not happy with this, and there will be people who will be delighted with this," said Mike Matson, Graves' press secretary, during a budget briefing before the speech.

Graves' proposals assume that the state's work force will shrink by the equivalent of 152 full-time employees, or 0.3 percent, through retirements.

But the governor also is proposing that state agencies be more honest about the number of employees they have on the payroll.

For years, agencies have not included special projects workers in their counts, something Graves changed in his first budget. There are about 1,400 such workers, and they have swelled the number of employees to the equivalent of almost 44,800 full-time workers.

Graves works on speech, skips meeting with media

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — Bill Graves did Wednesday what no other governor in at least two decades has done: skip a budget briefing for reporters.

News organizations had expected Graves to be present to explain policy decisions contained in his budget. He had Budget Director Gloria Timmer and Press Secretary Mike Matson handle the duties for him.

They outlined Graves' budget in depth, but they generally shied away from answering specific policy questions.

"I would think that a governor would want to show up to explain the policy behind the budget he's submitting," said Roger Myers, who has covered the Statehouse for the Topeka Capital-Journal for nearly three decades. "It's been my experience over the years that governors have shown up."

Matson said Graves did not attend because he still was working on his State of the State address, which is to be delivered during a joint session of the Legislature Wednesday night.

In past years, governors have usually attended the entire briefing. However, former Gov. Joan Finney twice popped into the briefings for a short time to answer questions.

▶ REPUBLICAN RESPONSE

Legislature has mixed impressions of speech

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — While Republican leaders generally praised Gov. Bill Graves' first State of the State message Wednesday night, it still drew criticism from members of both parties.

"I think I heard a tone that we've not heard in quite awhile," said Sen. Jerry Moran, R-Hays, the Senate majority leader. "The new administration is ready to work with the Legislature."

He also applauded Graves' decision to place a moratorium on the creation of new rules and regulations.

"It's an outstanding idea," he said.

However, some Republicans do not believe the newly elected Republican governor is cutting enough from the state budget.

"I would like to see us go a little deeper," said Rep. Greg Packer, R-Topeka. Packer said he is not disappointed with Graves' budget, but plans to look for ways to trim more.

"Gov. Graves has some good ideas," he said.

Democratic leaders said Graves' proposals will increase property taxes and provide no tax relief for the average Kansan.

"House Democrats will oppose any proposals that raise property taxes," said Rep. Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, the House minority leader.

He was critical of the governor's proposal to eliminate the property-tax lid, along with reducing state aid to cities and counties. The lid generally limits the amount that local officials can increase mill levies from year to year.

"This is an open invitation to the local units of government to raise property taxes," Sawyer said.

Sawyer also said Graves paid only lip service to cutting motor vehicle taxes in Kansas, which are the highest in the nation.

"In fact, car owners are likely to pay higher taxes," Sawyer said. At the same time, he added, special interests are receiving $74 million in tax breaks under Graves' proposals.

Sawyer referred to a $43-million reduction in businesses' unemployment taxes, $18 million from the repeal of a sales tax on labor services for new construction and $13 million from a repeal of sales tax on utilities used in manufacturing.

Police suspect suicide

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Law enforcement agencies involved in the lengthy Ross Taton investigation announced that gathered information indicates a probable self-inflicted wound.

Capt. Robert Mellgren, K-State Police, said although nothing new has developed out of the case itself, there are two basic reasons for this conclusion.

"First of all, investigators cannot find when the opportunity would be available to commit the crime, and secondly, clues indicate no motive," Mellgren said.

Odd circumstances had hinted that Taton, a Goodnow Hall resident who was found early Jan. 9 in the corridor outside his room with a stab wound to the chest, had been attacked. The investigators have conducted many interviews to learn more about Taton's life and habits, Mellgren said.

"For the most part, Ross was articulate about keeping his door locked," Mellgren said.

MEMORIAL SET

There will be a memorial service in honor of Ross Taton at All Faith's Chapel at 7 tonight. The evening will offer students a chance to give a testimonial or comment on the tragedy. Anonymous notes can be given to Goodnow Hall's front desk for reading by 5 p.m. tonight. All students are welcome to attend.

Expression helps in grieving

AMY SIMON
Collegian

The best thing to do to help someone who is grieving is to let them experience their feelings, even if this leads to pain.

David Balk, associate professor for the Department of Human Development and Family Studies, said people often feel uncomfortable talking to someone who has just lost a loved one.

"That discomfort is very quickly picked up by the person who is grieving," Balk said.

Balk, who teaches a class on the subject of death and dying, said this discomfort may lead a friend to try to take the person's mind off of their loss.

"Some people even try to change the subject during conversation," Balk said. "This is like a slap in the face to a person who is trying to open up to you about their loss."

Bonnie Uffman, psychologist with Pawnee Mental Health Center, also said those who are grieving need to express their feelings.

"Allow them to feel depressed if they are depressed, be angry if they are angry, and cry if they want to cry," Uffman said. "It is important to express emotions, and there is usually not support for that."

This involves making people feel comfortable talking about a loved one who has died, Balk said.

▶ COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING

Engineering enrollment diversifies

JAMIE CONGROVE
Collegian

The College of Engineering has seen a 30-percent increase in the number of women and minority students within the last two years.

Karen Martin, director of the minority engineering department, has been with the College of Engineering for two years and said she has noticed the increase.

"I attribute that to believing in the self-fulfilling prophecy that says, 'if you tell a child he or she is something, they will become it,'" Martin said.

"If I tell my students that they will become whatever they want and to keep going when the going gets tough, they can accomplish it," she said.

Martin said she believes if she continues to give her program a personal touch, the college will continue to see an increase in enrollment of minorities and women.

However, she said there is still a long way to go and a lot of changes still need to be made.

Martin said one of the changes the college needs to implement is giving more incentives such as package deals to minorities and women to encourage them to come to K-State.

Martin also said there needs to be lower costs for out-of-state students and better accommodations for living.

Ray Hightower, assistant dean of the College of Engineering, said he thinks there will be more of a change when secondary schools improve their methods of math and science instruction. Hightower said there needs to be more excitement added in these areas.

The college also has different clubs and social activities for women and minorities to get involved in.

David Harrison, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said there are meetings, picnics and activities planned that promote getting to know other students.

One group, Workshops in Student Excellence, offers programs for women and minorities to receive extra help in math and science.

Maria Stecklein, sophomore in civil engineering, said that in many of her lab classes, she might be one of the only women. However, she said she doesn't feel excluded.

Stecklein said she feels the college is doing a good job of trying to get women involved.

"They push it quite a bit," she said.

Martin said she thinks her program is successful because she enjoys what she does.

"There are valleys and pits, but I don't look at those. You have to keep your head up," Martin said.

"I am not always going to get all the grants I want or the smartest and the best students," she said. "But whatever I have, I make the best of it."

Dwan Gardner, sophomore in medical technology, holds her 3-year-old son, Damon, during the candlelight vigil in All Faiths Chapel Monday night. While the candles were being lit, the crowd sang "We Will Overcome."

Walk, service conducted in memory, support of leader

JOE KLEIDOSTY
Collegian

A group of 50 to 75 people participated in a memorial walk, candlelight vigil and religious service Monday night in observance of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

Sunday marked the beginning of Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week.

The memorial walk covered the distance from Waters Hall to the All Faiths Chapel.

Alpha Phi Alpha chose this path because it was well-lit, Omar Davis, president of Alpha Phi Alpha, said.

Davis said King was also a member of Alpha Phi Alpha at Morehouse College.

Davis said that with recent incidents like Proposition 187 in California and the Rodney King beating, solidarity is the key.

"I think it's really important that we come together right now more than ever," he said.

Davis said he fears America is becoming fairly bleak in terms of racial issues.

"It's sad to see that we're coming onto a new century, and we're still fighting the battles that we believed we had won in the '60s," Davis said.

Jeff Peterson, student body president, said this year was the second year for the walk.

"It's a great feeling to be part of," Peterson said.

Kay King, member of Alpha Kappa Alpha and senior in Spanish and economics, said she participated in the event to show unity and support.

"We're supporting our brothers as well as remembering Dr. King," King said.

Veryl Switzer, associate director of athletics for academic affairs, was one of the people who helped organize the walk in 1987.

"Traditionally, it represented Dr. King's work — in terms of his marching to freedom," Switzer said. "That symbolic trait we've tried to maintain."

A memorial service at the All Faiths Chapel included dramatic interpretations, songs by United Black Voices, a candlelight vigil and a speech by Farrell Webb, assistant professor in family studies.

Webb said dreaming is not enough.

"You have to do more than just dream. You have to act on dreams," Webb said.

Webb said he believes King's dream is not dead.

▶ GOVERNOR BILL GRAVES SELECTS MANHATTAN RESIDENTS FOR CABINET

Two Manhattan residents were named to the cabinet of Gov. Bill Graves.

Wayne Franklin was named secretary of the Department of Human Resources, and John Strickler was named acting secretary of the Department of Wildlife and Parks.

Franklin has made a career with Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. all over Kansas for the past 17 years.

Franklin is a K-State graduate and the only Democrat appointed.

"I bring to the position business skills and a desire to look at state government from the top to bottom. I will look at the efficiency of state officials and stress service to the customer," Franklin said.

Strickler, an extension forester with K-State's extension service, is the acting secretary of Wildlife and Parks. He was appointed acting secretary until the position is permanently filled. He has been with the extension forestry service for 34 years. Strickler was previously appointed as the acting secretary in July 1987 by Gov. Mike Hayden.

Strickler said he will take the necessary steps to establish fiscal integrity in the department and put it on a solid base, enabling it to participate in federal programs. He said he feels his main goal is to conduct a search to locate the most qualified person to become the next secretary.

"The governor gave me the authority to make changes to improve the department," Strickler said. "I will do what I need to do."

▶ MALCOLM X'S DAUGHTER RETURNS TO COURT FOR CONSPIRACY CHARGES

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — When Qubilah Shabazz returns to federal court this week on charges of plotting to kill Louis Farrakhan, William Kunstler will be at her side.

The civil-rights lawyer said Sunday from New York he was joining the team defending Malcolm X's daughter from the allegation she conspired to kill Farrakhan.

Kunstler said he will appear on her behalf in federal court in St. Paul on Wednesday.

A nine-count indictment unsealed Thursday accuses Shabazz of plotting Farrakhan's assassination.

As a child, Shabazz watched her father killed in front of a crowd of supporters in New York City in 1965. Three Black Muslims were convicted of the murder in 1966.

Farrakhan was a follower of Malcolm X, but he later became a rival in the struggle to head the Nation of Islam.

Betty Shabazz, Malcolm X's widow, said as recently as last year that she believes Farrakhan was involved in his murder. Farrakhan denies any role.

Prosecutors refused to identify the key witness, but several news accounts named him as Michael Fitzpatrick, a childhood friend of Qubilah Shabazz who now lives as Michael Kevin Summers in the witness protection program in Minnesota.

Authorities claim Shabazz had telephone conversations with Fitzpatrick about the murder plot and made a partial payment on the contract after moving to Minneapolis from New York City in September.

▶ OPPONENTS OF PUBLIC SCHOOL ACCREDITATION TO GIVE TESTIMONY TODAY

TOPEKA (AP) — Those who question where Kansas' new process for accrediting public schools, called quality performance accreditation, is taking the state get their chance to testify before the Kansas Legislature's education committees on Tuesday.

Skeptics of the process, called QPA for short, say it's not a new concept, hasn't succeeded in the past, bogs teachers down in paperwork and can serve as an excuse for schools to teach values and sex education, things some opponents say are better left to home and church.

"I have severe reservations about this whole thing," Sen. Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, said on Monday. "One of the things I'm concerned about is the emphasis on process rather than substance."

Lawrence, a middle-school teacher on leave from Wichita Unified School District No. 259, lined up witnesses to tell the other side of QPA after education officials and administrators from four school districts sang the praises of QPA before House and Senate education committees for three days last week.

▶ CIVIL-RIGHTS LEADERS SAY KING'S MESSAGE STILL IMPORTANT, NOT HISTORY

(AP) — As Americans commemorated the life of Martin Luther King Jr., civil-rights leaders said there is still much to be done to preserve his legacy and attain his dream.

King's widow, Coretta Scott King, and her children laid a wreath on King's crypt in Atlanta before entering an overflowing Ebenezer Baptist Church for the annual holiday ecumenical service.

Inside, the Rev. Bernice King thanked God for the life of her slain father and said a prayer for her brother, Dexter, who took over last month as chairman of the King Center, saying she hopes it will be said of him, "There was a son who in the spirit of his father kept the hope, the dream alive."

Yolanda King said the holiday is when young people in particular should learn about King's teachings.

"I'm always amazed when talking to young children at how little they know," Yolanda King said to a Cleveland audience Saturday. "They know Martin Luther King Jr. was killed — they know that. And they know he had a dream. And that's about where it stops."

Some of the speakers said King's message remains urgent, not ancient history.

"Dr. King was not a non-threatening orator but a public policy prophet," the Rev. Jesse Jackson said at a weekend celebration in Manchester, N.H. "He was killed not for being eloquent but for being a threatening drum major for justice."

Jackson held King after he was gunned down on April 4, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn. King would have been 66 years old on Sunday.

Student runs for city commission

MIKE MARLETT
Collegian

While most 19-year-olds are into basketball and getting dates, Justin Kastner has politics on his mind.

Kastner, junior in food science and industry, filed Friday with the Manhattan city clerk's office to run for one of the three places available on the city commission.

Kastner said he doesn't like all the attention his age is getting.

However, he said, he knows it will be a factor in the election.

"I'd be kidding myself if I said it's not an issue," he said.

"I wish I was 45," he said jokingly. He said many people view being 19 as a liability.

He said he's ready to take on the responsibility of being a city commissioner.

"I guarantee I wouldn't do it if I did not feel I could meet the commitment of time and energy," he said.

"It's not something I decided to do on a whim," he said.

"I've talked to seven different commissioners, past and present. I've probably talked to 25 community leaders in the last three weeks. That includes a state senator, local businessmen and people at the University," Kastner said.

"If people look at issues and not the age, they come around," Kastner said.

He said the issue he is most concerned with is economic diversity.

"We depend on the government. Fort Riley is controlled by the federal, K-State by the state. Anytime there are budget cuts, government programs are the first to go," he said. "That's why it's important to diversify the economic base."

Kastner said he wants to get involved now because he wants to secure the future of jobs in Manhattan.

He said he sees the problems immediately around him.

His brother is a first-year medical student who is getting scholarships from the state that were designed to help keep doctors in Kansas.

He said it's sad that the state has to give incentives for someone to stay here. This should be a place that someone would want to come to, Kastner said.

He knows that not all graduates would stay, but Manhattan's job market could be improved significantly, he said.

Kastner has lived in Manhattan all his life. He said he has been thinking about running for city commission for a year.

He said he has only been serious about it for the last couple of months.That is when he started getting help.

Kastner's campaign chairs are Terry Glasscock, a former commissioner and mayor, and Karen Rogers, who serves on the city's Airport Board and on the state's Fine Arts Council.

Rogers said she was impressed with Kastner's energy and his ability to make decisions.

"Justin has helped me with a lot of campaigns. When he asked me to help him, there was no question in my mind about it," she said.

"I don't know many people who are as ahead of schedule as him."

She said her job is to give him an opportunity to sell himself to members of the community.

Because of his age, many people have reacted to him with disbelief, she said.

"That's why it's important for me not to sell him," she said.

Kastner seems to be able to sell himself, Rogers said.

"Community leaders have either written a check or joined the campaign," she said.

Kastner said Rogers' and Glasscock's support means a lot to him.

"More than they'll ever know," Kastner said.

Kastner said the election is not a cutthroat one. Only two other people have filed to run in this spring's elections — Steve Hall, a current commissioner, and Stanley Crouter — said Rich Doan, assistant director of finance and city clerk.

Doan said Mayor Helen Cooper and Commissioner Roger Maughmer do not intend to re-run .

Doan said four more people had picked up the packets of forms to file for the election, but he did not know when, or if, they were going to turn the forms in.

The deadline to file for the city commission election is Jan. 24. If a total of seven or more people file, there will be a primary election Feb. 28. General elections will be April 4.

Kastner said he hopes there will be a primary election.

"I want to prove to people that I can win," he said.

Call Return, always dreaded by prank callers, is another must-have for college students. This service does much more for you than call back the person who keeps calling and hanging up.
You come home from the grocery, arms full of Ramen and melting ice cream, and the phone is ringing. Four rings and the machine picks up. A whole lot of good that machine does when all it records is a dial tone. "I hate it when people don't leave messages." Then bust out a little Call Return and tell 'em about it. Let your emotions run wild. Let 'em have it for every bad thing that's happened today and then ask what they wanted when they called. It's a sure fire way to encourage people to leave messages!

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Getting involved with city politics is important

The time is now to get involved in local government. This is the first semester that students living on campus will be able to vote or run in city elections.

Residents will have the opportunity to vote for school board members and city commissioners April 4.

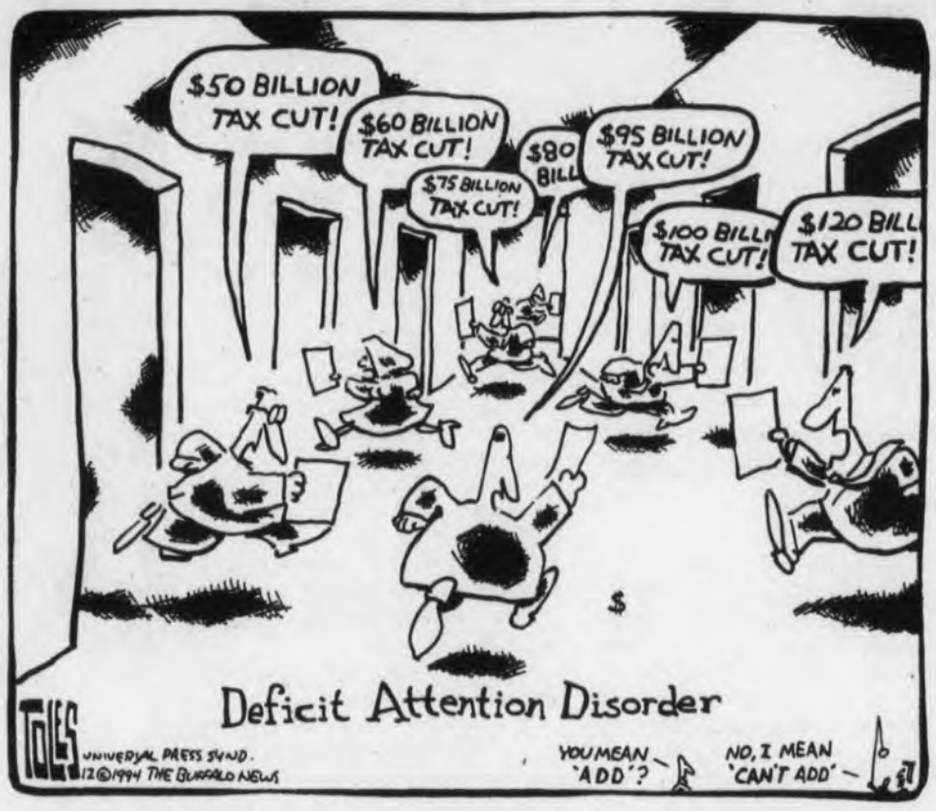
The city and the school board both make decisions that affect students' daily lives.

The city commission makes decisions on how much to tax students and how that money is spent.

As part of the annexation of K-State in July, a special fund was created in which taxes charged on campus will be placed. The money in the fund will be used for projects that benefit both the University and the city of Manhattan.

Commissioners will have the last say on where and how much money is spent on these joint projects.

The city also makes decisions on things like community safety, housing codes, street repair and arts programs.



Students with children in school should not be the only ones interested in the school board. The school board is building several new schools with property taxes that students pay through their rent.

First, students need to get registered to vote in Manhattan. You can get registered in the K-State Union or the county clerk's office downtown.

Second, get involved. If you are interested in being a commissioner or a school board member, the deadline is Jan. 24.

If not, get informed, attend meetings and, most important, vote.

TOLES

Ambiguity about full-time status ruins scholarship opportunity

College should be about education, but that isn't what is important — universities have become businesses, nothing more.

MIKE BUNCH
GUEST COLUMN

Administration no longer concerns itself with the problems of the students, only where the next paycheck comes from.

Yes, college is now about the almighty dollar.

My suspicions about University motives appeared shortly after I arrived at K-State in the fall of 1989.

Those suspicions were finally confirmed during fee payment this spring.

As a senior planning to graduate in May (finally!!), I only needed to take eight hours to finish up.

I knew if I enrolled only in eight hours, it would cost me some financial aid, but I figured I would make up the loss through buying fewer books and paying less tuition.

Wrong. Was I ever way off base.

I went to fee payment and stood in line forever, all so I could attend classes. (By the way, when are we switching to fee payment by mail?)

I went to the financial-aid counter and picked up my student loans. While there, I found I didn't receive a Pell Grant for the spring, but figured that would be OK, it's just a couple hundred bucks, right?

I walked over to the fee adjustment counter. My plan was lined up and ready to go.

Enrolled in eight hours, I thought I wouldn't have to pay $1,000 to go to school. It all works out, I lose a little money but pay a little less.

When I asked them at the counter about fee adjustment, they informed me that "... seven hours and above is considered full time for enrollment purposes..."

What the hell is this all about?

Suddenly my plan fell apart, and I am stuck paying full-time fees for eight hours.

I realized I was another unfortunate victim of the greed that has taken over this University.

I want to know when seven hours became full time and why hasn't it affected financial aid?

I think everyone who receives financial aid knows that they have to be enrolled in 12 hours to be full time, nine hours to be three-quarter time and six hours to be considered half-time.

Nowhere does it say, "Oh, you only need seven hours to receive a full-time Pell Grant or other financial aid."

It may only seem like a couple hundred dollars to the administration, but, when you don't have that kind of money laying on your dresser, it becomes a significant amount.

The University offers conflicting statements about its full-time policy, too. To receive a University or foundation scholarship, a student must be enrolled in 12 hours to be considered full time.

Which University policy is correct? How can K-State demand a student take 12 hours to receive a University scholarship, but charge full time for only seven or eight hours of class?

I talked to some friends and other people and have heard a lot of interesting feedback.

Most people didn't realize how full-time hours are set up, and understood my gripe.

What I really don't want to hear anymore from people is: "Why don't you just enroll in four more hours and get your money's worth?"

If I wanted 12 hours, I would have originally enrolled in 12 hours.

I set my schedule up so I could have time for my job at the Collegian as an editor and a contributing writer and do other things with my life.

My job is time consuming, I need to start preparing myself for the job market when I graduate, and I have 100 other details to work out with my life.

I don't want to add any more classes to my schedule.

Now I have to work harder and write more just to make up for money lost from financial aid and paying more fees than I had planned.

I want the University to realize what they are doing and change it to help the students.

After all, this is supposed to be an institution of higher learning dedicated to helping people better their minds.

Administration shouldn't place a high priority on making more and more money and operating a business.

There are people on campus who need financial aid to go to school, assistance with studies or numerous other needs.

How does greed help them?

K-State needs to take a hard look at the fee payment system and make some serious changes within it.

Students' needs and desires should be the No. 1 priority of this or any other University.

Other schools offer by-the-credit-hour rates. I think a system that charges students by the credit hour up to 12 hours would be a great benefit to those who can't or don't want to take a full load and can't afford to pay full fees with less money available.

This system would only change the tuition rates, not student fees for campus programs.

I don't see any major drawbacks to an hourly plan, other than it may take away tuition revenue from the school.

Student-funded services wouldn't be affected or feel financial strains under this program.

If the University is here to help people, I think this is an excellent way to start.

It is about time K-State caught up with other universities by considering the needs of students.

Racial identity is a personal choice

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

"Amid all the conflicting parties, I choose none." — Eugene Ionsesco, playwright.

I hereby announce my resignation from the African American race. I no longer consider myself African American and will no longer indicate myself as such on any form, application or document.

Likewise, I shall no longer call myself European American, Arabic American or Native American. I am not Jewish. I am not Catholic. Gender non-specific.

Let me make myself very clear. All of my life, I have been asked what I am. I am sick of people coming up on the street to me to say "What are you anyhows? Are you black? Are you Indian? Where did your people originate from?"

When I say my ancestors came from all over Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and that one great grandmother survived the Trail of Tears, they nod their heads as if they knew all the time and proclaim me a half-breed, as if I can't be all of anything, just a half or a third here and there. I've gotten tired of pledging allegiance to the million little flags that get waved in front of my face and the slogans that get screamed in my ear.

I am expected to beg forgiveness for thinking of the Motherland as the dirt beneath my feet. If I don't, I get nodded off with a hostile smirk and told I have forgotten myself, who I am and who my people are.

The struggle my people fought to survive, they say I don't understand. I can't be who I am or believe what I believe in without planting my feet in a fighting stance. I can't say my people are everywhere. I can't say every face I see is that of a brother or a sister, regardless of their race, religion or creed without being told I don't know the meaning of the struggle.

So, the time has come for me to stop allowing myself to be defined in the archaic way of race.

I claim allegiance on a higher level: the level of humanity. I gave up my status as a slashed American. I claim allegiance to no one if I can't claim allegiance to all.

Many will say I have sold out. Many will not understand doing so does not mean I do not know my many histories. I know from where my ancestors come, and I understand their fights and causes. I will continue to fight for them becuase they are human causes, not because they raise one race above another. And I will pass my grandmother's language, her stories and traditions on to my children, and make them proud of who they are. Hopefully when they listen to the words of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., when they listen to his "I have a Dream" speech and celebrate his birthday, they will see my efforts to live what he spoke of.

They will know what it is to be judged by the content of their character and not the color of their skin.

Maybe they will not feel as sad and lonely as I have felt during this week when people speak of his beliefs and do not keep them the rest of the year.

Possibilities of faith are endless

Dear editor,

John Hart writes in his article of Jan. 12: "The best examples that illustrate the problems of narrowing the scope of higher education ... are the implications of not considering God, a deity or higher power in our understanding of the world.

"If God does exist, it would dramatically alter our understanding of biology and the origins of life, physics and ethics, for example. By ignoring these possibilities ... our education becomes void of meaning."

In order to add more "meaning" to our educational system, and to be perfectly fair and unbiased, I think the University should consider all possible explanations when teaching the origins of life, physics and ethics. These "possibilities" will of course require the same amount of "faith" (and subsequent lack of proof) as does a belief in God.

For example, we could attribute the phenomenon of gravity as being manufactured by an advanced race of cross-dressing pygmies with engineering degrees who live at the center of the Earth. Or we could take a more traditional angle and imagine Mother Goose as the source of gravity or the Easter Bunny or Santa Claus or a host of other "possibilities" requiring faith.

Yes, these "possibilities" (including a belief in God), if assumed true for the sake of adding "meaning" to our education, would certainly alter our understanding of biology and the origins of life, physics and ethics. They would also alter the name of this fine institution — changing it from Kansas State University to Kansas State Mental Institution.

DEN 450 is a worthy requirement

Dear editor,

We are writing in response to Sera Tank's article, "Is this the pud class?" in the Jan. 13 Collegian. We will readily admit that DEN 450, Impact of Technology, is not one of the hardest classes taken by engineering students. The inherent difficulty of our engineering core classes makes it hard for most of us to take electives that are interesting and beneficial to our course of study. As it happens, "Impact" offers valuable information to all students in engineering.

We feel that "Impact" fills an important role in our curriculum. Just because engineers are required to take classes with difficult content does not mean that classes with common content should be made uncommonly hard. Making class more difficult will not make students learn any more. In fact, people will not learn from a class if they dread going or do not enroll.

We don't understand why it is necessary to restructure one of the only easy classes in an otherwise difficult curriculum.

Bad guys don't always stick out

ANNE HAZLETT
Collegian

Real bad guys don't always look like Freddie Krueger or Jason.

K-State Police Captain Charles Beckom said most of the time they look just like you and me.

"There is no way to tell criminals from the good guys until they act, and then it is too late," he said.

The number of reported criminal incidents on campus has declined during the past five years from more than 200 offenses to about 100 incidents, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Uniform Crime Report.

Despite the encouraging statistics, no one is immune to crime, Beckom said.

"It can happen to anyone, anywhere, at any time," he said. "This means you have to be prepared. You have to have a plan."

There are four basic steps that students can take to reduce the risk of being victimized, Beckom said.

First, have a plan. Know what to do when approached by a stranger. Look tough, and look people straight in the eye.

"You have to show you are a tough target," Beckom said. "You have to project that you are aware and in control."

Second, deny privacy, and avoid walking alone. Try to stay within the public eye.

"Remember, when it is just you and the bad guy is when they are most comfortable doing their thing."

"When moving about, utilize public places and areas where the highest probability exists that others will be present," he said.

Third, attract attention if you think you are being watched or followed.

"No bad guy wants to be seen. If you are in trouble, yell, scream or do whatever it takes to get help," Beckom said.

And, if it becomes necessary, take action.

"Give up your property, and get out if fleeing is an option," he said.

While students can take these four basic steps to minimize risk to their personal safety, there are areas of campus that, by their design, increase vulnerability to crime.

Places such as parking lots, alleys and wooded areas are often high-risk areas because of poor lighting, heavy shrubbery and light traffic.

"Learn to recognize these places and avoid them," Beckom said. "For those that you have to use by necessity, remember to project that tough image."

Students can further decrease their vulnerability to crime by traveling in numbers. If you're out late, call a friend or use the campus escort service to get home safely.

Escorts are available 24 hours a day through the residence-hall escort service. To arrange for an escort, call 395-SAFE.

Heath Schoshke, sophomore in kinesiology, has volunteered as an escort for two semesters.

"I think the main reason people call us is just to feel safer on campus," he said. "I have escorted people from B3 to Goodnow, from the Union and from Seaton."

To call for help in an emergency, pick up one of the emergency phones on campus, push the button and talk into the speaker. An officer will be sent to the scene immediately. The emergency phones are not just for use in classic emergency situations, Beckom said.

"We spread the word emergency out over many situations. If you are lost and need directions or if something about the area just doesn't feel right, pick up the phone," Beckom said.

"Before something happens, we want to see that phone used."

Beckom said he is also available to present educational programs on crime prevention and campus safety to living groups, clubs and organizations.

Topeka chosen as site for czar exhibit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Russian museum officials have selected a Topeka site for the second and final U.S. exhibition of the "Treasures of the Czars," a 270-piece collection of Russian memorabilia.

The exhibit features icons of the Orthodox Church, Faberge works of art and objects from the Romanov dynasty of czars, including crowns used in the dual coronation of Peter the Great and his brother, Ivan.

The director of the Kremlin Museums and her assistant have given the go-ahead to using the east end of the new Law Enforcement Center, the former Montgomery Ward building at South Fourth and Kansas, for the Aug. 1-Dec 31 exhibition.

The exhibit area will be known temporarily as the Kansas International Museum.

It will be remodeled to house the Shawnee County Sheriff's Department after the exhibit closes.

Irina Rodimtseva, Kremlin museums director, and her assistant, Valentina Narozshnyna, made their decision Sunday after a tour of the building.

The issues of safety, security and construction were addressed by Rodimtseva, city officials, architects and engineers.

Pete Gierer — president of Ekdahl, Davis, Depew, Persson Architects and appointed architect for the Ward building remodeling — said he understood Rodimtseva's concerns.

"It sounds like their largest concern by far is to prepare the building by August," Gierer said.

Topeka Mayor Butch Felker said upon completion, the facility will be a carbon copy of St. Petersburg's Florida International Museum, where the exhibit opened Jan. 10.

K-State loses second Big 8 road game to Mizzou

PHILL SPIKER

COLUMBIA, Mo. — The shot would just not fall.

This was the case for K-State as the Cats lost to 16th-ranked Missouri 67-61 at Columbia Saturday night.

Mizzou 67

"If we made some free throws down the stretch, it might have been interesting," said K-State coach Tom Asbury, whose team fell to 10-5 and 1-2 in the Big Eight Conference.

Free throws were not the only shots that would not fall for the Cats.

Jump shots were not falling in either.

This compounded the Cats' shooting, which was 17.1 percent for the first half for the second straight game.

"We had an awful lot of good looks in the first half, but they just didn't go in," Asbury said.

"Two nights in a row, we shot 17 percent. I've never had a college team shoot 17 in a half two nights in a row. That's a nightmare that I don't ever want to live again."

The Cats took an early 12-9 lead at the 16:29 mark and held it until Mizzou forward Derek Grimm hit a trey with 5:44 left in the half to give Mizzou a 16-14 lead.

Starting at the 12:37 mark, the Cats went on a scoring drought, in which Mizzou scored 11 unanswered points until Elliot Hatcher connected on two of his 11 points with 4:08 left in the half.

That would be the last points the Cats would score in the first half. Mizzou entered halftime leading by seven, 23-16.

"It's frustrating, but it happens," Asbury said.

Tyrone Davis, junior forward,who had 13 points and 8 rebounds said the Cats' poor shooting first half was very frustrating.

"It's hard to put to words. It's very frustrating."

Mark Young, freshman guard, said he was also disappointed with the Cats' first half shooting performance.

"Two nights in a row we shot 17 percent. I've never had a college team shoot 17 in a half two nights in a row. That's a nightmare that I don't ever want to live again"

TOM ASBURY
K-State men's basketball coach

"It was a miracle that we were still in the game shooting 17 percent," said Young, who scored 12 points during 26 minutes of action.

K-State came out in the second half shooting 45.9 percent and outscoring Mizzou 45-44.

"We knew it had to pick up." Asbury said.

"We had to get better offensively,"

With 17:37 left in the second half, K-State went on a 12-2 run that was capped off with an Aaron Swartzendruber layup at the 12:47 mark, tying the game at 33-33.

"We stayed patient. "We knew somebody would step up," said Demond Davis, who led the Cats with 15 points, 11 rebounds and two steals.

K-State was behind for most of the second half, but the Cats would always make a run to keep the game close.

"We got the ball in transition, and we need to do that," Asbury said. "We need to get up and down the court."

After falling behind by six on two Paul O'Liney free throws, the Cats went on a 6-0 run to tie the game 55-55 at the 4:22 mark.

K-State would never hold or share the lead again.

From the 4:08 mark, the Cats would only score six more points and missed five of eight from the free throw line.

Tyrone Davis, who was two for four at the free throw line during that stretch, said missing two critical free throws in the final five minutes was disapointing.

"That is something that really ticks me off," Davis said. "I hit all my free throws before then, but when it got down to the point, I missed two in a row."

Mizzou may have won this game, but K-State thinks it has earned some respect from the loss.

"When they come to Manhattan, they will be ready for a good fight," Young said.

Cats' bad shooting helps lose game against Tigers

1st-half shooting remains poor for 2nd straight game

TODD STEWART
Collegian

Under normal circumstances, missing 29 of 35 shots and scoring only 16 points in a first half would do a team in.

Fortunately for the Wildcats, they were able to overcome that.

Unfortunately for the Cats, they found other ways to lose.

K-State's 67-61 loss at Missouri on Saturday marked the second straight game plagued with a poor shooting half.

Despite a first-half shooting percentage of just 17.1 percent, the Cats trailed by only seven at halftime.

K-State was able to make up the halftime deficit and had the game tied up at 55 with less than five minutes left in the game. But after that point, the Cats would make only one more field goal in the game.

After the game, head coach Tom Asbury dwelled on the horrendous first half.

"We took pretty good shots tonight," he said. "We just missed them."

Junior forward Tyrone Davis said the shots were there, but none of them went down.

"We were getting open shots," Davis said. "They just weren't falling for us."

What finally did the Cats in was their poor shooting late in the game.

A late desperation three-pointer by junior guard Elliot Hatcher was the only field goal for K-State during the last four minutes of the game.

The Cats also missed five of eight from the charity stripe during that same stretch, including two crucial ones by junior forward Tyrone Davis.

"That's something that really ticks me off," Davis said after the game.

Asbury echoed Davis' concern.

"If we made some free throws down the stretch, it might have been interesting," Asbury said. "We missed five out of six right in the gut of the game — you can't do that on the road and win."

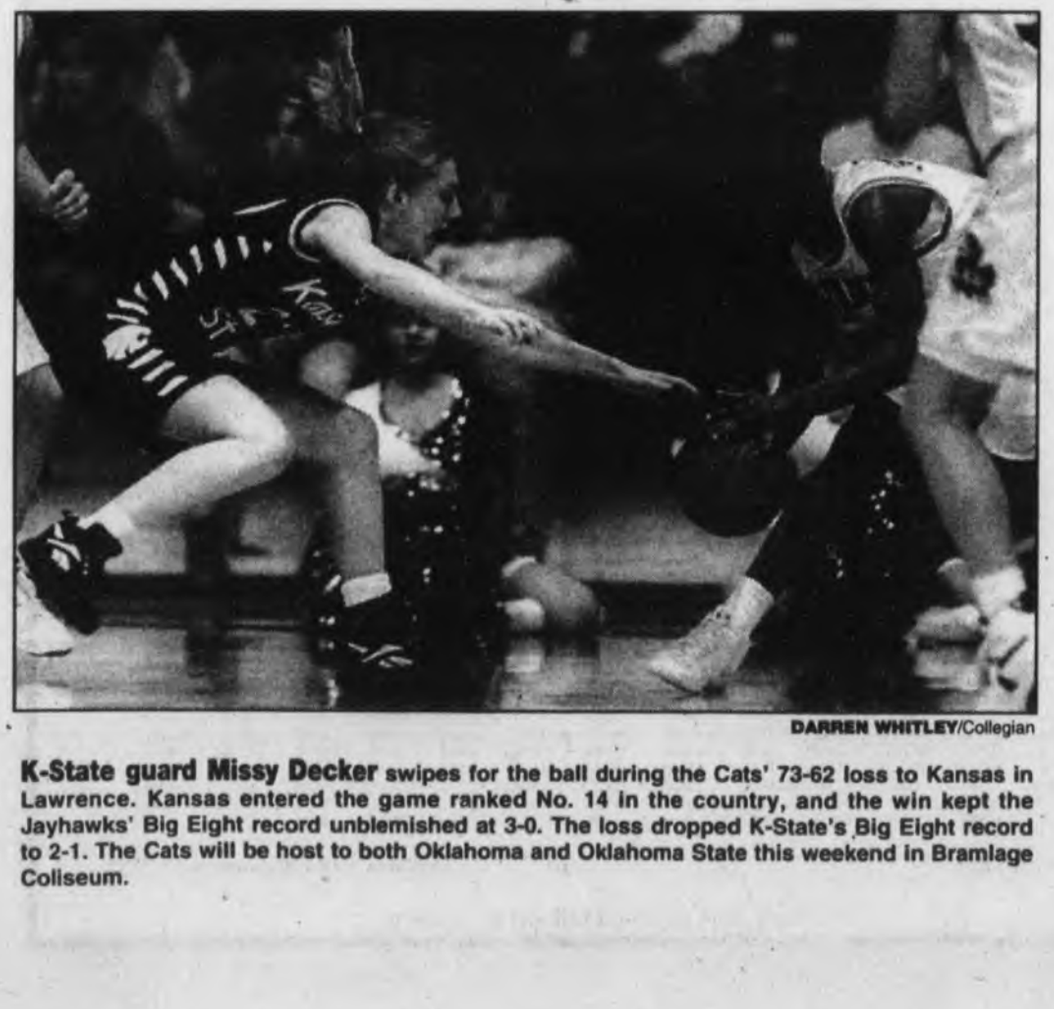
The Cats did much better, shooting 46 percent in the second half but never seemed to get the offense rolling.

The three-pointers, which had the team going in previous games, never fell. The Cats missed 16 of 19 from behind the arc.

The better second half was little consolation for the K-State players.

"It was a moral victory, but that doesn't mean anything to me," Davis said. "I wanted to win the game."

Freshman guard/forward Mark Young said he could not believe the Cats were not getting blown out at halftime.



"It was a miracle we were still in the game shooting 17 percent," he said.

Asbury said he had never been around a team that had been so plagued by such low shooting percentages.

"Two nights in a row we've shot 17 percent in the first half," he said. "I've never had a high school team that shot 17 percent in a half in one year."

"It was a moral victory, but that doesn't mean anything to me. I wanted to win the game."

K-State guard Missy Decker swipes for the ball during the Cats' 73-62 loss to Kansas in Lawrence. Kansas entered the game ranked No. 14 in the country, and the win kept the Jayhawks' Big Eight record unblemished at 3-0. The loss dropped K-State's Big Eight record to 2-1. The Cats will be host to both Oklahoma and Oklahoma State this weekend in Bramlage Coliseum.

Cats suffer 1st Big 8 loss on road

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

Kansas State suffered its first loss of the conference season Sunday, falling 73-62 to cross-state Kansas.

Kansas 73
K-State 62

The Wildcats, 10-5, 2-1 in the Big Eight, simply couldn't stop the one-two punch of all-America guard Angela Aycock and reserve forward Keshana Ledet.

Aycock poured in 24 points, and Ledet scored all 15 of her points in the second half, including nine of 11 free throws.

"We just didn't play good defense on the ball, and they shot more free throws than we did," K-State coach Brian Agler said.

Fouls proved critical in the loss, as several Cats found themselves in foul trouble early.

"I think they came out (after halftime), and one of their points was trying to get us in foul trouble," senior Shanele Stires said.

It worked. K-State committed 17 fouls in the second half, putting Kansas in the bonus for the final 15:41 of the game.

"We played at their pace, and that hurt us," Stires said.

Stires lead K-State with 21 points. Freshman Brit Jacobson contributed 14.

Senior Shawnda DeCamp, averaging 16 points per game, scored only five and was held scoreless in the second half.

As a team, the Wildcats couldn't get into their offense.

"They pressure the ball really hard, and their guards are quick," Stires said.

"Our guards are young, and that's something that's going to come with experience."

The Cats went 4:48 without scoring in the early minutes of the second half before a baseline three-pointer by Missy Decker cut the Jayhawk lead to 13 and ended a 10-point Kansas run.

It wasn't enough to spur a K-State comeback.

The Hawks' lead never fell below eight, as they closed out the home win to move to 13-2, 3-0 in the Big Eight.

The Cats said they are looking forward to the rematch with Kansas on Feb. 12.

"I look forward to playing Kansas again," said freshman point guard Amanda Chamberlain, who returned to the starting line up in the Kansas game.

"Our guards will have a little bit more experience under their belt from the Big Eight play, and that might definitely help next time around," Stires said.

K-State returns home next weekend for a two-game home stand against Oklahoma State and Oklahoma.

"Oklahoma State is probably the best team defensively in the Big Eight. It's going to be a tough defensive game," Stires said.

"I don't study every waking moment. You don't have to be a study nerd to get a scholarship."

SCOTT ROTTINGHAUS

senior in biology and Marshall Scholarship recipient

K-State student chosen as Marshall Scholar

CHRISTI WRIGHT
Collegian

A K-State student is the recipient of a $40,000-$60,000 Marshall Scholarship to study at Cambridge University in England.

Scott Rottinghaus, senior in Biology, will leave in September for Cambridge to study for up to three years.

Rottinghaus was nominated for a scholarship in the spring of 1994. The nominees were interviewed by a University panel, and the group was narrowed to two candidates for the Rhodes and two for the Marshall Scholarship.

"I sent my application for the Marshall Scholarship and went for the regional interview in Chicago in November," he said.

Rottinghaus said he wasn't nervous about the interview, and he tried to enjoy the trip.

"I had fun with the interview in Chicago, and we got to stay at the Palmer House Hotel," he said.

Lately, Rottinghaus has been getting a steady flow of good news in the mail. In addition to receiving the scholarship acceptance letter, he has been accepted to several medical schools, including Stanford University and the Mayo Clinic.

"When I get back from England, I'll start medical school. I've worked out a deal with the schools to hold my acceptance and let me get in when I return from Cambridge," he said.

At Cambridge, he will pursue a master of science degree.

His master's research will focus on the DNA-dependent protein kinase, an enzyme that may have important immunological and oncological implications.

Rottinghaus is K-State's sixth Marshall Scholarship winner in the last five years.

Getting a Marshall or Rhodes scholarship is equivalent to a faculty member getting a Pulitzer Prize, K-State President Jon Wefald said.

Rottinghaus is thrilled with the opportunity to study in England. He said his parents are also delighted.

"My parents are very happy about it. My mother is already starting to plan a trip to Cambridge for my parents to come out and visit me," he said.

During the holidays, he was congratulated by the residents of his hometown of Westmoreland.

"When I was walking down the main street, people would ask me about going to England and congratulate me on the scholarship," he said.

Rottinghaus is looking forward to his trip and seeing a part of the world he has always been interested in.

"It's a great opportunity to broaden my horizons and absorb another culture. It's definitely worth putting off medical school," he said.

Rottinghaus said to receive a scholarship at this level, a student can study and still lead a normal college life.

"I don't study every waking moment," he said. "You don't have to be a study nerd to get a scholarship."

He has been active in the Arts and Sciences Council and as a student senator. Rottinghaus is also a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Kappa Phi honor societies.

He is the chair of the Academic Affairs Committee and has been recently working with the Faculty Senate on such matters as the P.E. requirement.

Rottinghaus also has worked with Richard Consigli, professor of biology, at K-State's Center for Basic Cancer Research for three years.

He has worked on several projects, including cloning and characterizing of ployoma virus structural proteins and sending proteins into space to see how microgravity affects them.

"I wish there were more people like him in the lab," Consigli said.

"I think he is a very special person, and K-State should be very proud of him."

Toxic waste adds to California flood disaster

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GUERNEVILLE, Calif. — Racing waters and flooded homes swirled propane tanks, antifreeze, pesticides, bleach and other poisonous materials into a toxic stew dumping into the ocean.

Toxic fumes overcame two workers Sunday as they helped clean up around the Russian River, which winds through the northern California wine country before emptying into Pacific waters.

The men, both members of the California Conservation Corps, were treated at a hospital for dizziness and nausea and returned to work after being released.

"There are some gnarly black oil slicks in there," Henry Belli, Conservation Corps member, said. "It smells like rotten eggs."

Workers donned protective clothing and gas masks to remove poisons such as antifreeze, pesticides, bleach and other materials.

Cleanup crews also found propane tanks, paint cans and chemicals within a mile of washing into the Pacific.

Some containers broke open, creating health hazards about 60 miles north of San Francisco, said Tom Daly, fire protection district engineer in Guerneville.

"As things get uncovered, then we're going to find more and more different hazards," he said.

"Any type of toxic material, being motor oil, gasoline, fuels, cleaning substances — all those things are considered hazards if they start to mix together."

The cleanup will take weeks, Daly said.

Kansas Senate to discuss reforms

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Two Senate committees will look at juvenile programs this week in what could become an effort to overhaul a system that many believe is in shambles.

The Judiciary Committee and the Public Health and Welfare Committee will conduct three days of joint hearings.

Legislators believe juvenile crime and reforming the juvenile justice system could be among the significant issues of the 1995 Kansas Legislature.

Sen. Tim Emert, R-Independence, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said lawmakers will be studying the juvenile justice system during the entire month of January.

Emert said he agrees with an assessment offered by a Sedgwick County district judge: "If the Legislature is just going to tinker with the juvenile justice system, then leave it alone."

Emert said he wants lawmakers to take an in-depth look at juvenile programs run by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services. SRS operates the state's four youth detention centers.

"A part of the problem is in the SRS bureaucracy," Emert said. "We have too much money and staff at the state level and not enough at the local level."

Sen. Sandy Praeger, R-Lawrence, chairwoman of the Public Health and Welfare Committee, agreed that more discussion of local solutions to juvenile crime problems is needed.

"We have a lot of creativity at the local level, a lot of commitment at the local level, and sometimes I feel that gets thwarted," she said.

She said she did not know whether a youth authority, a government agency that specializes in juvenile issues and programs, will be the end result of lawmakers' efforts to address crime this year.

Emert said he wants lawmakers to take a look at all the youth programs — not just those for juvenile offenders.

"We need to talk about children in need of care," Emert said. "We need to talk about real early offenders. This may sound simplistic, but truancy, for example."

■ In other matters, Sen. Audrey Langworthy, R-Prairie Village, the chairwoman of the Assessment and Taxation Committee, has scheduled hearings Tuesday on a proposal to repeal the 4.9-percent sales tax on labor services for remodeling.

■ The same day, the Senate will take final action on a bill that would repeal a 2.5-percent tax on labor for new construction and on energy used by factories. The measure is expected to pass the Senate and go to the House.

The hearing today comes after Republicans rejected attempts by Senate Democrats to amend the repeal of the remodeling tax onto the other tax bill.

■ Also on Tuesday, critics of the way the state accredits schools — called quality performance accreditation — will have their day in the Senate Education Committee.

Some lawmakers want to repeal the measure.

Brownback hopes GOP reforms continue

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Sam Brownback carries around a card containing a quote from Thomas Jefferson: "The moments for great innovation in society are few and far between."

Brownback is hoping this political moment lasts for a while.

The new 2nd District congressman said he believes voters said in November they want elected officials to re-examine the federal government and cut its size dramatically. They said they wanted less government and lower taxes, Brownback said.

But he said he is worried voters won't let the Republican political revolution last too long.

"We have to move fast in making these cutbacks, before the inertia of Washington eats the revolution alive," he said.

Brownback said he hopes to be in the thick of the cutting as a new member of the U.S. House Budget Committee. He said he had wanted a seat on the Ways and Means Committee, which sets tax policy.

He acknowledged that his refusal to sign fellow Republicans' Contract with America during his campaign didn't help him with new House Speaker Newt Gingrich. He said he is not sure the nation can yet afford all of the tax cuts the contract promises.

But he said he believes Gingrich and others see him as a dedicated reformer. For example, he carried a proposal on the House floor to require an audit of the House's finances.

"I am clearly a reformist," he said.

Brownback plans to vote for a proposed constitutional amendment to require a balanced federal budget, and he would like for it to contain a clause that says Congress must have a super-majority to pass tax increases.

Brownback said voters showed in November that they were ready to reconsider the past 60 years of government growth. He said Americans and their political leaders have to determine what programs or services are best handled by the federal government, state governments and private businesses.

"To me, it's not a matter of doing more with less," Brownback said. "It really is a matter of doing less.

"That will dramatically alter the relationship of the federal government to the people of America. We're going to have to cut the beast back, which I'm all for."

Mother could face death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNION, S.C. — Susan Smith covered her eyes and sobbed as the charges detailing how she drowned her two young sons were read in court Monday.

The prosecutor promised to seek the death penalty.

After her lawyer said she was not ready to enter a plea, Smith was led back to the defense table, wiping her hands across her face several times as her tears continued.

Judge Costa Pleicones entered an innocent plea on her behalf and set trial for April 24.

A gasp rose from the onlookers in the packed courtroom when prosecutor Tommy Pope said he will seek to have Smith put to death in the electric chair if she is convicted.

He said execution would be warranted because of two aggravating circumstances: the killing of two or more people and the killing of a child younger than 11.

Two months ago, Smith told the world that a carjacker had driven off with her boys, 3-year-old Michael and 14-month-old Alex, then finally confessed that she had sent her own car plowing into a lake with the boys strapped inside.

Among those in court today were Smith's mother and stepfather. Her estranged husband, David Smith, was not there.

At the end of the five-minute hearing, Smith sat back in her chair and sobbed.

At Smith's first court appearance two months ago, one woman shouted, "Hold your head up! You're a baby murderer!"

Jealous friend thinks ex is private property

Write to Cassie:
116 Kedzie Hall
Manhattan, KS
66506

Dear Cassandra,

Recently, I began seeing a guy that one of my friends used to date more than a year ago. She broke up with him to date other guys, because she didn't want a commitment. I knew that they were still friends even though she was always avoiding him.

When he showed interest in me, she decided she wanted him back. She thinks I betrayed her, and now I have neither boyfriend nor girlfriend.

My question is: Must a person get permission from all ex-boyfriends and ex-girfriends before dating someone new?

Signed,
Whoops, Her Private Property

Dear Whoops,

No, it is not necessary to ask an ex for permission to date someone. If it is clear they are not dating someone you are interested in, then I say go for it.

If your girlfriend has a serious problem with you going out with her ex, then I'd say she either regretted her decision to leave the guy, or she's just jealous you were having a good relationship with someone she couldn't. Either way, she seems to have a massive maturity problem.

You did say that you have no girlfriend and now no boyfriend. Does that mean the boyfriend dumped you as soon as he found out his ex was available? If that's the case, I'd say forget them both. They aren't worth it.

Dude, Phish collaborate

The Dude of Life and Phish
"Crimes of the Mind"
Elektra Records

Ratings:
★★★★ Sell plasma
★★★ Check it out
★★ Think twice
★ Giggle at it in bargain bins

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

Not just any dude off the street can compile a compact disc consisting of 11 songs recorded more than three years ago and get a label such as Elektra to release it.

The Dude of Life, otherwise known as Steve Pollak, is an exception. He just happens to have an experienced and popular band backing him up — the Vermont quartet, Phish.

The Dude of Life has collaborated with Phish before. He is credited with the lyrics of two songs from Phish's 1988 release, "Junta." The Dude of Life has also performed live with Phish.

The Dude of Life and Phish recorded the 11 songs, which comprise "Crimes of the Mind" during a two-week period in late summer 1991.

Why release the CD more than three years later? Perhaps the Dude wishes to capitalize on Phish's increasing popularity.

Phish's last four releases have each sold more than their predecessor. It has been about 10 months since Phish released "Hoist," so loyal Phishheads should be ready to snap up this latest bait.

So what will you get for your $15? You'll get some good jazz and blues tunes, some classic Phish jams and lyrics by the Dude of Life, which are sometimes nonsensical but often pessimistic.

"Bitching Again" and "TV Show" are good examples of the Dude singing the blues.

"Bitching Again" clearly seems like a joke. The slow tempo and the tone of the Dude's voice in "TV Show," however, seem genuinely despondent.

When he sings, "Life is a TV show, should've been canceled long ago," it sounds like he means it.

"Trials and Tribulations" describes an unwanted sexual advance by Captain Crunch toward the Swiss Miss Girl and the chivalrous response of Mr. Clean.

As for the music on "Crimes," Phish does not disappoint. Drums, keyboards, bass and guitar blend effortlessly, taking turns being the dominant instrument. Phish's characteristically tight, synchronous transitions are there to bind the music together. So after Phish takes you out into space during one of their improvisational-sounding expansive jams, they'll bring you back to the beginning in double-forte style.

"Crimes of the Mind" is a well-produced CD, but those of you who have seen Phish know these guys can achieve nearly studio-quality sound live 150 nights a year. Phish has built their following and honed their skills by touring frequently for about the last 10 years. While these guys may be jokers, their musical talent is no joke.

With Phish jamming and their old friend, the Dude of Life, waxing poetic, the addiction is inevitable.

You'll find "Crimes of the Mind" interesting the first time you listen to it. And if you don't mind something a little more musically complex than Ace of Base, after the third or fourth listening, you'll be hooked.

Rich Richards and Charles Faulk perform a radio-show scene during their performance of "Greater Tuna" at the Columbian Theatre in Wamego Friday night. The play pokes fun at small-town life.

Small-town satire

Columbian Theatre stages 'Greater Tuna'

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER
Collegian

The comedy "Greater Tuna" is running at the Columbian Theatre and Arts Center in Wamego.

"Greater Tuna" takes the fictional town of Tuna, Texas, which prides itself on being the third-smallest town in the Lone-Star state, and skewers it on the rotisserie of satire. The play features some 20 different roles, but all are performed by Charles Faulk of Manhattan and Rich Richards of Des Moines, Iowa.

There really is no plot to this play. The whole raison d'etre of the show is to poke fun at small towns with people so ignorant they don't know they're stupid. The show's Texan authors, Jaston Williams, Joe Sears and Ed Howard, did a great service by only slightly exaggerating small-town existence to the level of satire.

Audience members from small towns would probably best appreciate the characters in this play. Didi Snavely, portrayed by Faulk, owns the gun-and-knife store.

Almost everyone knows a Bertha Bumiller, one of Richards' characters, who is the mother of three maladjusted kids and one of the proud leaders of the town's censorship movement, even though she's not really too keen on literature.

Richards portrays Bertha and another woman with his handlebar mustache hilariously in tow. Faulk portays the ill-begotten children.

Richards plays one man who comes by OKKK, the 275-watt country radio station around which most of the play revolves in some way, to make announcements about the local "clan" meeting while snorting back mucus and rearranging himself.

Saying goodbye

Squib Cakes gives one last performance to Lucky BrewGrille crowd

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

LIVE MUSIC

They emerged from a sweaty little living room to thrill Manhattan with a funky mix of vocals, brass and keys.

In a short year and a half, Squib Cakes became one of the most popular local groups around.

George Zuniga, sophomore in business, said he has spent a lot of time listening to Squib Cakes perform, and their style makes them different from any group.

"They take a jazz approach to their music," Zuniga said.

Rhonda Lyne, a graduate student in biology, agreed that Squib Cakes has a unique sound.

"They're all really good," Lyne said.

"They play a lot of different instruments and have a full sound," she said.

A bystander looking at Squib Cakes would never guess that a year and a half ago Kevin Peirce, founder and lead guitar player, was ready to give up the music business.

For several years, his goal had been to create a big band with a lot of different sounds, Peirce said.

"We went through a lot of players," he said.

Finally, a local group called the Barn Burners broke up and offered Peirce the players he needed.

STEVE HEBERT/Collegian

Members of Squib Cakes jam together for the last time in front of a big crowd Thursday night at Lucky BrewGrille.

"I knew instantly we had a group, we just clicked," Peirce said.

Squib Cakes' unique talent stems from band members Richard Suderman, drums; Rod Mikinski, bass; Jason Bond, trombone; Tim Orindgreff, saxophone; Larry Costlow, singer; Rob Roman, piano; Kevin Hupe, trumpet; and Peirce.

"We have some of the best musicians around," Peirce said.

But the doors are closing on Squib Cakes.

Thursday, at Lucky BrewGrill, loyal fans saw the group perform for the last time. The crowd was young and old, student and professional. They were dancing and moving. Some people in the crowd were so caught up in the music that only the floor space limited their movements.

"I don't want them to quit. They're fun to listen to because they're not out there to be more popular, but to just have a good time," Nicki Frisby, junior in education, said.

But the one truth in the music business is change.

And the winds are shifting for Squib Cakes.

"We've had a really strong crowd since the beginning, and we appreciate them coming out tonight, but we were planning on finishing up in May and were just kind of stagnant," Peirce said.

Saxophone player Orindgreff will graduate in May with a degree in public relations and plans to return to the Berklee School of Music in Boston to continue his musical studies.

"I've had a lot of fun with these guys," Orindgreff said.

"When we started, we spent four or six nights a week in a sweaty living room," he said.

Peirce is also shifting gears in his music career.

"Turquoise Sol called me up and asked me to go on the road with them," Peirce, said.

Peirce attributes this opportunity to a stroke of fate.

"I'm not a real big fate kind of person, but I can't deny that fate isn't working out," he said.

Peirce said he is willing to take a chance with Turquoise Sol.

"I feel like just concentrating on music and sometimes you have to take a chance," Peirce said.

After a few practices with Turquoise Sol, Peirce noticed a significant difference in the feel of the music.

"I am broadening my playing," Peirce said.

"I didn't realize how secure I had become in one area," he said.

Security for fans may be found in the knowledge that other group members are sticking around Manhattan. Some will probably form a new group and others may join other groups.

But the sound of Squib Cakes is gone.

Thursday night, as the gig came to a close, singer Costlow reminded fans to remember the local legend.

"We're Squib Cakes — accept no substitutes," he said.

Super Dave gets own sitcom

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — You want to talk high concept?

Talk to the star of "Super Dave's Las Vegas Spectacular," airing weekend evenings on basic cable's USA Network.

"When we came up with this idea, pretty much all we had to say was, 'Super Dave buys a hotel in Las Vegas,' said Bob Einstein, whose unforgettable voice modulates from a hoarse, husky baritone to a falsetto that sounds like radio interference from a power drill. "We didn't have to say much more than that."

Einstein has been the alter ego of daredevil Super Dave Osborne since 1975, when the stuntman appeared on a show called "Van Dyke and Company."

"I came up with the idea of a daredevil who's going to go upside down, in a metal car, at 90 mph, and it's never been done before," Einstein said.

"We did it with a very tight, handheld camera. I get into this metal car. I'm strapped in. You pull back, and it's a roller coaster at Magic Mountain, with kids and nuns and everything else!"

"I ride the thing, and I pass out while everybody else is having a wonderful time."

A star was born. Since then, Super Dave has been crunched, sliced, diced, shocked, blown up and spectacularly mangled in specials, guest segments, his own cable variety series and commercials for Haggar slacks and Nike shoes.

This, though, is Super Dave's first sitcom.

After 20 years in character, Einstein's not at all tired of Super Dave.

"This character allows me to do anything I want, comedically, and get away with it," he said. "I don't have a burning desire to do 'the next step' because there is almost no next step. We're completely in charge of the show, so it's not as if I'd like to break out."

People experience 5 stages with grief

Dorothy Sarrand, psychologist with University Counseling Services, said people can also work through their feelings by writing them down.

There are stages that people work through when suffering the loss of a loved one, Sarrand said. She said that people first go through denial, then experience anger, and finally accept the loss.

"This acceptance opens the door for the grieving process, which is working through the pain and emotion of accepting that a loved one is gone," Sarrand said.

Balk said he disagrees with the idea that people go through grieving in stages.

"There are patterns of feeling that people commonly go through, but I do not believe this process occurs in stages," Balk said.

Uffman says that while people may learn to cope with their loss, feelings of loss are never totally gone.

"The pain never goes away," she said. "We may learn to live with it, but the pain doesn't disappear."

Only 5 percent of patients at University Counseling Services are primarily concerned with grief, Sarrand said.

Balk, who has studied bereavement at K-State, said 25 percent of students have had a family member die within the last year. Another 27 percent of students have had a friend die during the year.

"People frequently do not seek out professionals to help out in grief situations," Balk said.

The circumstances of the death may make the grieving process more difficult, Balk said. The death of a child, accidental death and deaths by murder or suicide are especially hard to work through.

With the recent death of Goodnow Hall resident Ross Taton, students are trying to work through grief, said John Danos, Goodnow director.

Daily meetings have helped to keep residents informed about the situation, Danos said. Counselors from University Counseling Services have also been available after these meetings.

The staff of Goodnow Hall has also been helpful in talking with residents individually, Danos said.

For more information about dealing with grief, students can pick up a free pamphlet developed by University Counseling Services.

Sarrand said there was also a grief support group last semester, and a similar group could be started this semester if students express interest.

Investigators are still looking

"There was no forced entry into the room and no signs indicating a struggle," he said.

However, investigators are looking for a professionally explicit answer.

K-State Police, Kansas Bureau of Investigation and Riley County Police have gathered forensic evidence to evaluate and expect many of the tests to take several weeks, although results will be followed wherever they lead.

Investigators are trying to trace Taton's steps that night.

Investigators have asked that if anyone knows the whereabouts of Taton between 3 p.m. Jan. 8, and 4 a.m. Jan. 9 to inform campus police at 532-6412.

"We are trying to get a time frame on his activities before his death," Mellgren said. "It is like looking for car keys."

Retracing Taton's steps has included talking to people who lived near him.

Although students living at Goodnow Hall have aided investigators in the search for information about Taton's life and habits, they are taking a break to honor the person they have talked so much about.

First-floor residents of Goodnow will be involved in the ceremony. All students are invited to attend and are welcome to give a testimonial in relation to recent events.

Crowd enjoys King vigil, memorial service

"I think it's in hibernation," Webb said. "It sort of skipped over a couple of generations."

At the end of his speech, Webb said he wanted everyone in attendance to dream, to hope, and to act on those dreams and hopes to honor King.

The Rev. Don Fallon gave the benediction.

Many of those in attendance said they enjoyed the memorial service.

"I thoroughly enjoyed it," Johnnie Montgomery, junior in psychology, said.

Montgomery also said he believes the dream shouldn't just be remembered on King's birthday, but everyday.

Stacy Baker, junior in finance, said the ceremony was enlightening.

"It kind of opened some eyes to keep the dream alive," she said.

Charles Riley, sophomore in architectural engineering, said all races need to come together.

"The general message was a need for closeness," Riley said.

Switzer said this week is to demonstrate support for King's efforts.

"I anticipate that we'll have a good turnout for our other activities," Switzer said. "I encourage the University and community to take part."

Acting, directing need help

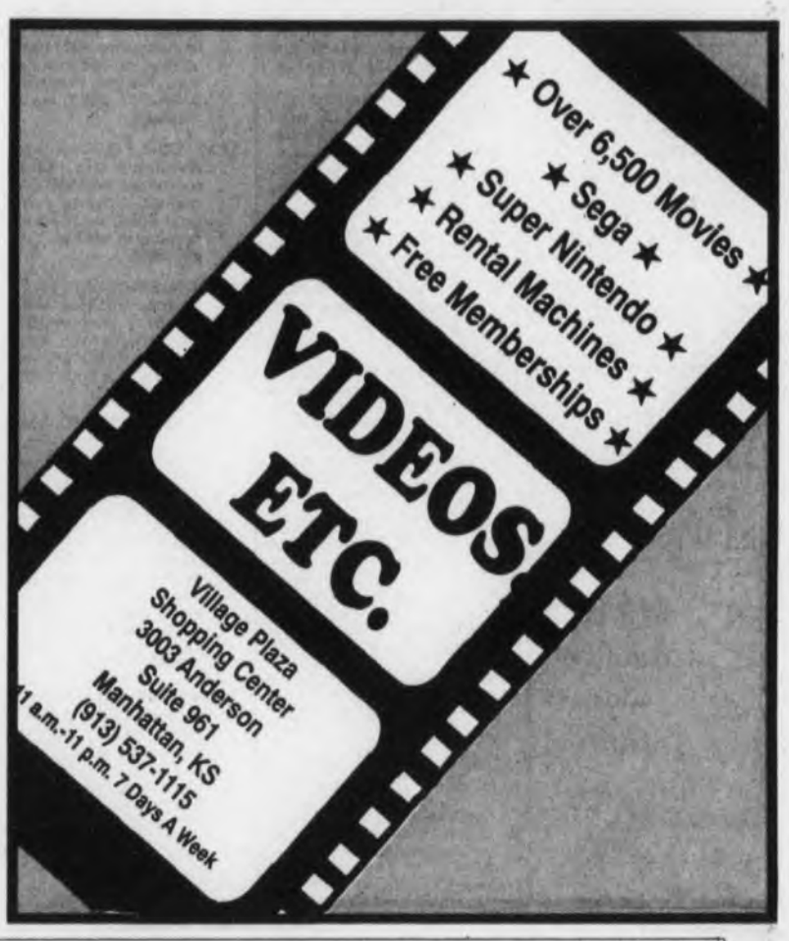
One of Faulk's more memorable characters is Petey Fisk, the man who is the Greater Tuna Humane Society. He goes on the radio to implore these people to be kind to the local ducks and fish. He's the token sensitive person in the town, but to a hysterical fault.

The weakest parts of this show are the acting and direction. Faulk, who lived in Arkansas, does the best acting job, but only because of his real-life experiences. Neither of the two men bring the characters to life beyond the level of charicature. They seemed to be imitating these lives rather than living them.

The direction suffered from poor pacing and timing. Some jokes were lost in Saturday's performance. This kind of show has to really move along because it has no true plot. Sometimes, it tended to drag.



In addition, costume changes were sometimes badly timed.

Even the best actors in the world would have had difficulty living up to the demands of this show. Both actors portray 10 characters and have consequentially quick costume changes. It's apparent to anyone in the audience how much hard work has gone into this production.

"Greater Tuna" is worth seeing. Small-town folk will have a much-needed chance to laugh at themselves and cosmopolitan theater-goers will enjoy the creative use of characters and sets.

On top of it all, the Columbian itself is dazzling. This is the theater's grand opening season, and no one should miss its splendorous interior. This production of "Greater Tuna" provides a great opportunity to enjoy the theater as well as the show.

Remembering Ross

Students, peers pay final tribute

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

The residents and staff of Goodnow Hall pulled together last night for a final goodbye to stabbing victim Ross Taton.

Taton's parents, Ralph "Dean" and Teresa Taton, hall residents and the entire staff of Goodnow Hall attended the memorial service at All Faiths Chapel.

"It's really been impressive to me to see how we've come together and helped each other," Shannon Moore, first-floor resident assistant, said.

Goodnow Hall residents Nizar Kafity, Chris Martin, Rich Allen and Moore assisted in planning the memorial service for Taton.

Donald Fallon, campus coordinator of religious activities, and John Danos, director of Goodnow Hall, also aided in organizing the ceremony.

Several students read letters dedicated to Taton and expressed how the death affected their thoughts and lives.

"You've impacted my life greatly," Martin said.

Taton's resident assistant, Moore, said the student taught him a lot.

In a short devotion, Fallon spoke of how hope and healing had arisen out of the compassion shown by the actions of students and staff.

Education focused on diversity

SARA SMITH
Collegian

Recognition of Martin Luther King Jr. Day will have a long-term effect on how our generation views race relations, Michael Holen, dean of the college of education, said.

K-State students, faculty and staff gathered Tuesday morning in Bluemont Hall to hear four panel members and a dramatic speaker as a part of the celebration of Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week.

Holen emphasized the importance of Martin Luther King Jr. Day in the upbringing of children.

"They are growing up with that as a part of their character, as a part of their emotional experience," Holen said.

Holen said recognizing the holiday was necessary in light of the racial tension in the country today — the same kind of tension that King tried to fight.

"Those problems have not gone away. They have gotten worse," he said.

Luther Pennell, senior in elementary education, said education must focus on teaching children tolerance and diversity.

"Kids look for differences," Pennell said. "They just do."

Doreen Barrett, graduate student in adult, occupational and continuing education, shared with the audience her struggle as a youth in segregated Chicago.

Although Chicago is not a Southern city, she said, it was in some ways a very racist place to live.

"I didn't have to experience not being able to drink out of a water fountain. I didn't have to ride on the back of the bus," Barrett said. "But there were other things."

Barrett said although terms like nonviolent protest and segregation might be tossed around, the next generation might not understand their implications as well as those who witnessed the civil-rights movement.

"Most of you weren't even born when most of this was going on," she said, looking out at

Parking woes continue; task force offers options

The parking survey results are in and tallied, but their interpretation hasn't led to a clear-cut solution.

The K-State Parking Task Force has until Feb. 1 to decide which solution they want to recommend to President Jon Wefald.

"It's going to be difficult," said Michele Meier, student senate parking and campus safety committee chair, and member of the task force.

In November, a survey was sent to 500 students, 300 faculty and 300 staff asking participants to rank four possible solutions to K-State's parking crunch.

The options were 1) do nothing, 2) restrict the sale of central campus parking permits, 3) construct a parking garage and 4) implement a limited shuttle system.

When the results were tallied, there was no clear favorite, Meier said.

According to survey results, when the 543 returned ballots were compared, the highest ranking was

Sunflower Showdown

■ 7 p.m. at Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence

■ TV: WIBW, cable channel 3

JEREMY CRABTREE

K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury hasn't fully embraced the K-State-Kansas rivalry this season.

And for a good reason.

K-State is currently sitting in last place of the Big Eight Conference with a 1-2 record, and the Wildcats have three games in the next seven days.

"It's hard to get up for just one certain team," Asbury said. "If a victory against your rival would count as three, then we would really get up for that game.

"I know that alums, students and other people really get into this game. However, we've got Iowa State, Oklahoma and Iowa State again coming up. You just can't put too much into just one game."

Don't get Asbury wrong, though; he knows how important the game is to K-State fans.

For example, there are Asbury's remarks, at his first press conference at K-State, when he was introduced as coach for the Wildcats.

"I want to go to Lawrence and expect to win," Asbury said. "I don't think that Allen Fieldhouse is that great of a place to play. I kind of like Bramlage Coliseum."

Those comments sparked Kansas coach Roy Williams to give Asbury the directions to Allen Fieldhouse.

"Down highway 177 and east on I-70," Williams said.

However, Asbury said there is no controversy.

"We can talk about controversies of Roy sending me a map on how to get to Allen Fieldhouse," Asbury said. "None of that will mean anything. I would gladly call Roy and ask him if we could go one-on-one, maybe settle the issue right there.

"I don't think he would be up for that. I think I could take him though. But, I don't think anyone will let that have any bearing on the Big Eight championship."

Instead of concentrating on the rivalry, Asbury said the Cats are going to have to start shooting better to have a chance in Lawrence.

During the Cats' last two Big Eight games, they have shot 17 percent during the first half of both games.

"I don't sleep much," Asbury said. "It boils down to having to execute your offense better. We're not the greatest shooting team in America, but we're not a 17-percent shooting team, either."

▶ REGENTS UNIVERSITIES DISCUSS TIGHTENING ENROLLMENT REQUIREMENTS

Students might face tougher enrollment requirements for the six Kansas Board of Regents universities in the near future.

At the Dec. 14 regents meeting, members met with the State Board of Education to discuss class requirements for high-school students and qualified admissions for universities.

"The goal is to work with the State Board of Education to ensure that students who graduate from Kansas high schools are ready for college-level courses," Stephen Jordan, executive director of the board, said in a press release. "When students enroll at regents universities, we want them to succeed academically."

State law currently allows that any graduate of a Kansas high school can enroll at a regents university. In 1987, the regents tried to get the Kansas Legislature to revise the open admissions statute, but no changes have been made yet.

Part of the interest in establishing admissions requirements stems from a regents report, "The Transition to Postsecondary Education: College Preparation in an Era of Educational Reform."

The report stated: "No fewer than 31 states are revisiting college admission standards and/or developing proficiencies for high-school graduation or college admissions."

Working with the Board of Education, the regents are trying to make the transition from high school to college easier.

"I think it is fair to say that at this point what is proposed is to jointly work together to help identify what is needed in the transition from high school to college," said Sharon Freden, assistant commissioner on the State Board of Education. "We want to try to make the transition as smooth as possible for students."

The Legislature approved Quality Performance Accreditation in 1992 as an attempt to assure quality in Kansas schools.

Under this, schools must demonstrate that students are learning enough to meet the standards set by the Board of Education.

QPA stresses learning outcomes, which are based on what the students learn in class and not what grade they receive in the course.

"What we are hoping is that schools don't base success on the completion of courses," Freden said. "More and more we use the base courses and what students learn to set goals for them."

The regents are working with the Board of Education to identify what effect learning outcomes will have on student preparation.

"The regents have recommended courses a student needs to take in high school to be successful in college," Jordan said. "If the Board of Education is using learning outcomes, we need to translate courses into outcomes to be sure our high-school graduates are academically prepared when they arrive at regents universities."

To reach this goal, the regents established a new committee to work with the Board of Education to help define the outcomes required for success in college, review the regents' stand on qualified admissions and advise whether or not that idea should be promoted.

▶ MANHATTAN RED CROSS VOLUNTEERS HELP FLOOD-STRICKEN CALIFORNIANS

California-flood victims are recieving help from more than 20 Kansas Red Cross volunteers, including two from Manhattan.

Norm Spurlock, Manhattan resident, is working out of Sacramento in family services. He is helping families deal with their losses.

Sheryl Lige, Manhattan resident, is working in Santa Rosa in procurement. She makes sure the shelters are adequately stocked with food and other supplies. Sheryl said they are using donated foods to keep the cost of the operation down.

"We're feeding anywhere from 4,500 to 6,000 hot meals a day," she said.

Lige said she has been doing volunteer work since the Manhattan flood in 1993. Lige said this experience is very rewarding.

Jackie Cleary, communications specialist for the American Red Cross Midway-Kansas Chapter, said the volunteers from Kansas have been sent to two staging areas in California.

"From there, volunteers are sent to centralized areas that need help," she said.

Cleary said volunteers perform a variety of duties, including everything from helping victims clean house to administrative work. Cleary said the administrative volunteers are important.

"There is a lot of paper work to be done," Cleary said.

Volunteer nurses are sent to work with staff in shelters to aid sick flood victims and to make sure the volunteers are in good health, Larson said.

Five Red Cross emergency-response vehicles from Kansas have been sent to help set up shelters and to patrol neighborhoods where flood victims are in need, Larson said.

Volunteers in the shelters are helping flood victims in a variety of ways. They are handing out food and relief supply kits that contain mops and other cleaning items. All of the items are provided free, Larson said.

Flood victims are also able to go to volunteers for help in replacing lost prescriptions and eye glasses, among other things, Larson said.

Volunteers who have been trained in counseling are helping families deal with the stress of being forced out of their homes and losing belongings, Larson said.

Cleary said counselors are also visiting hospitals to help people who have been injured in the flood.

Kalen Larson, director of communications for the Midway-Kansas American Red Cross chapter, said there has been no problem getting volunteers.

"A lot of people have come to us," Larson said.

The volunteers sent to California are required to take training classes, she said.

"Everybody has to take Introduction to Disaster," Larson said.

Larson said each flood volunteer sent to California has to stay a minimum of three weeks.

Attitudes toward the civil-rights movement are as important as civil-rights legislation, Cheryl Strecker, assistant University attorney, said.

Strecker and Jennifer Kassebaum, senior assistant University attorney, presented a history of civil-rights legislation and its significance Tuesday in the K-State Union.

Kassebaum began by giving an overview of early civil-rights laws and went on to discuss recent legislation. One law discussed was the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990.

Kassebaum said the ADA was passed to extend civil-rights legislation to people with physical disabilities.

Another legal action Kassebaum discussed was the Civil Rights Act of 1991, which reversed five Supreme Court decisions Congress interpreted as eroding civil rights.

The act included a minority-owned business preference program.

Kassebaum said the program is the object of a legal challenge in a case pending in Colorado. In the case, a contractor is suing for reverse discrimination.

Sheryl Strecker, assistant University attorney, speaks on the tensions universities experience between being a forum for free expression and a safe environment.

Strecker said state and local laws also played an important role in civil rights with legislation like the Kansas Act Against Discrimination of 1953 and Brown v. Topeka Board of Education.

The Kansas Human Rights Commission handles complaints and enforcement of civil-rights legislation.

Clyde Howard, director of unclassified affirmative action at K-State, said audits of departments and the concept of good faith are used to enforce civil-rights legislation within the University.

the students in the audience.

Barrett went on to encourage the audience to try to right the injustices they see in the world around them.

"Now, that's a risk. Everything's a risk. When you take that statistics test, it's a risk," she said.

"Amen," an audience member called out.

Anita McAllister, a graduate student in theater and a dramatic speaker from Birmingham, Ala., introduced her two monologues by sharing memories of her experiences with civil rights.

"The first lie I ever told my mother was when I went downtown to march when I was 13. I told my mother I was going to the movies," McAllister said.

McAllister said she was inspired by the courage of the protesters around her at a young age.

"I decided if they're not afraid, then I shouldn't be," she said.

McAllister went on to share her emotions with the room before she performed, recalling the violence that broke out at a protest she attended.

"I still feel that. I'm trembling now. My heart still hurts from that. And no, I don't want people to forget about it," she said.

McAllister also performed two dramatic monologues.

"Sweet Lorraine" was told from the viewpoint of a hotel worker who met King the day before he was assassinated.

The worker kept a vigil at the hotel, leaving only when she was kicked out because the hotel was being demolished.

"The Cold Walk" was performed through the words of a 9-year-old girl who met King during a civil-rights march to Montgomery, Ala., in 1965.

After McAllister spoke, the floor was opened to the audience.

Frank Armendariz, a K-State facilities worker, stood up to add what the holiday meant to him.

"I immigrated to this country when I was 2 years old," Armendariz said. "One of the first things I learned was it's not good to speak Spanish in school."

Armendariz attended the Manhattan public school system and said he remembers teachers making racist comments about blacks.

"Society's first gift to me was racism," he said.

Other people in the audience pointed out how discrimination can appear even today in college textbooks.

Wallace Gary, sophomore in computer engineering, said he noticed what he perceived as racist tendencies in the textbook for his Introduction to Sociology class.

"You can read it in the books, and you know exactly what they're talking about, even if they don't come right out and say that black people are under whites," Gary said.

All of the speakers stressed the importance of doing more than just talking about what King accomplished.

Weak response to parking survey hurts students

The parking survey results are in.

After a parking survey was mailed out to 1,100 students in November, 543 ballots were returned.

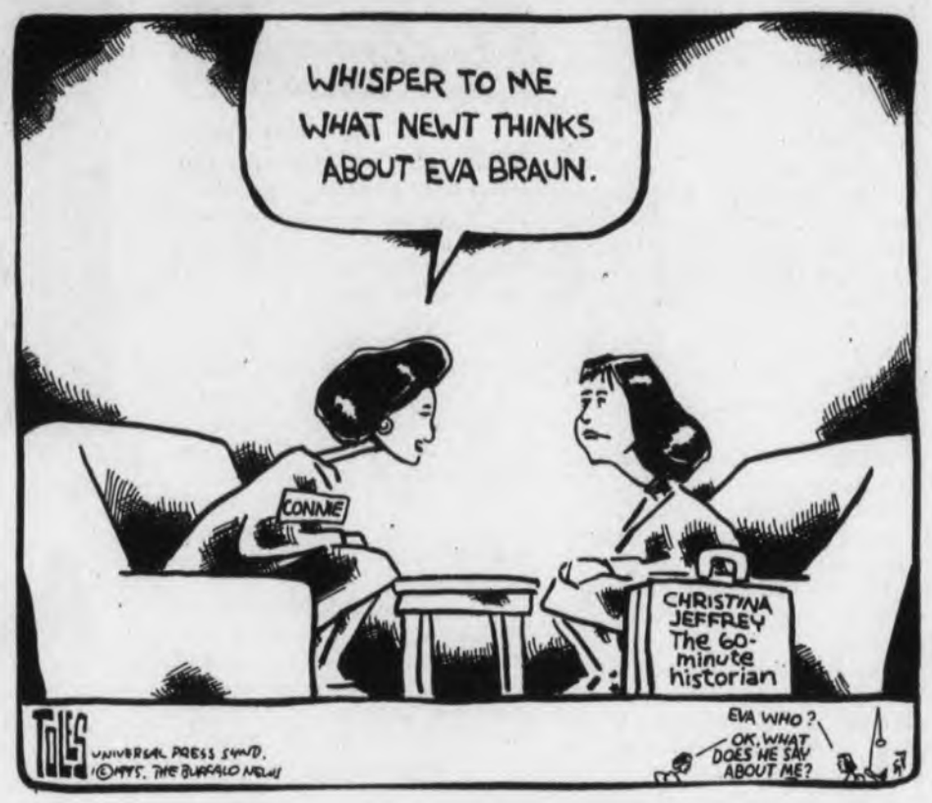
Restricted sale of parking permits emerged as the winning solution, followed by a $10.2-million parking garage.

However, because of the narrow margin of victory, the survey will probably not be the deciding factor when President Jon Wefald and his staff make the final decision on how to mend the parking mess.

So it looks as though the two month's wait was for nothing.

Five hundred ballots were sent to students, but only 187 were returned. Essentially, two-thirds of the survey's results reflected opinions by faculty and staff, and only one-third of the results came from students.

The reason 500 ballots were sent to students and only 300 to faculty and 300 to classified staff members was to give students more voice in the survey.



No wonder the survey results don't look as though they can fix the student parking problem. After all the griping going on, faculty and staff still managed to put in more response to the survey.

Not only will Wefald and his staff make the final decision about the parking problem Feb. 1, but their decision will come two months later than necessary because of a holdup over an all-important survey meant to include student opinion.

So if students don't like the decision, there's not much to say.

Their 500 representatives blew it.

Validine can't answer security problems

The recent death of Ross Taton has raised issues of awareness about personal safety on campus.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

While Ross' death is now being investigated as a suicide, the notion that he may have been a murder victim raised questions as well as awareness about what we as individuals and as a community are doing to promote safety and security on campus.

Death affords us, as survivors, an opportunity to reflect upon our own lives.

We can consider the fragility of our own mortality and what is being done to protect the lives of ourselves, our loved ones and other people.

This tragedy will be magnified if no lessons are learned from it.

Fortunately, more students, many of whom come from places where personal security is not as much of a concern as it should be in Manhattan, have begun to lock the doors to their rooms, look out for each other and travel in pairs.

More students are getting street smart.

This heightened awareness coincides with an ongoing debate about residence-hall safety. In the future, all residence halls will be locked 24 hours a day.

Access will supposedly only be available to students with a Validine ID card that will electronically open the doors of their own respective buildings.

Many on-campus students are disgruntled about this plan.

Besides the fact that it was created with little student input and will be an inconvenience, it alone will be woefully unable to augment residence-hall security.

The Validine security system can easily be defeated. A lost ID card becomes a key to an entire building.

Sometimes IDs can be used to open buildings that they're not meant to open.

Some schools that use the Validine system confiscate the IDs as a condition of graduation because they often can be used to open residence-hall doors long after they've been deactivated.

The Validine system is a weak barrier and does little more than give students, prospective students and their parents the false impression that K-State's residence halls are safe from the terrors of the outside world.

The 24-hour lockdown of the residence halls will only exaggerate this false sense of security while unduly inconveniencing students and their guests.

There is another measure that would improve residence-hall safety more than the 24-hour lockdown of the dorms.

This measure that doesn't make the assumption that the only reasonable threat of violence or theft comes from outside the building itself.

What residence-hall security needs more than anything else right now are automatically-closing-and-locking rooms and floor bathrooms?

To a person who has never lived on a floor with doors that shut and lock themselves, they seem as unnecessary as the 24-hour building lockdown, but on a closer look, they are clearly the better choice of the two.

Suppose that only 20 percent of a given building currently sleeps with doors unlocked.

This means that once a person gets in the building (regardless of whether or not that person lives in it), there is a one in five chance of gaining entry into a room to burglarize, assault, rape and even kill.

"The 24-hour lockdown of the residence halls will only exaggerate this false sense of security while unduly inconveniencing students and their guests."

If all doors in that building were locked, there would be a considerable obstacle to committing these crimes. In fact, the would-be criminal would probably never even enter the building in the first place.

Even though they would lock upon closure, these doors could easily be propped open during waking hours to prevent isolation and to maintain a sense of community on the floors.

Why have bathrooms that lock from the outside?

Many students would invariably lock themselves out of their rooms and the bathroom when they go to do their business.

If the only way to gain entry into the bathroom was with a key from that floor, students would remember to bring them.

Students could loan their key when nature calls their guests, too.

Besides serving as a way to prevent students from locking themselves out, the room/bathroom key system would help keep peeping toms and thieves from hiding in the bathrooms and showers.

Some say carrying your key everywhere is a drag, and indeed it is until you get used to it.

It's a small price to pay to keep a person from outside or even downstairs from robbing your things, beating up your friend or raping your girlfriend because a door happened to be left unlocked.

Naivete shouldn't be so cruelly punished.

A locked door may not have saved Ross, but it may save you or someone you know.

For now, more people are locking their doors and K-State is posturing to make its residence halls appear safer than they really may be.

Have any lasting lessons been taught to the University?

For everyone's sake, we must insist these lessons be heeded.

Cures for morning moods

KADY MASSEY

I'm about to marry an addict, but it's OK because we're both addicted to the same thing.

We both get weird and irritable if we don't get our fix.

The mornings are tough without it, and it's almost impossible to get through the day without two or three hits. We use it to relax at night and with our friends. I know we're not alone in this because our drug of choice is available practically everywhere, depending on the size of the dosage.

Yes, I'm talking about that nation-wide problem, caffeine. Ever since a bunch of Boston rabble-rousers dumped some tea into the Atlantic and changed the drinking habits of this country, caffeine has been a problem. As a case study, I offer up my boyfriend Darren. I'll talk about me later.

Darren and I have been dating for more than a year now and see each other every day, so I feel that I'm qualified to discuss his drinking habits. This man is a bona-fide caffeine addict; he gets headaches around 3 p.m. every day and feels kind of grouchy if he doesn't get his dose.

He gets his fix from soda (or pop if you were raised in the Midwest), so he's more subtle than some people I've run across.

My darling knows he has a problem but is not real eager to change at this point. His addiction is fairly new, so he doesn't drop 30 or 40 bucks a week on cases of Pepsi, and I've never seen him walking the streets looking for loose change to feed into a Coke machine. A friend of mine did just that before he could admit he had a problem.

I suppose I should be thankful it's just soda and not coffee. All the coffee addicts I've ever met have turned ugly without that cup in their hand. As a matter of fact, I used to be one. The whole thing started about two or three years ago when I was a senior in high school and started drinking coffee during finals week, just to get me through. Since neither of my parents drink the stuff, that was the end of that.

"I know we're not alone in this, because our drug of choice is available practically everywhere, depending on the size of the dosage."

Then I got a job on a farm working for a milo researcher who only drank coffee. Since it was the polite thing to do, I developed a taste for java in the morning.

After that job ended, I moved to Salina and got hired for a graveyard shift in a convenience store, so now I was drinking coffee around 10:30 at night to get going. I would then drink steadily throughout my shift, go home in the mornings and stare at the ceiling until I fell asleep.

When I finally quit that job, I became a waitress, which studies have shown is the most stressful occupation a person can have after air-traffic controller. I've been a waitress ever since.

At some point in the last year or so, I realized that coffee was a handicap, so I've weaned myself off coffee to hot tea and pop.

I think that one of these days I'll probably be able to walk by a soda machine without slowing down.

If you think you, or someone you love, may have a problem, look for these signs:

- Shakiness. If they can't pick up small objects or write their name before noon, be concerned.
- Alienation. If they only hang around other users or drink alone, urge them to seek help.
- Deception. You'll see this when they try to hide their addiction, claiming they only drink socially; or buy a cappuccino machine and try to write it off as a business expense.
- Physical changes. Their sweat smells like espresso. They have a burned tongue all the time from drinking hot coffee too quickly.
- Desperate actions. You walk into the kitchen and find them on their back with their mouth under the filter basket of the coffee maker waiting for those first few drops. That is the sign of a serious caffeine junkie.

Caffeine can be used safely, and it does have its uses. Where would we be today without the ladylike tea party?

But when you find yourself revering Juan Valdez and his donkey as gods or bowing in the direction of Colombia, stop, take a step back and drink a glass of water.

▶ MARTIN LUTHER KING JR.

Later messages by King should be heeded

Dear editor,

I share the frustrations over present-day racism and lack of equal opportunity expressed by Martin Luther King Jr. Day celebrants quoted in Tuesday's Collegian. On this holiday, we tend to venerate the man who delivered the inspirational 1963 "I Have a Dream" speech. But King, too, became frustrated and was radicalized by four subsequent years of struggle against a powerful and violent system. For example, this is what he said in May of 1967.

"On this holiday, we tend to venerate the man who delivered the inspirational 'I Have a Dream' speech."

"We have moved from an era of civil rights to the era of human rights, an era where we are called upon to raise certain basic questions about the whole society.

We must recognize that we can't solve our problems now until there is a radical redistribution of economics and political power. ... We must see now that the evils of racism, economic exploitation and militarism are all tied together. ... the whole structure of American life must be changed. America is a hypocritical nation, and we must put our own houses in order."

If our country ever is to fulfill the dreams laid out by the Dr. King of 1963, we'd better pay attention to the Dr. King of 1967-68.

MAKING GRADES in the house

Fraternity, sorority members take advantage of special programs to keep their academic heads above water

> "The purpose of waiting is to see if they can make the grades and have more time to see if they will fit our house."
>
> LAWRENCE ANDRE
> Acacia fraternity member

For members of fraternities and sororities, grades can mean more than a part of your resume — they can be the difference between staying in the house or not.

Members of the Chi Omega sorority know their house is one of the few greek houses that don't initiate the new pledges until grades are out for the first semester.

"Having initiation after grades are out is more of a motivator than a stress," Mary Keller, freshman in elementary education, said.

"Getting good grades your first semester gives you a good start to build on as well as working toward initiation. It's killing two birds with one stone," Keller said.

Acacia fraternity also initiates after the first semester.

"The purpose of waiting is to see if they can make the grades and have more time to see if they will fit our house," Lawrence Andre, senior in industrial engineering, said.

Houses are looking for students who are academically successful, Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said.

Last semester, the all-fraternity GPA at K-State was 2.737, but the all-male average was 2.658. The all-sorority average was 3.106, but the all-female average was 2.912.

"The greek GPAs are always above the average. Houses are looking for potentially good students that will do well in school and stay in school," Robel said.

Greek life can be a balancing act between having fun and trying to succeed academically.

"They always push studying over going out, but they want you to have fun. It's important for every sorority to have a high GPA. College is a unique experience, but getting good grades is always important," Keller said.

As for those students who have trouble making their grades, some houses have ways to help.

Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, like many other houses, has a study-buddy system.

"Usually you are paired up with someone in your field or major. It is someone who is older and has already taken the classes so they can help you," said Sam Anderson, a Theta freshman in physical therapy.

Most sororities also have study hours at their houses for incoming pledges. Study hours are completed while an executive is present. After the first semester, the number of monitored hours is dependent upon the individual member's GPA.

Fraternities are a little different because most pledges live in-house, Andre said. The Interfraternity Council requires houses have 15 study hours per week.

Acacia meets this requirement by scheduling study hours from 7 to 10 p.m. Sunday through Thursday. Members are expected to be there unless there is a legitimate reason for missing, such as a class, test or meeting.

Study files also serve as a good resource for those in the greek system. They contain pictures, outlines, old tests and other helpful information for students taking classes. Students who have taken a particular class add what they think will be useful to the file. It can also serve as a reference to see who has taken the class before.

"But it does not contain the answers. For example, on the biology test, our house did not have the answers. We are cool in that way," said Julie Miller, freshman in pre-nursing of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority.

Even with this help, some people have low GPAs and go on probation. The Pi Kappa Phi fraternity has two categories, Justin McFall, sophomore in math, said.

"Associates can't be initiated unless they make a 2.3, and actives must maintain a 2.0," McFall said.

If they don't make the required GPA, Pi Kapps are placed on social probation and have a single semester to bring their grades up. If the grades do not improve after the second semester, the students are dismissed from the house.

The members may take part in the social activities while on probation, but only as designated drivers or in other administrative capacities. They are not allowed to participate in the function itself, McFall said.

The scholarship chairman often plays an important role in coordinating all of the above activities. Bryce Palmgren, junior in biology and pre-medicine, currently serves in this office for the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

Palmgren talks to new members to give them advice, establishes study hours, enforces quiet hours in the house and tries to keep the study files up to date, he said.

So while a few may not make the grades in the greek system, most do quite well with all the help available.

"All the girls have been really wonderful. They really want you to succeed, do well in school and be happy," Keller said.

It was a tale of two halves.

The first half was one in which the Cats struggled, shooting a mere 17.1 percent, committing nine turnovers and scoring only 16 points.

In the second half, the Cats recovered and made a run at the Tigers, but the end result was a loss. Missouri beat K-State 67-61.

"It's frustrating. It's frustrating for me and everyone as a team," said Tyrone Davis, who scored 13 points and hauled in eight rebounds.

"Two nights in a row, we shot 17 percent in the first half," said K-State coach Tom Asbury, whose team fell to 1-2 in the Big Eight and 10-5 overall.

Asbury

The other night that Asbury was referring to was the 78-56 drubbing at Nebraska. In that game, the Cats opened the first half shooting 17 percent from the field and entered the locker room down by 18 points.

"You're not going to get a real psychological lift when you shot 17 percent," Asbury said. "We just didn't hit the darn basket. You can't expect to beat anybody doing that.

"We're not the greatest offensive team, but we've got to be a lot better than that."

K-State never recovered from the 18-point deficit at Nebraska, but things were a little different in Columbia.

Mizzou's first-half shooting wasn't stellar either. The Tigers shot 29 percent, which included one-of-seven field-goal shooting from Mizzou's leading scorer, senior guard Paul O'Liney, who finished with 15 points, five points under his average.

"We had a lot of soul-searching and a lot of talking after the Nebraska game," Asbury said. "The effort was there tonight. The execution wasn't.

"There is a big difference between tonight and the Nebraska game," Asbury said. "We took terrible shots against Nebraska. We took pretty good shots tonight. We just missed them."

Even though K-State shot poorly in the first half for the second-straight game, the Cats felt fortunate that they were still in the game.

"It was a miracle that we were still in the game shooting 17 percent," Mark Young, freshman guard, said.

"Even though we were shooting bad offensively, we were still in the game," said Demond Davis, who led the Cats with 15 points, 11 rebounds and three steals.

"The second half a lot of them went in. We shot a lot better," Davis said.

K-State did shoot much better in the second half. The Cats came out shooting 46 percent and outscored Mizzou in the half 45-44.

K-State women's basketball coach Brian Agler has always stressed defense to his team.

Unfortunately, it was Marian Washington and her Jayhawk defense standing tall when K-State visited Kansas Sunday.

Shawnda DeCamp was held to five points on one-of-six shooting as the No. 14 Jayhawks handed the Wildcats their first loss of the Big Eight conference season, 73-62.

"We didn't do a good job of getting her open," Agler said. "But she's got to be part of that, too. She has to be more than a one-dimensional three-point shooter."

The Cats never seemed to get into their offense, uncharacteristically committing 24 turnovers, with only 10 assists.

"They pressure the ball really hard, and their guards are quick," K-State post Shanele Stires said.

"Our guards are young, and that's something that's going to come with experience."

Stires led the Cats in scoring with 21 points, including seven-of-eight from the free-throw line. Freshman wing Brit Jacobson added 14.

The K-State guards were tested on defense as well. Jacobson and freshman point guard Amanda Chamberlain shared time guarding all-America Angela Aycock.

"When you play someone who's known everywhere, you're going to be like, 'Wow, I'm guarding her,'" Chamberlain said.

"But I knew if we played defense like we could, and if I guarded the ball one-on-one like I could, we'd be OK," she said. "We obviously didn't do that."

The defensive letdown led to foul trouble for the Cats. K-State was called for 17 second-half fouls and put Kansas in the bonus for the final 15:41 of the game.

Colston overcomes obstacles in life

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

While watching "Forest Gump" on the flight to Honolulu, Tim Colston saw a little bit of himself.

The pigeon-toed defensive tackle once wore leg braces like Gump and was the butt of several cruel jokes.

"I heard a lot of jokes about my legs, but I just tried to ignore them," Colston said. "It was pretty hard at times.

"I'd wear the braces to school, but as soon as I got there, I would take them off."

Colston's feet to this day are still turned to the inside because his family couldn't afford to continue with the sequence of braces needed to complete the treatment.

At one time, doctors even considered breaking both of his legs and resetting them.

However, Colston's legs don't seem to matter now.

He earned third-team all-America status at the end of this season.

"I'm still the same old Tim Colston," he said.

"My teammates try to hype things up about the all-American thing, but all I can do is just play."

The soft-spoken native of Tampa, Fla., said he much prefers to lead by example rather than with words.

The statistics back up this claim.

Colston racked up 39 tackles in three weeks against Nebraska, Colorado and Oklahoma.

Thirty-one of those tackles were solo stops.

Colston was dominating in the Colorado contest with 12 tackles, 11 of which were solo, and two sacks for minus 18 yards.

"I've never been recognized as one of the top in the nation until now," Colston said.

"It still doesn't seem like a big deal to me. Maybe it hasn't sunk in just yet."

"A lot of guys wanted me to play in high school. I went out, and practice was fun, so I started to get into it."

TIM COLSTON

He said he never thought of himself as a football player at all until his sophomore year in high school.

He concentrated his athletic ability on wrestling until his friends talked him into stepping onto the football field.

"A lot of the guys wanted me to play in high school," Colston said. "I went out, and practice was fun, so I started to get into it."

At the end of his career at King High School, he was named to the first-team all-Tampa area squad by the Florida Coaches' Association. He was still only being recruited by a few NCAA Division II schools.

Then he caught the attention of K-State Co-defensive Coordinator Jim Leavitt.

"Coach Leavitt gave me a chance to play Division I football in the Big Eight, and it was all pretty much free so I couldn't pass it up," Colston said.

One thing no coach could ignore about Colston was his work ethic. Despite participating in football and going to school, Colston also worked at a local McDonald's.

During the football season, Colston would arrive at school at about 8 a.m. and go to practice when school was out.

He would leave practice at about 6 p.m. and then go to work at McDonald's from 9 p.m. until it closed.

When the football season was over, he went to work at 4:30 a.m. and then went to school.

He often worked on weekends during the football season as well as the off season.

"I worked there for three years while I was in high school," Colston said.

"I just worked for myself, because I wanted to have some extra money. I didn't think it was a big deal."

As for his future plans, which could very well include a career in the National Football League, Colston said he isn't taking anything for granted.

Colston is pursuing a degree in graphic design at K-State.

He said all kinds of art interests him, but he particularly works with human figures.

"I have a real fascination with human figures," Colston said. "If you're going for realism, it is real complicated.

"I've never had a lot of time to sit down and really try to draw something like that, but I'd like to try someday."

Despite the possibility of playing in the NFL as early as next season, Colston said he has never considered leaving college early for the professional ranks.

"I've never even thought about leaving early," Colston said.

Colston said he didn't consider going pro, because there are still things he wants to improve while in college.

"I think that would be a bad move. I still have a lot of things I can get better at."

Snyder writes to fans

To K-Staters and K-State student body, faculty and staff,

Snyder

Please accept our heartfelt gratitude for being there for our football team and program throughout the 1994 season (and in years past)

Any degree of success we may have achieved is directly related to your loyal support. We were terribly disappointed by our performance on Christmas Day, as I would expect you to be and even though most of you were unable to be with us in Hawaii, I know that you were with us in spirit.

Thank you for caring and a special thanks to all of those who came out to see us off and when we returned. True K-Staters are very special indeed. You have proven that.

Wishing you a prosperous new year.

Warmest regards,

Bill Snyder

Free throws do in Cats

"We had to go out and just make them shots," Young said.

K-State was behind for most of the second half, but the Cats made runs to keep the game close.

"We stayed patient. We knew somebody would step up," Davis said.

After falling behind by six after two O'Liney free throws, the Cats scored six unanswered points to tie the score at 55-55 with 4:22 left in the game. The Cats wouldn't get closer for the rest of the game.

From the 4:08 mark, K-State only scored six more points and missed five of eight from the charity stripe.

Tyrone Davis, who missed two of four free throws during that stretch, said missing the free throws was frustrating.

"I don't understand it," Davis said. "I hit all my free throws before then, but when it got down to the point, I missed two in a row."

Asbury said K-State's better second-half shooting will hopefully pull the Cats out of their rut.

"I hope so. We can't continue this first-half poor shooting," Asbury said.

Track teams capture 1st-place finishes

Duren, Dykstra qualify for NCAA championships at the Wildcat Invitational

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Both the men's and women's teams took first place in the Wildcat Invitational Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

The women captured the team title with 114 points. The closest competitor was Southwest Missouri State with 39.

The men scored 117 points to beat Southwest Missouri State, which finished second with 53 points.

Aside from the team's accomplishments, two athletes added their names to the list of provisional qualifiers for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

Provisionally qualifying means the athlete has surpassed the minimum distance required to enter the NCAA Indoor Championships.

Steve Duren and Wanita Dykstra qualified in the long jump and the high jump respectively.

Wanita Dykstra qualified with a leap of 5 feet, 11-3/4 inches. Dykstra transferred from the University of Toronto this fall. She recorded a leap of 6'3" during her high-school career.

"I'm happy with the jump for this time of year," Dykstra said. "If I'm jumping that well this time of year, I have to feel pretty good about how high I can go later in the year."

Steve Duren chalked up an individual accolade with an NCAA provisionally qualifying leap of 25'3-1/4".

Duren would have to leap more than 26 feet for an automatic bid.

"I'm very excited about the mark," Duren said. "It's really not a great jump for me, but it's great for my first meet."

The meet was Duren's first competition since June 1993. Last season he was red-shirted after transferring from Barton County Community College.

Duren, who has jumped more than 27 feet, said an automatic qualifying mark should come with a little more work.

"I wasn't hitting the board real well," Duren said. "If I could've gotten closer on the board I could have gone over 26 feet easily."

Travis Renner boosted the team's point total by competing in four events — the pole vault, the 55-meter hurdles, the high jump and the 1,600 meter relay.

Renner placed first in the pole vault, third in the 55-meter hurdles, second in the high jump and third in the 1,600 meter relay.

He will compete in the Wildcat Pentathlon Friday in Ahearn Field House.

The women's team took first place in 12 of the 15 events at the meet.

Sprinter Karissa Owens was a part of three of those first-place finishes. Owens won the 55-meter dash and the 200 meter dash, and she was a member of the winning 1,600-meter relay team, along with Lover McAlpin, Jill Montgomery and Belinda Hope.

Throwers Kirsten and Kristen Schultz placed first and second respectively in the shot put and the 20-pound weight throw.

Kirsten Schultz, an all-American in the javelin last spring, said it wasn't the greatest day she's ever had, but she was pleased with her effort.

"I kind of wanted to throw farther, but I'm not real upset with how I threw," Schultz said.

K-State will compete in Ahearn again Friday in the Wildcat Pentathlon and Saturday in the KSU Invitational.

Bietau: Early conditioning key to success

TODD STEWART
Collegian

Women's tennis coach Steve Bietau said the main focus of the team right now is conditiong.

Practices started back up Jan. 9.

Bietau said the preseason conditioning at Cottonwood Racquetball Club will continue for most of January, and the team will not really hit full stride until later in the month.

"Our early matches are considered conditioning," he said. "We consider that last weekend in January is when we get into full swing."

For player Karina Kuregian, this preseason conditioning may take on an even greater importance.

Kuregian and Bietau will leave Feb. 1 for Dallas and the Rolex National Indoor Championships, for which Kuregian qualified by reaching the finals of the regional competition in fall.

Bietau said the Rolex Championships showcases the top 32 tennis players in the country.

As for the rest of the team, he said it was a little to early to evaluate his team.

"We should have a much better indication next week," Bietau said.

Their first match is Jan. 23 in South Bend, Ind., against Notre Dame, followed by a Jan. 29 match against Utah in Topeka.

The team's first match after Kuregian's trip to Dallas is the New Mexico Invitational in Albuquerque, followed by home matches against Louisiana State and Creighton.

By that time Bietau said he hopes to have his team fully ready to compete.

"We really need to work on getting our timing back," Beitau said.

He also said playing together as a team will be important in determining the team's success.

"Everybody on this team has a chance to do well," he said. "But we're not so talented that we don't need everybody contributing."

trying to get us in foul trouble," Stires said.

Chamberlain fouled out with 4:17 remaining, and three players finished with four fouls: Jacobson, junior Lisa Gaitor, and sophomore Andria Jones.

Both Gaitor and Chamberlain collected all of their fouls in the second half.

The Jayhawks connected on 25 of 31 free throws.

Now, K-State will play seven of their last 11 games at home, beginning this weekend with a two-game home stand against Oklahoma State and Oklahoma.

"(Oklahoma State) is probably the best team defensively in the Big Eight. It's going to be a tough defensive game," Stires said.

"We have to pick it up in practice," Chamberlain said.

by Nikola Zytkow, junior in print journalism and psychology.

One Summer

Yellow truffles of paint peel away from the sunbaked house.
It creeps with green vines and baby birds nests in its larger cracks.

My Mama is standing on the crumbling steps, blending right into that house.
Her thin, yellow dress clings to her skin.
I can hear her calling our names.
But the words melt into the hot air.

My sister and I are hidden by the grass that tickles our faces like millions of little feathers.
We are making dandelion wreaths,
our hands sticky and yellow.

All of a sudden our laughter gets slower, hollow like a well
a decade deep.

My sister's face becomes a shadow that weighs me down with darkness and nostalgia.
For a brief second I close my eyes.

I wake up 12 years later,
a woman,
wondering where the two girls went,
searching for the laughter.

Sometime in the Night

Sometime in the night we woke up.
My daddy was calm and busy,
The crimson rug in his hands.
He opened the door to the other world.
The dark one
The one that made us crowded like mothballs in a corner.

My little brother's arm
Is at my leg, connected.
Grandma and Grandpa fit
Right into each other
Clutching a brown bottle
With a white skull head.
It looks at me and I stare back.
But I've seen it before.

"Don't breathe so hard," my mama whispers.
"Or we'll all be dead."
I try to take quick, quiet breaths.
Like sucking marmalade through a straw.

Upstairs the heels are walking around again.
I imagine their eyes jumping around the room.
"They're not like us," my mama said yesterday
Or was it a long time ago.
And what could they be like anyway?
Didn't they have a mother and father too once?

Been to the doctors, still wet the bed

Dear Cassie,
I'm 19 years old and still suffer from nocturnal enuresis (bedwetting). I have been to urologists, doctors, psychologists, etc. but to no avail. It's quite embarrassing. I don't know why it happens. But I think my roommate is catching on. In fact, she is starting to wonder why I do laundry so often. I can't afford a room of my own in the dorms. What should I do?
Signed Be-puddled

Dear Be-puddled,
I think you should consult another doctor. Have you been to Lafene? If not, call them at 532-6552 and make an appointment to see a physician.
Until you know exactly what it is that is ailing you, I suggest several things: not drinking any water for a few hours before bedtime, setting the alarm in the middle of the night for a scheduled "pottie break" and considering investing in a pair of adult diapers.

Japan quake kills at least 1,800 people

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KOBE, Japan — Survivors wandered battered streets Tuesday, devastated by a disaster that killed at least 1,800 people.

All in a city that was supposed to stand up to earthquakes.

Elevated roads and bridges that Japanese engineers boasted were quake-proof were broken at crazy angles, flung to the earth by the force of nature.

Motorists perished as their cars skidded off collapsing highways. Tracks and bridges for Japan's famous bullet trains were damaged badly enough to be out of action for months. Hundreds of thousands of survivors struggled to live without electricity, gas or water.

Hardly a block in this industrial port city of 1.4 million people had a house or building intact. Many streets were reduced to piles of rubble by the strongest quake to strike an urban area of Japan since 1948.

Across the bay from Kobe, Japan's second-largest city, Osaka, was also heavily damaged by the 7.2-magnitude quake that struck before dawn Tuesday. More than 600 aftershocks hit the area through Wednesday morning, including 60 that could be felt.

FAST NEWS

Up-to-the-minute information about the quake can be found via the World Wide Web at:

Commissioners like proposal

from the committee to the city manager's office.

There it will be determined whether the proposal falls within budget and conforms with the original agreement.

"I was very impressed with the proposal," Sydney Carlin, city commissioner, said.

"It covered a really broad spectrum of needs for the city and the University."

The committee's main focus was on capital improvements for 1996, Eric Carley, chairman of the committee, said.

He said the committee thought the collaboration of the Manhattan Public Library and Farrell Library was the best project.

The July 1994 annexation of K-State by the city of Manhattan called for a 1-percent sales tax to be implemented citywide.

The revenue generated through the sales tax goes into the City/University Projects Fund. This fund will be used for projects that are supposed to benefit both Manhattan and K-State.

If the proposals are accepted, they will be incorporated into the city's budget for the coming year.

Recommendations for projects in 1997 and on will be included in the city's capital improvements program, Mayor Helen Cooper said.

Roger Maughmer, city commissioner, said, "I think this represents a long and strengthened commitment between the city and University."

MEETINGS
City Commission

Manhattan City Commission reviewed recommendations on how to spend tax money raised from the annexation of K-State.

City/University Projects Fund Committee recommended six projects that would total $284,000.

The six priorities are as follows:

- A bikeway and emergency vehicle access, $84,000.
- Additional campus lighting, $40,000.
- University gardens infrastructure support, $35,000.
- A traffic signal at College and Kimball avenues, $72,000.
- Link the Manhattan Public Library and Farrell Library computer systems, $33,000.
- Student scholarships, $20,000.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

given to permit restrictions, followed closely by the garage.

Of the 500 student ballots sent out, only 187 were returned. Of those student ballots, the garage was the preferred choice.

Meier said because the survey results were so close, the committee may decide not to use the survey results.

"Just because the outcome leans toward one over another does not necessarily mean it is the option the task force will choose," she said.

The survey was not a campus vote, said Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance and chairman of the task force, and the committee is not bound to its results.

"The survey was intended as another way of collecting information for the task force," Rawson said.

The task force may decide to propose a combination of immediate and long-term options, or it has the right to consider one not on the survey, he said.

Meier said one example of this would be if the group decides to propose the building of a garage, then, in the interim, permits might be restricted as a temporary solution.

No matter what the committee decides, it will not be a simple decision, Rawson said.

"It is not a clear-cut choice of A, B, C or D," Rawson said.

Once the task force makes its recommendation, it will present it to Wefald, he said.

However, if the group decides to build a garage, the recommendation will also have to be approved by the Kansas Board of Regents and the Kansas Legislature.

Rawson also said, historically, universities have not had any problem getting approval for parking garages.

The University of Kansas has a proposal before the regents this week to approve the building of a second campus garage, Rawson said.

If K-State decided to build a garage, student permits will go up to an estimated $115 a year, faculty to $160 and reserved stalls would increase to $420.

This increase would go to paying off revenue bonds that would be sold to build the garage.

A 1,200-car garage would cost about $10.3 million, according to information distributed with the survey.

It would take two full years to plan and build such a garage. There is also the possibility the task force could decide to build two garages, one on each side of campus, Rawson said.

It has been generally agreed upon the garage should be near the Union. A second garage could be built around the northeast corner of campus, he said.

If Wefald would approve any of the other options, he would turn it over to the Parking Council to develop and carry it out, Rawson said.

If a shuttle system is established, the same increase in parking-permit fees would be made to cover operations costs, estimated at $525,000 a year.

User fees, shuttle passes and other parking revenues would contribute to shuttle expenses.

The shuttle would pick up students, faculty, staff and visitors at Bramlage and drop them off at one of eight drop points on campus. The buses would run on 10-minute intervals between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m.

People could ride the shuttle on campus from one location to another with the purchase of a bus pass or on a pay-per-trip basis.

If it is decided to only restrict permit sales, people living within a three-block perimeter of the central campus would not be allowed to purchase a parking permit on central campus.

This option has been projected to open up 550 spaces and could be implemented next fall.

Regardless of the decision, it appears some action will be taken soon.

Ron Downey, director of Institutional Research and Analysis, which carried out the survey, said the survey results were clear that people want something done.

"Anyway it is sliced, it is clear from all three groups that doing nothing is not a viable option."

Numbers 2nd to effort

If good faith is demonstrated in employment practices, exceptions can be made, he said.

"Numbers get to be secondary because they see you've made an effort to hire people who are qualified," Howard said.

Punishment for federally funded institutions that don't comply with civil-rights legislation can range from reinstating a wrongly fired employee to the institution losing its federal money.

Strecker also addressed the topic of hate-speech codes.

She said they were a bandage where major surgery is needed.

Strecker said universities experience tension between their obligation to be forums for free expression and their obligation to maintain a safe environment for students and staff.

Ron Gatewood, sergeant major at Fort Riley, agreed legislation will not accomplish all the goals.

Jayhawks to provide strong test for K-State game plan

Another area that concerns Asbury is the Jayhawk defense, which only allows opponents to score 70 points a game and shoot 37 percent from the field.

"It worries me a great deal. They've always been a great defensive team, and this squad is no exception," Asbury said. "Execution and shot selection will be the key for us."

Tonight's game will also be a showcase for two of the best guards in the Big Eight.

Kansas', Jacque Vaughn was an all-Big Eight selection last season, and K-State's Elliot Hatcher was the first player since Oklahoma State's Jon Starks to score in double-digits in his first conference game.

Elliot is expected to draw the assignment of guarding Vaughn.

"He plays so hard," Asbury said of Vaughn.

"He can draw fouls on Elliot because he is such a good penetrator.

"We're going to have to watch the match-up. We may have to switch up on them. He'll play 30-35 minutes if it's a close game. I would have him on the floor 40 minutes."

Aggieville's Scoreboard bar was filled with shouts of "Come on Cats" and yells such as "Come on defense" that could be heard all the way down the street.

The last minutes of the game were filled with periodic silences, and then talking quickly resumed. Even with the ensuing last seconds of the game, most students were supportive of the team and coach.

"Tom Asbury is a god," Jeff Fox, senior in pre-veterinary medicine said.

His buddies at the table nodded in sober agreement.

"He's the next dean of the Big Eight," Tim Kraft, senior in animal science and industry, said.

Shaun Roberts, senior in mechanical engineering, sat at a table close to the entrance.

"I thought the Cats played their best game of the year. It's going to help them in the long run," Roberts said.

Criticisms of the referees were on just about everyone's tongue.

"The referees were biased. They called too many fouls for the night," Kevin Hernandez, graduate student in electrical engineering, said. Hernandez, surrounded by a few empty beer bottles, said. "KU sucked."

"I think it was a win for K-State," Trevor Williams, senior in advertising, said. Williams said the game involved some of the worst officiating he had ever seen.

Ryan Michaelis, junior in marketing, already had payback on his mind.

"The last two possessions when we turned the ball over were crucial. We will get KU back when they come to our house," he said.

A couple of guys next to him shouted, "Yeah!"

Cody Downard, senior in park resource management, gave his opinion of the game.

"I didn't expect K-State to play such a superb game and keep it so close. But actually, they should have won the game, if it would have been a little better officiated," Downard said.

This support contrasted with some of the criticisms of the team voiced earlier in the game.

Michael Carson, senior in accounting, said he thinks this year's team is not as good as last year's.

"I'm surprised we're doing this well," Carson said of the KU-K-State game. "Asbury doesn't have the talent right now," he said.

"We need taller players," Michelle Inman, junior in pre-occupational therapy, said.

Kurt Chultz, fourth-year architecture student, said K-State hadn't had a good season since two years ago.

"I think we've shown a lot of character. I've got a lot more faith in our team this year than last year," he said.

Campaign regulations to be tackled

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Campaign regulations will be at the top of the Student Senate agenda at its first meeting of the semester tonight.

Jeff Peterson, student body president, vetoed the election campaign regulations passed by Senate in December.

Peterson's main objection to the bill was that it imposed no campaign spending limits.

"We must ensure that any student has the opportunity to run and hold a campus office regardless of their financial background," Peterson said in a letter to student senators.

Senate will vote tonight whether or not to override Peterson's veto, said Brad Finkeldei, student body vice president. It would require a two-thirds majority vote to override the veto.

If the override vote fails, there will be first readings on an amended campaign regulations bill, Finkeldei said.

Under the amended bill, candidates for student body president and vice president could spend an amount equal to 100 percent of in-state undergraduate tuition.

Candidates for Senate can spend the equivalent of 10 percent of tuition.

Students running for positions on Board of Student Publications, Fine Arts Council or Union Governing Board would be allowed to spend the same amount as 20 percent of tuition.

Union food evaluated

Consultant firm to help with enhancement

KRISTIN BRIGHTON
Collegian

The K-State Union has hired a firm to help decide the fate of food services in the Union.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said Thomas Ricca Associates, a food facility and laundry design consultant firm from Denver, spent two full days last week evaluating Union food services.

"They gave quite a thorough investigative effort to get the information they need to best give us their opinions," Connaughton said.

The firm will be giving Union enhancement committees a recommendation as to how the Union could best meet the campus' food-service needs, he said.

Connaughton also said the main issue is whether the Union can or should remain self-operational, as it is now, Connaughton said.

"The K-State Union has never gone down this road before," he said. "We've been self-op since 1956. We've only contracted out the post office and the ATM machines for service reasons."

There are several recommendations Ricca Associates could give the Union, Connaughton said.

The firm could recommend the Union make a contract with a private company to handle all or a portion of food service.

The Union could also bring in brand-name restaurants, like Subway, to supply food service.

Subway will soon be offering its sandwiches to students at the K-State Union and at Trotter Hall.

Feb. 1 is the target date for its grand opening, Linda Huffman, regional manager of Subway, said.

Manhattan area submarine sandwich shops were asked to send proposals in late December.

Jack Sills, Union director, said the Union chose Subway because the company's management showed enthusiasm and also had a K-State connection.

"They had more interest in coming here, and we're happy that they are," Sills said.

The Subway franchise that will be in the Union is owned by two K-State graduates, Don and Dennis Rottinghaus.

Non-violence, violence debated by panel

KIMBERLY KIRCHER

Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream was that Americans hold true to the declaration that all men are created equal, said Edwama Taylor, a senior in sociology, American ethnic studies and pre-law.

Taylor and several other students were members of a panel discussion about King's dream Wednesday in the K-State Union.

"Diversity is America's greatest strength," she said. "It is easy to take for granted the freedoms we have today."

Taylor said her first memories of King are listening to her grandmother's recordings of King's speeches as a child.

"It was a symbol of hope," she said.

King's message of nonviolence made sense to her, Taylor said.

"I do believe that the struggle cannot be won by violent means." Taylor said.

Thurman Williams, a panel member and senior in anthropology, American ethnic studies and Latin American studies, disagreed.

"There has to be a threat of violence to work out a non-violence solution," he said.

Williams said when he was young, King was a cultural hero.

"You could see him, but not really feel and touch," he said.

Williams said King's dream of non-violence wasn't a reality

NEWS BRIEFS

▶ PROSECUTOR PROPOSES INDEPENDENT AGENCY FOR JUVENILE PROGRAMS

TOPEKA (AP) — A Geary County prosecutor has suggested to lawmakers that they create a new state agency for juvenile programs.

"I'm not necessarily suggesting that we have to spend a lot of money on a new government department," Geary County Attorney Chris Biggs told lawmakers on Wednesday.

He said the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, which handles an assortment of children's programs, is not set up administratively or philosophically to handle juvenile criminals.

Presently, SRS operates four youth centers for juvenile offenders. It also operates a variety of community programs for people younger than 18 who break the law and for children in need of care.

Biggs said the proposed independent agency could oversee juvenile courts and the incarceration and rehabilitation of juvenile offenders, including the use of military-style boot camps.

The Senate Judiciary and Public Health and Welfare committees are holding joint hearings this week on the juvenile justice system.

Biggs told the committee that SRS serves two types of youth: children who are in need of care, but are not delinquents, and juvenile criminals.

He said SRS cannot cope with some of the bitterly violent adolescents that are coming into the system.

Biggs also said the state needs to create a maximum-security facility to house violent offenders, a kind of juvenile prison, and to provide more community corrections programs for nonviolent juvenile offenders.

Sen. Tim Emert, R-Independence, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said after the hearing lawmakers should start to focus on the idea of creating a separate agency to handle juvenile offenders.

"That's what we need to get down to," Emert said.

Emert said the two types of programs — for indigent or abandoned children and for juvenile offenders — are simply incompatible.

Biggs also said authorities have no opportunity to intervene with youngsters until they get into serious trouble.

"We're so busy getting the cows off the road, we don't have time to fix the fence," Biggs said.

In Junction City, he said, a special mayor's committee wants to sponsor a deferred prosecution program for juveniles who commit certain serious felonies, such as burglary and theft.

A youngster would be placed under intensive supervision by professionals and volunteers, he said, and require community service, restitution, counseling, school attendance and participation in youth activities.

Biggs complained that the state's Sentencing Guidelines, passed in 1992, place a greater emphasis on criminal history. A youngster who has a record even for a minor offense cannot be placed in a deferred prosecution plan, he said.

▶ POPE PRAISES MOTHERHOOD, AGAINST ORDAINMENT OF WOMEN IN CHURCH

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Pope John Paul II praised motherhood Thursday in a stop at a cathedral where he honored a 19th-century Australian nun who battled the male church heirarchy to found an order of sisters.

"It must be clear that the church stands firmly against every form of discrimination which in any way compromises the equal dignity of women and men," the pope said at St. Mary's Cathedral on the second day of his Australian stop.

The pope said he was convinced that the role of women is "in no way diminished but is in fact enhanced by being related in a special way to motherhood — the source of new life — both physical and spiritual."

The pope was breaking no new ground. But his words were expected to resonate in Australia, which has a strong feminist movement and where the rival Anglican church recently began ordaining women as priests.

Shortly after his arrival at a rally in Sydney, a small group of protesters held banners calling for the ordination of women — a concept vigorously opposed by the pope.

"Women will be allowed to become priests eventually," said protest leader Marie Louise Uhr, "maybe not during this pope's lifetime, but it is inevitable."

On Thursday, the pope is scheduled to beatify Mother MacKillop at an outdoor ceremony expected to attract about 200,000 worshipers.

Mother MacKillop founded the Sisters of St. Joseph in the 1860s to bring charity and education to the poor. The order continues her social welfare and teaching mission in various countries.

Beatification is the last step before possible sainthood.

The pope, slow-moving but smiling, shook hands and touched the faces of hundreds of flag-waving children outside the cathedral, built on the site of the first Roman Catholic church in Australia in 1821.

Mother MacKillop was excommunicated for five months in 1871 by a local bishop in a struggle for control of the order.

The Vatican intervened and lifted the excommunication. However, she was regularly at odds with the senior male clergy until her death in 1909.

During an evening address Wednesday, the pope appealed for religious and ethnic harmony throughout the world.

Flanked on stage by Protestant, Orthodox, Islamic and Jewish leaders, the pontiff called for further ecumenical dialogue with an aim to fill Christ's wish at the Last Supper that all may be one.

John Paul also praised the freedom, justice and tolerance that has contributed to Australia's multicultural society. The Pacific nation's growth has been fueled by immigration, first from Europe and more recently from Asia. Now, one-third of its people come from a non-English-speaking background.

More than 3,000 people gathered at Kingsford-Smith International Airport to greet the pope on his arrival from Papua New Guinea earlier Wednesday.

▶ KING WEEK LECTURE

Brown will speak of dream

Brown

The host of one of the nation's longest-running black-affairs TV series is scheduled to speak at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

Tony Brown, host and executive producer of "Tony Brown's Journal," will present a Convocation Lecture for Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week.

Veryl Switzer, director of the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week Committee, said he chose Brown after he heard him speak.

"I was very impressed. I thought that he would be good therapy for our students," he said.

"He has the message."

Brown is known for being a powerful speaker in Washington, D.C., Switzer said.

"He deals with electric issues that impact the lives of us as individuals and as a whole," he said.

Virginia Moxley, chair of the University's convocation committee, said Brown's speech will most likely focus on solutions to race-relation problems in the United States.

"His solutions will probably be based largely on personal initiative. That's the focus he tends to take," he said.

Switzer said another reason Brown was asked to speak was to remind people of King's dream.

"I'm sure he'll remind us of the contributions of Dr. King and will tell us what we can do to fulfill the dream," he said.

Brown is well known for encouraging African Americans to become leaders, Moxley said.

"He challenges black America to take leadership roles in perpetuating its own course," she said.

Moxley said she expects Brown's speech to inspire everyone who attends.

"By all accounts, Tony Brown is an extraordinarily dynamic speaker. He's definitely worth hearing," she said.

Switzer said Brown's speech is important for everyone in the community of K-State and Manhattan to hear.

"We cannot afford to miss this. He has a strong message," he said.

▶ DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

Crisis Center volunteers committed to helping victims

Students who would like to volunteer to help victims of sexual abuse and domestic violence are invited to attend a three-day training session at the Crisis Center starting this weekend.

Paula Barrows-Hunt, a caseworker at the Crisis Center, said the trainees will learn how to work with the victims, receive a volunteer manual and listen to guest speakers, such as a representative from the legal department, a police officer and a victim.

Barrows-Hunt said the victim's story of how she survived the abuse and how the Crisis Center has helped her deal with her past brings it home for the volunteers.

"They get a greater understanding of what it's like to be a volunteer, what the victim expects and what she needs the most," Barrows-Hunt said.

Melissa Breiner, senior in human development and family studies and a former volunteer who is currently an intern, said hearing the victim speak was a highlight of the training program.

"It moved you, made it all real and brought it to life," Breiner said. "It's scary that it really happens. You thank God that it's not you."

Breiner said the 20-hour training session was worthwhile and a good learning experience.

"It went fast because there was so much information to absorb. I thought it would drag out, but before I knew it, it was over, and I had learned a lot."

Melissa Divine, a client service coordinator, said the volunteer training program has been in place since the Crisis Center opened 15 years ago.

"It has grown phenomenally and continues to get bigger every year," Divine said. "Along with the increase in volunteers has been an increase in the demand."

Divine said the Center, which is funded by grants, private donations, the United Way and the city of Manhattan, houses about eight women and their children on the average. The Center offers counseling, crisis intervention support groups and transportation to the women.

"We basically give a woman everything she needs if she has to leave her home in the middle of the night," Divine said.

Barrows-Hunt said the Crisis Center has a volunteer core of 150 people, with 70 active members. She said she expects about 30 people to attend the training sessions.

"We've had upward of 30 people, and I expect it will hold true for this training," Barrows-Hunt said.

Divine said the people who attend the training session turn out to be dedicated volunteers.

"Anyone who is willing to go through a 20-hour training session about sexual violence wants to do something about it," Divine said.

Barrows-Hunt said the Crisis Center is looking for volunteers who are committed to the cause of sexual abuse and willing to learn about the issues.

"We need someone who is willing to be pretty firm about what domestic violence is and how they feel about it," Barrows-Hunt said.

Barrows-Hunt said the volunteers are used mostly for on-call shifts in which the volunteer gets to stay at home, and is contacted by the answering service at the Crisis Center if a victim calls for help.

Melissa Breiner, senior in human development, said the on-call shift was the most exciting part of being a volunteer.

"It's an overwhelming experience to help women with the life they've been through and be a part of helping them create a new one," Breiner said.

Breiner said her responsibilities as a volunteer included working 20 hours a week, three on-call shifts a month and attending workshops and meetings.

Barrows-Hunt said the volunteers are dedicated to helping the women.

"The volunteers may have hard work and work long hours, but it's very rewarding."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Another awareness week, another lesson lost

All of these weeks point in one direction — people still don't get the idea that racism is deep, ugly and still with us.

This week is Martin Luther King Jr. Week.

We don't know what next week is.

We do know that the people of this nation will busily scramble to forget anything they learn this week. Let's call it Forget About Martin Luther King Jr. Week Week.

Don't celebrate it.

The terrible truth is, when we get done with this awareness week and slip into the next one, we never learn our lesson.

Awareness weeks and months address racism and stereotypes — except National Cheese Uses Week, which addresses nothing more than the need for good quiche.

All of these weeks and months point in one direction — people still don't get the idea that racism is deep, ugly and still with us. The same goes for sexism and homophobia.

Why do we forget? Are we children the day after Christmas who cannot be convinced to stay good because Christmas is over with for now?

We are supposed to be in the formative years of our life. We are supposed to be able to learn.

Remember what you learn this week.

If you forget, if you shrug off the ideas expressed this week, this week will become a lie.

Today's topic: Multiculturalism

Multicultural curriculum isn't the answer

JOHN HART

More than 30 years ago, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. changed the world with his dream of racial harmony.

Today, many advocates of racial justice support an overhauled version of King's original dream. This new dream includes a vision of multicultural education for students of all ages. Unfortunately, today's revised dream, while supporting King's basic goals of racial and ethnic justice, has stripped that original dream of much of its power.

The theory of multicultural education opposes education from a monocultural point of view. Its advocates claim that for too long American schools have presented a narrow, Eurocentric viewpoint. Scant attention has been paid to non-European cultures, they argue, and this problem should be corrected by teaching from a multicultural perspective.

Another crucial aspect of multicultural education is that it strives to teach "an appreciation for the concept of diversity as a positive force or reality . . . Education for diversity teaches respect for differences, not just toleration of differences," according to James B. Boyer, professor, Curriculum and American Ethnic Studies at K-State.

Although multiculturalism trumpets some noble objectives, such as being anti-racist and encouraging a respect for human dignity in spite of cultural differences, it has several drawbacks.

As Americans, we should strive to agree on a shared set of values and make our culture the most moral it can be instead of attempting to achieve a vague multicultural ideal. Deciding that all cultures are the American culture, as multiculturalists attempt, does not produce a culture at all, but a multiprovincial, fragmented society. Many lessons from history clearly demonstrate that multicultural societies are volatile. Chechnya and the former Yugoslavia are two recent examples.

Also, if multiculturalists are going to be true to their principles, they should give equal time to all cultures. To not do so would not respect diversity and could be ethnocentric.

In an everyday educational situation, it is simply impossible to do this. There are far too many cultural variables to account for.

The drawback of multiculturalism is not so much that it is a great evil waiting to swallow up students but that it is simply inept to deal with real-life racial and conflicts.

Racism and bigotry are ultimately spiritual problems that demand spiritual solutions. King's philosophy dealt with racial conflicts on this level while multicultural education only addresses the issue in purely intellectual terms. For example, while learning that Sicily produces more bread and wine grapes than it does mobsters may help a person dispel ignorant stereotypes about Sicilians, it is doubtful that learning this could cause a person to stop hating Sicilians.

As Americans, we would be well-served to incorporate King's basic values into our culture. If this can be achieved, the motivation for multicultural education would likely disappear. King offered three suggestions for resolving racial conflicts that if implemented would revolutionize our society. The backbone of King's philosophy was Jesus Christ's greatest command to love God and love your neighbor as yourself. King said, "Love is mankind's most potent weapon for personal and social transformation."

"Unfortunately today's revised dream, while supporting King's basic goals of racial justic, has stripped that original dream of its power."

King also advocated Christ's command to love not only your neighbor, but your enemies as well. Finally, King said that forgiveness should be an operating principle in resolving racial tensions."

A handful of students at K-State committed to these principles and to racial reconciliation would have a far greater effect than any multicultural curriculum.

John Hart is a senior in political science.

Dan's response

It is an unfortunate fact that many of the opponents of a pluralist society rely on sweeping generalizations and specious arguments to support their claims.

While there are fringe elements in the field of multicultural education, they are just that — fringe elements.

The vast majority of multicultural educators simply seek to discover and utilize curricula and pedagogical techniques, which will reach all of their students.

The "Yugoslav Syndrome" is another scenario presented to dissuade multicultural acceptance.

But the fragmentation of Yugoslavia resulted from ingrained beliefs about others and a societal failure to accept others.

This is exactly what multiculturalism seeks to overcome.

Understanding diversity requires education

"Being 'equal does not mean being the same (the 'just-like-us'-itis) — it means respect, dignity, equal access and shared concerns for our future."

The fall issue of the "Hungry Mind Review" published the results of its survey on race in America. The responses are worth reading.

They run the gamut from fear to hope, blame to forgiveness and come from all types of people from all around the nation.

Such a response is appropriate, as it accurately represents America.

Despite the impression you may get from most surveys of American history, we are and always have been a nation comprised of many different types of people.

And for many of those people, ethnicity has played an integral part in their lives.

This is sometimes hard for the white (a term I hesitate to use) population to accept, mainly because they haven't seen the effects of race in the same light.

That is not to say that they haven't seen the effects.

Every broken treaty with the American Indian gave a pioneer family a home, in some cases one they've maintained for generations.

Every African American kept out of college allowed someone else the chance to get an education.

In the course of that education, it seems only natural that they emphasize the accomplishments of their predecessors, hence excluding the accomplishments of others.

The peer groups that were established were necessarily closed to the ranks of women and minorities.

If medical schools refused to admit blacks, the American Medical Association is obviously going to be a homogeneous group.

The social acceptance of racism broadened the scope of society's isolationism.

When Native Americans are forcibly moved to reservations, and redlining prevents Americans of Asian, African and Hispanic descent from moving into certain neighborhoods, is it the fault of the average American?

Probably not. But the very notion of the "average American" continues to plague the "ethnics," or "people of color," or "hyphenated-Americans" to this day.

It is notion that we are all alike (or should be).

That we all have a common history, face the same challenges, and strive for the same "American Dream."

But even that "American Dream" is truly directed only at a few.

We are told from childhood that we can do anything we set our mind to — that all people are created equal.

Maybe so, but what has happened since is a different story.

That's what America needs to understand.

We are all Americans, but we are not the same.

This distinction goes far beyond racial categories.

"It is to suggest that when we do learn something, it should be inclusive — that Angel Island should be mentioned alongside Ellis Island."

Not all blacks are the same.

Not all lesbians are the same.

Not all New York Italians are the same.

Not all illegal immigrants are the same.

Unless we recognize that, we will continue to misunderstand and fear — even hate — one another because of our ignorance.

And until we learn to respect one another for our differences as well as our similarities, we and our children are doomed to a world that continues to divide us along lines that we create.

These lines are the ultimate societal suicide.

This is not to say that everyone should be compelled to take a course on multicultural etiquette or black history (though it might do some good).

Rather, it is to suggest that when we do learn something, it should be inclusive.

That Angel Island be mentioned alongside Ellis Island.

That Canassatego stand with Madison among the founders of our nation.

That the "Mexican Cession" be referred to as the "Mexican Conquest" (cession, indeed — as if Mexico just called and said, "We don't want this anymore, but we need a war to make it look official ... we'll just cede it to you").

DAN LEWERENZ

This is not an attempt to discredit Madison or any other dead white male.

Rather, it is an attempt to afford them their proper place in history — alongside other pioneers of different cultures.

The majority in America will soon be a minority.

It will mean a transition that is likely to mean the end of many of their hidden perks.

It will take a measure of multicultural awareness and understanding to guarantee that this transition proceeds smoothly.

"We are multiracial. Wake up and smell the coffee.

"We see the triumphs and the failures daily."

Dan Lewerenz is a senior in philosophy.

John's response

In America, in which people shared a common morality, a necessary component of any stable society, people would not automatically be expected to be the same.

If our society pursued King's dream, we would be reconciled and respect one another's differences.

However, King's version of respect differs from the hopelessly relativistic "tolerance" multiculturalist's preach.

We could be different in such an America and respect one another.

Yet, we could still be part of the same culture.

By all accounts, equality is a function of worth — not sameness.

While America is not Yugoslavia, it can't be denied that when one looks at history, multicultural societies are more unstable than societies that agree on a basic of values or culture. The Middle East and Rwanda are other good examples.

New literature reports vitamin C in megadoses may cause reverse effects and cause scurvy, Martha Olson, registered dietitian at Lafene Health Center, said.

The world of vitamins was once thought to be safe, but many may not know the harmful effects of taking excessive amounts of vitamins.

"Vitamin A can be toxic if taken in excess, and other vitamins have the potential to be toxic," said Norma Slagle, registered licensed dietitian at Memorial Hospital.

"We very seldom see people in the hospital because of taking too many vitamins, but there are serious side effects," Slagle said. "Students should use vitamin supplements instead of just a vitamin A, oil- or fat-soluble vitamin."

Jeff Dumler, staff pharmacist at Lafene Health Center, said oil-soluble vitamins such as vitamins A and D can cause serious problems if taken in excess.

"If the body does not use the oil-soluble vitamins, they can cause kidney stones or other health problems," Dumler said.

Healthy individuals who eat well probably don't need vitamins, but students can check with their health-care provider, Slager said.

"Students are not only wasting money but making the body work harder. It has to work to get rid of the excess vitamins," Slagle said. "Vitamins act as a crutch instead of developing good eating habits."

Vitamins and supplements in pill form cannot give a person all the nutrients they need to survive. Healthy individuals who eat well probably don't need them.

Vitamins in pill form cannot give a person everything they need to survive, Olson said.

"Vitamins alone cannot provide the basic nutrients. A person needs a balanced diet," Olson said.

Slagle said she was once a student and understands the busy schedule of a college student, but she always ate a good diet and exercised as needed.

"I have never recommended a supplement before recommending students change their eating habits," Olson said. "If you learn to eat well, you shouldn't need any vitamin supplements. Right now is the time to eat right and exercise."

Exercising proper care is the key to not abusing vitamin supplements, Slagle said.

Use vitamins in moderation and check with a doctor to see what is going on in your lifestyle and to see if you need vitamins, Slagle said. "But students need to be getting vitamins from balanced diets."

Some students use vitamins along with eating a balanced diet,

"When I became real physically active, I started taking vitamins," Brian Steinlage, junior in agricultural marketing, said. "When I am running or working out, they help. Everything helps."

"I can tell when I don't take them. Working out makes me feel better, but I can tell," Steinlage said.

Steinlage said his mother taught him at an early age about taking his vitamins.

Reasons for taking vitamins vary with the person.

"People use vitamins out of habit, or they are too rushed to cook, or just don't care to cook, or lead a fast-paced lifestyle," Slagle said.

"I see many students and K-State faculty take stress vitamins, especially during finals week," Jayne Link, manager of People's Grocery CO-OP, said.

Link said some people use vitamins to boost their immune system, but people usually take multiple vitamins, vitamin E, zinc and calcium.

"When you are at college, you don't eat as well. Healthy foods don't contain all the nutrients they used to," Steinlage said.

Link said new customers choosing vitamins are usually buying them because of that person's lifestyle.

"If a person needs a vitamin supplement, I would say an inexpensive multivitamin. It should be 100 percent or less of the recommended daily allowance, RDA, but it is not my recommendation," Olson said.

"Simple vitamins are OK — megadoses are not OK," Olson said. "I would never encourage a megadose."

Natural-food diets are what most people chose more than vitamins, Link said.

"Our customers have been reading labels and asking questions long before the Food and Drug Administration, FDA, put labels on cans," Link said.

Link said chiropractors are more likely to recommend vitamins, but some medical doctors will recommend them, too.

Lafene has a service available to students to check food intake to see if they need vitamins.

"I do consultations with students. I can evaluate a student's food intake and determine what they need to change, if anything, in their diet," Olson said.

"Freshmen come here for weight control, but older students come in to learn healthy eating," Olson said.

To check to see if the vitamin that you are taking is the proper amount or right for you, talk with your doctor or call the dietitian at Lafene at 532-6544, or Memorial Hospital at 587-4266, or the Saint Mary Hospital at 776-2886.

Cats need psychological assistance

NICOLE POELL

In case you haven't noticed, the K-State basketball team has been experiencing a bit of a scoring problem lately.

It all began with the Wichita State fiasco, when the Wildcats, as Coach Asbury said, "Stunk up the court," losing to the Shockers by 24 points.

After I'd bragged about and bet on K-State prior to the contest, I was almost in tears from all the ridicule I took from my brothers after the Cats' performance.

But after earning a convincing win against Oklahoma State four days later, I had already concluded that the Shockers' victory against the Cats had just been one of those fluke things and that K-State wouldn't shoot that poorly again.

I was wrong.

K-State went on to shoot 18 percent in the first half against Nebraska, and 17.1 percent before halftime of the Missouri game.

Asbury himself said he had never coached a high-school team that shot just 17 percent.

They "stunk" again at Nebraska, in Asbury's terms.

Now, I understand that Coach Asbury and his staff are doing the best they can to correct this problem as soon as possible.

But just in case things don't work out, and because I'm concerned about Tom, his staff and the team, I've looked into another option they may want to consider — consulting a sports psychologist.

Contrary to what you may be thinking, this would not involve Coach Asbury lying on a leather couch, or any players having their nightmares about Greg Ostertag analyzed.

No, if the Cats did seek assistance from a sports psychologist, they would be learning more about the mental aspects of performance, including visualization, mental rehearsal, anxiety management and goal attainment, just to name a few.

Fred Newton, director, associate professor and psychologist for the University Counseling Services, has taught countless athletes the mental aspects of sports performance over the course of 14 years.

Newton first worked with the Duke Blue Devils (in the pre-Coach K years) before moving on to K-State, where he has advised the track team, football team (in the pre-Snyder years) and basketball team while Dana Altman was coaching.

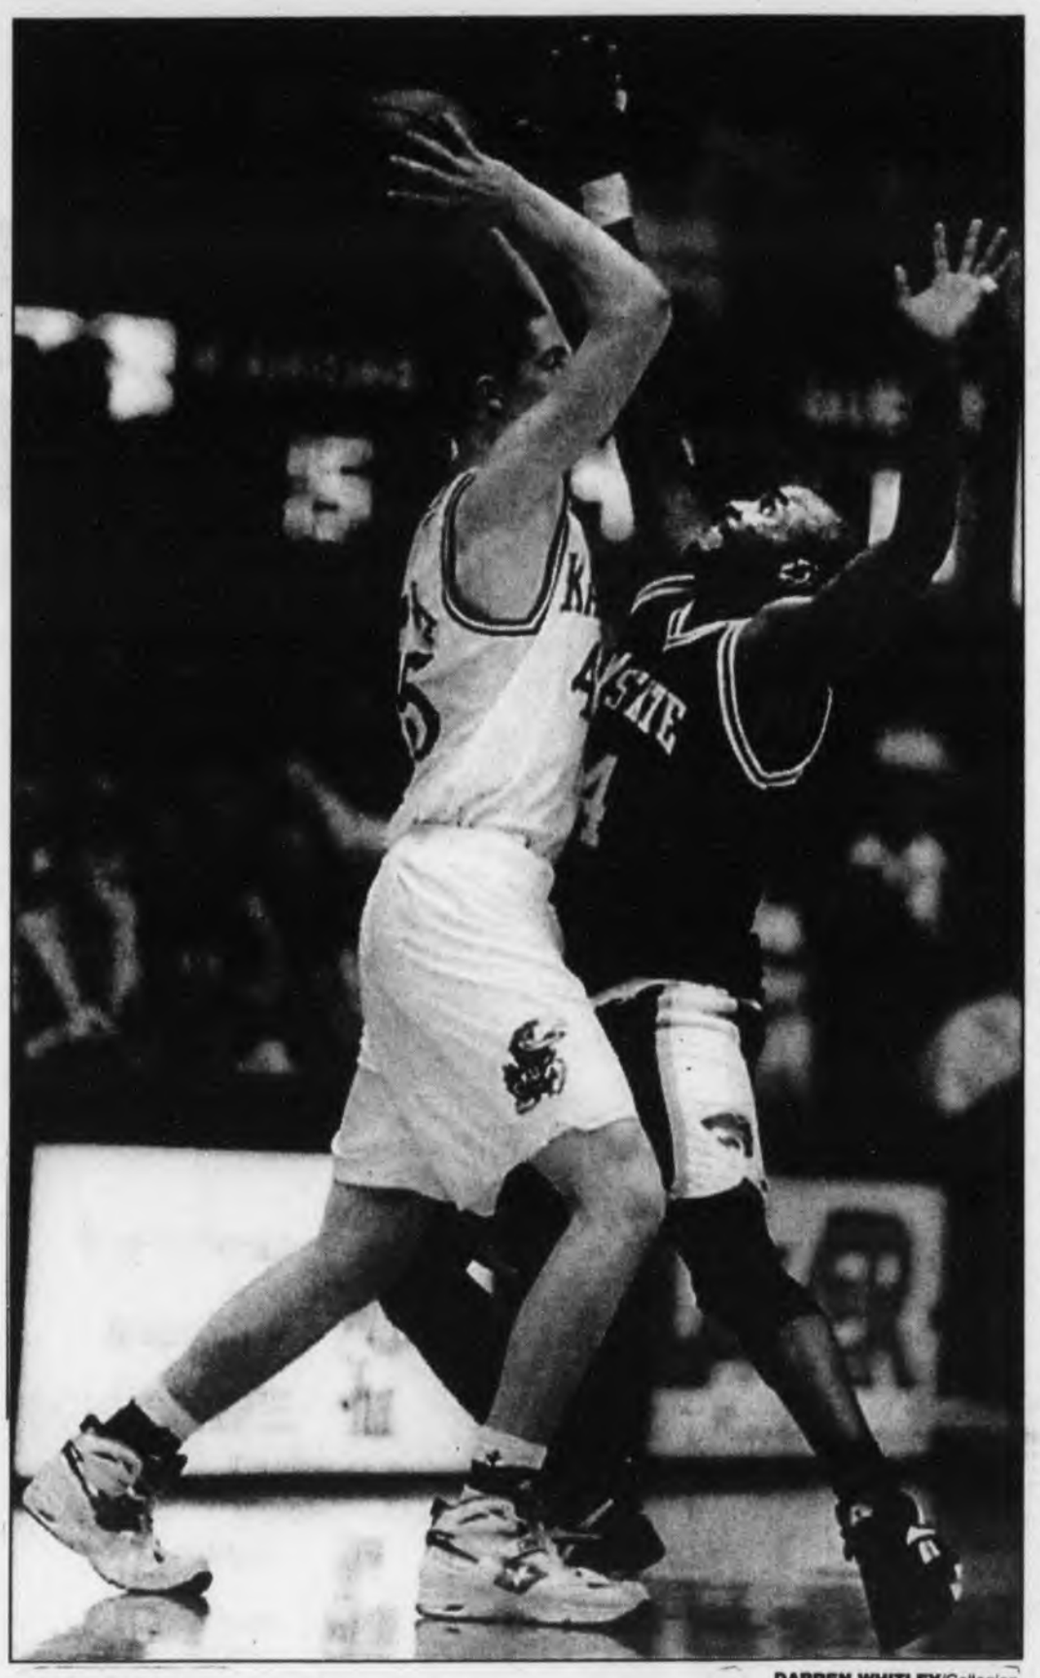
So why exactly have these teams looked to Newton for help?

Apparently they are looking for a way to achieve any advantage possible against an opponent.

"Once an athlete has attained certain physical skills, that extra edge comes from the mental attitudes," Newton said.

"We also do some biofeedback work, where the athlete learns to use physiological signs and adjust by using the mental process."

Sound complicated? It's not, really. Newton explained one aspect of visualization and mental rehearsal he uses with basketball players.



"When I'm working with a basketball player, for example, I have them imagine themselves making a free throw while standing at the foul line and then proceed to do it," he said.

Newton also cites research that has demonstrated improved performance of foul-shooting accuracy based upon mental rehearsal when it was compared to equally skilled athletes who practiced shooting without doing the visualization.

It's something to consider with the Cats shooting 63 percent from the free-throw line.

So while I'm still a firm believer that old-fashioned hard work and practice are the keys to success, the Cats may want to consider Newton's help if all else fails.

After all, it wouldn't hurt them to visualize themselves winning again.

Turnovers kill Cats' 2nd-half comeback

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

LAWRENCE — Turnovers killed the Cat.

K-State fought back from a nine-point deficit to tie the game at 69-69 with a little under three minutes remaining against No. 7 ranked Kansas in Allen Fieldhouse.

However, the Cats committed two critical turnovers in the final stages to allow the Jayhawks to escape with a 78-74 victory. The loss dropped the Cats to 1-3 in the Big Eight Conference and 10-7 on the season.

"We had too many turnovers," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "We had too many opportunities. Twenty-five turnovers — we've got to take care of that."

The first of the two final-minute turnovers occurred when guard Elliot Hatcher was whistled for traveling while trying to create a shot. However, Kansas misfired on its possession and gave the Cats the ball back trailing by just three points.

That set the stage for the Cats' most crucial turnover of the game.

As the Cats raced down court with less than 40 seconds left in the game, Belvis Noland received a pass from Elliot Hatcher.

Noland dribbled the ball around the left wing, and he threw a pass intended for Tyrone Davis.

However, Davis wasn't there, and the ball bounced aimlessly out of bounds.

"I know that I had a turnover at the end. It was really crucial," Noland said. "Those are the kind of plays we've got to take control of. We've got to connect so we can get something out of those."

In the end, Asbury said the Cats just didn't execute.

"We get it tied and sort of lose our poise," Asbury said. "We also didn't continue to execute as well. They also picked it up defensively. Shoot, they just beat us."

Even with the 25 turnovers, the Cats remained in the game all the way, especially in the later stages of the first half.

That's when the Cats battled back from a seven-point deficit to close with three points.

However, just as the Cats cut the lead to three with about two seconds remaining in the first period, KU set up an out-of-bounds play for Jerod Haase.

The play worked. Haase canned a 70-foot, fall-away jumper to give the Jayhawks a six-point lead at the half.

The Jayhawks used the momentum from Haase's shot to run off six straight points in the early stages of the second half. Kansas continued to chip away, and they eventually expanded its lead to 10 points.

However, that's when Noland caught fire from the field. After scoring only seven points in the first half, Noland scored 16 points in the second half on a barrage of different shots.

"We just wanted to stay in it and keep the crowd out of it. Heck, we were down 10. I'm proud of our guys," Asbury said.

"Belvis really stepped it up tonight. We don't have any sets for a specific player, but he found the open shot, and he made it."

Even with Noland in the zone, the Cats just couldn't get over the hump.

"We played hard," Asbury said. "I was happy with the way we played — pleased with the effort."

The Cats' game against KU marked the third-straight Big Eight road game, all of which were losses, but Asbury said he won't dwell on the losses.

"There are 275 in America that will go on a three-game road trip in six days like we did, and they would also end up going 0-3," Asbury said. "We could have won. We need to take care of those mistakes. I'll worry about this game for all about five minutes.

"We've got Iowa State coming up. This one is over and done with."

Noland's hot shooting comes too late in game

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

LAWRENCE — With the shooting woes K-State has been through in the past two games, Coach Tom Asbury probably would have been happy with 16 points in 10 minutes from the entire Wildcat team.

What he got was hot-shooting guard Belvis Noland, who canned 16 of his career-high 23 points during a 10-minute stretch in the second half.

Noland's spurt comes after he went 16 out of his last 61 shots in the Cats' last three Big Eight games.

"Belvis really picked it up at the end. He is very streaky. He is a good shooter. If he gets his confidence and you leave him open and let him get his feet set, he is going to do a good job."

Noland's tear began with K-State down by five points with 13:49 left in the second half.

That's when he penetrated to the basket and banked home a layup while being fouled.

He then added 10 more points to tie the game with six minutes to go. Six of Noland's points came on bank shots.

"It's a good shot," Noland said. "I need to take it more often, instead of shooting it from three-point range."

However, with Noland on fire, Kansas countered with a 4-0 run to give them a four-point lead.

Noland then came down the court and swished a three-pointer from the left arc. Kansas' lead was down to 68-67.

KU's Greg Ostertag nailed a free throw to give the Jayhawks a two-point lead.

With Noland having the hot hand, the Cats turned to Noland again.

However, this time he missed on another three-pointer from the same spot where he nailed it the possession before.

"It was a good shot. I was open — it just wouldn't fall," Noland said. "Sometimes they go, and sometimes they don't."

Noland's open shot was the Cats' best opportunity to score in the final three minutes of the game. K-State would turn the ball over twice during the final minute of the game to seal KU's victory.

Kansas talent to shine at Pentathlon

WESS HUDDLESON
Collegian

K-State's indoor track season rolls on this Friday and Saturday with the Wildcat Pentathlon aand the KSU Invitational.

Kansas, Wichita State, Emporia State and Pittsburg State will bring full squads to Ahearn Field House.

Travis Renner and Matt Jeffrey will represent K-State in the pentathlon Friday morning starting at 9 a.m.

Gwen Wentland, Jill Montgomery and Angela Showalter will compete in the pentathlon for the women.

"This meet should offer a little better competition than we've had so far this year," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Wentland captured first in the long jump last Saturday at the Wildcat Invitational with a leap of 19 feet. She returned to indoor competition after being redshirted last season.

"She set a PR (personal record) in the high jump before Christmas Break," Rovelto said.

"I think it's pretty obvious she hasn't lost anything with taking the time off."

Wentland will participate in the triple jump Saturday after completing the pentathlon Friday.

Also making his presence felt for K-State is community-college transfer Travis Renner. Renner placed in four events Saturday, but Rovelto said he has a long way to go.

"He's a good athlete, and he's got a lot of potential, but as I've said before, potential just means he hasn't done it yet," Rovelto said.

Two other transfers posted NCAA provisionally qualifying marks at the Wildcat Invitational last Saturday

Steve Duren, a transfer from Barton County Community College, added his name to the list of provisional qualifiers with a leap of 25'3-1/4" in the long jump.

"It was my first meet back, and I was just very excited to be competing again," Duren said.

"I know I can go much farther. That really wasn't a good jump for me."

Duren also finished second in the 55-meter dash. He will again compete in both events Saturday.

Wanita Dykstra, a transfer from the University of Toronto, qualified in the high jump with a height of 5'11-3/4".

However, like Duren, Dykstra is capable of more. She posted a career best of 6'3" in high school.

Dykstra said she is very happy to be at K-State after a disappointing freshman season at Toronto.

"I feel like I'm concentrating better this season," Dykstra said. "I knew Coach Rovelto was a good coach, and they had good jumpers here so I knew I could be a better high jumper here."

Jill Montgomery makes a long jump during the Wildcat Invitational Saturday.

Clinton plan benefits students

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

If President Clinton has his way, tuition will be tax deductible.

Clinton announced a comprehensive tax proposal on Dec. 15. The tuition tax break is part of that package.

You could deduct up to $10,000 a year if your household income is less than $120,000.

"It reduces the cost of private schools or going out-of-state," Patrick Gormely, associate professor of economics, said.

A K-State student who is paying in-state tuition and is a member of a household whose income is $50,000 would save about $700, whereas a K-State student who is paying out-of-state tuition and whose household income is $50,000 would save about $2,000, almost three times as much as the in-state student.

If extreme cases allowed by the proposal are considered, the difference can reach as much as 11 times.

Take a college student who claims independently from their family.

They earn $8,000 a year and is an in-state student at K-State. This person saves $330.

Now take a family earning $115,000 who sends their child to Harvard, where yearly tuition far exceeds $10,000. This family would save $3,600 in taxes.

The savings are higher if you are in a higher tax bracket, Lloyd Thomas, professor of economics, said.

Thomas said he thinks it would have little effect on the enrollment at K-State, because the savings for the typical K-State student would be minimal.

For a student to get the tax break, they would have to itemize their federal tax return.

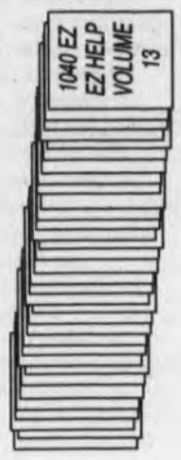
"It is not that much of a benefit to lower-income families because they are the ones who rarely itemize their return," said Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance.

But he also said any tax break for students would help.

College tuition wouldn't be the only tuition that would be tax deductible.

Clinton's proposal calls for tuition at community colleges, graduate schools, professional schools, vocational education and for worker retraining to be tax deductible also.

However, it isn't certain that Clinton's proposal will make it through Congress unchanged.



Jackie McClaskey, press secretary for Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., said the tuition tax cut has not reached the house floor or been debated.

"When it is brought up, we will look more closely at the proposal," she said.

▶ STUDENT ELECTIONS

Plan now if running for student office

Student government elections are April 11 and 12, but it is not too early to be thinking about a candidacy.

Applications to be available in early March

STEVEN YOUNG
Collegian

Student government elections are April 11 and 12, and candidacies may be in the works.

No one can file to run yet. Karen Tryphonas, secretary for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said applications will probably not be available until the first week of March.

"But that's just a guess," Tryphonas said.

The deadline to file is 5 p.m. March 28.

At this time last year, people were telling Jeff Peterson, student body president, to run for office, he said.

Students who want to serve as a University leader should be thinking about the issues important to them, Peterson said.

Peterson said he was already choosing a running mate at this time last year, and possible candidates may want to consider finding theirs.

"Find someone with common beliefs, not necessarily leadership style," Peterson said.

Student Governing Association positions to be filled are student body president and vice president, Student Senate, Board of Student Publications, Fine Arts Council and Union Governing Board.

According to the SGA constitution, any full-time student who will not graduate during the term of office may seek election for Senate, Board of Student Publications or Fine Arts Council.

Students who will graduate but plan to enter graduate school at K-State immediately may also enter the election.

The SGA constitution has different requirements for UGB members.

They may be either undergraduate or graduate students.

Elected undergraduate students must be enrolled in a minimum of 12 hours.

At least 12 hours must have been completed at K-State by the student.

The cumulative grade point average of such a student must be 2.5 or higher.

UGB members are elected for two-year and one-year terms.

In addition to full-time undergraduates, graduate students enrolled in six or more graduate hours are eligible to become a student senator.

Senators may represent only one college.

The college represented must be the one in which the student is enrolled, David Norris, Senate Elections Committee co-chair, said.

If someone has a dual major in different colleges, the candidate must choose one college to serve as senator, Norris said.

▶MATH TEACHER FINDS FOOD FOR THOUGHT

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — A Pennsylvania math teacher's admonition to his students that math counts will be taken more seriously in the future.

Bob Swain, a math teacher at Souderton Area High School in Souderton, Pa., discovered that a Boston Chicken Inc. TV commercial had an erroneous math equation.

In the ad an announcer claims customers choosing three of the fast-food chain's 16 side dishes face a total possible number of 3,360 dinner combinations.

Last week, Swain called the company to say their claims were false. After Swain and his students worked through the problem, the class came up with a total 816 combinations of Boston Chicken side dishes.

Boston Chicken will reward Swain's mathematical skills by giving his school's math department a $500 grant and feeding him and his class.

Senators to fill 8 vacancies

These campaigns are allowed more money than Senate campaigns because they are voted on by the whole student body, Finkeldei said.

Eight new senators may join senate at tonight's meeting, Clayton Wheeler, senate chair, said. Five graduate senators, two education senators and an arts and sciences senator are up for approval.

These vacancies were left after resignations last semester. One senator had to resign because of a change in college, and another senator needed time to prepare for graduation, Wheeler said.

Five graduate senators were asked to resign because of low attendance, Wheeler said.

Senate will also consider several special allocations at tonight's meeting, Wheeler said. KSU Environmental Professionals and Women's Union are asking for funds to attend conferences.

The Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls is asking for $280 to get arm bands for new campus safety escorts. Under this new service, pairs of students will escort fellow students across campus at night.

Bradford Grant, guest speaker for Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week, gestures toward the entryway of the Civil Rights Center in Birmingham, Ala., during his lecture on the invisibility of African-American architects Wednesday afternoon. Grant, a professor of architecture at the College of Architecture and Environmental Design at Cal Poly State University in San Luis Obispo, Calif., said there are only 130 African American architects registered for the more than 100,000 total registered architects.

Architecture not colorblind

Guest speaker spotlights African-American designs

KIMBERLY WISHART

Of 100,000 registered architects, only 130 are African American, but throughout history African Americans have made an large contribution to architecture.

"We are around," said Bradford Grant, an architect and guest speaker for Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week.

Throughout his lecture Wednesday afternoon in the Union Little Theatre, Grant showed slides of historic buildings designed by African-American architects.

"Architects of color have been rendered ghost-like," he said. "They are felt but not seen."

Grant's speech was called "Chicka Chicka Boom Boom — Will There Be Enough Room."

"I thought that might get some attention," Grant said. "It's the title of a children's book by Bill Martin that my daughter has. I like it because Ray Charles has a tape that goes along with the book, too."

The rest of Grant's speech was titled "How Do We Express Multicultural Heritage?"

Grant, a professor of architecture at the College of Architecture and Environmental Design at Cal Poly State University in San Luis Obispo, Calif., focused on the cultural invisibility of African-American architects.

One building Grant made reference to is President Thomas Jefferson's home.

"There are discreet passage - ways to the slave houses, and it's known that Jefferson had many children with the slaves — after his wife died, of course."

Many of Grant's slides were of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change in Atlanta, Ga.

"It's one of the great controversial monuments that remains from the civil-rights movement," he said.

Grant also talked about the museum of African American Art in a Washington, D.C., mall.

"It was placed underground to preserve the castle-like look the mall has," he said. "Again, it's pressed underground."

Members of the audience said they were surprised to see the African-American buildings Grant pointed out.

"He told me a lot that I didn't know. I found his speech to be very informational," Alison Lazzara, junior in interior architecture, said.

"I didn't even know about the buildings he pointed out like the King center."

Grant was brought to K-State by the College of Architecture.

"Our college always sponsors some event in conjunction with Martin Luther King Jr. Week," Diane Potts, dean of architecture, said.

"We usually have a black architect, and we chose Bradford Grant because some of the faculty had heard him at conferences."

'Higher Learning' full of stereotypes

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

★★½
Higher Learning

Ratings:
★★★★ Must see
★★★ Worth a peek
★★ Good future rental
★ Bastardization of cinema

"Higher Learning" is a film with a message — a message about the plight of young black people in a white-dominated college environment.

Too bad director John Singleton ("Boyz N the Hood") appears to be too consumed with political issues of race and culture to deliver a palatable storyline.

This time, his characters have made it out of the ghetto, finding themselves at fictional Columbus University.

Malik (Omar Epps), a freshman on a track scholarship, sixth-year senior Fudge (Ice Cube) and Kristen (Kristy Swanson) are faced with a semester that adds racism and sexual violence to traditional college fare, like textbooks and cheap beer.

While the film manages to rise above typical "why can't we all just get along" rhetoric, it would do better if it could only take heed of its own message.

As soon as the characters get to college, they cease being people and instead become walking demographics.

The film stereotypes every possible group found in a college environment — fraternity guys are portrayed as beer-chuggin' date rapists, campus cops are always beating on the black students, and even a liberal-feminist-lesbian is thrown in the mix.

The result is not so much a coherent film as a mere recipe for a racial conflict.

Take the situations presented in this film to any campus and add firearms, and you have an instant race war.

The recruitment of Remy (Michael Rappapor) by racist-skinheads seems to be only a plot device. We're never allowed to see what must be troubling Remy. We only know that he is going to do something really bad.

Perhaps the most disappointing part of the movie is sexually confused freshman Kristen and her love triangle with Taryn (Jennifer

▶BELL MAY HAVE FALSIFIED INJURY CLAIM

TOPEKA (AP) — Fletcher Bell showed no immediate signs of injury after the incident that was the basis for his $94,469 workers' compensation award, a former employee testified Tuesday.

Kurt Scott said he was present on Jan. 18, 1989, in a Kansas City, Mo., parking garage when Bell removed a briefcase from the trunk of his car. Bell later filed a claim for what he said was a serious back injury he sustained that day.

Two special prosecutors accuse Bell, who was insurance commissioner in 1971-91, of filing a false workers' compensation claim to receive his award. He faces two felony charges of theft by deception. Bell has denied any wrongdoing.

Bell began receiving benefits in February 1991, just six weeks after he retired from office. He was to have received weekly payments through 1996, but he agreed in September 1993 to stop receiving payments, a decision that cost him just over $39,000.

At the time of the incident, Scott worked as the chief examiner in the insurance department. He was in charge of examining insurance companies' financial conditions.

Scott testified that Bell neither cried out in pain while he was lifting the briefcase nor afterward. He also said Bell did not walk abnormally or complain about back pain.

Dear Cassandra,

I had an unexpected surprise when I returned to school this semester. I was sitting in my class minding my own business when lo and behold, next to me sits the school's most odoriferous student. Cassie, how can I let him know in a manly manner that his B.O. is wrecking my day?

Signed Nose A Hurtin'

Dear Nose A Hurtin',

I think you have several options. You can try the innocent approach and ask him very politely where he got that wonderful Muskrat Love cologne he is wearing.

Or you could be more subtle and simply burn several sticks of incense. But I've always felt honesty is the best policy, so my personal advice would be to tell him his smell offends you. If that doesn't work and he continues to burn your nose hairs, unless you are emotionally attached to the seat beside him, I'd move to a different one.

'Bagdad Cafe': a nostalgic look at life in a small town

NIKOLA ZYTKOW
Collegian

It could have been a scene from a Faulkner novel — the yellow hues of the lazy summer sky, the ordinary surroundings of the seemingly ordinary people.

"Bagdad Cafe" is not the typical Hollywood, high-action type of movie with a complicated plot and witty comebacks. But after all, it was created by European director Percy Adlon.

The 1988 "Bagdad Cafe" is Adlon's first American film. Fortunately, Adlon does not deviate from his prior films ("Celeste," "Sugarbaby") in the interesting choice of a dominant color scheme throughout the film and a predominantly female cast.

The movie presents an intimate and often humorous look into the lives of a group of people, uniquely changed by a foreign visitor.

Jasmin (Marianne Sagebrecht) is a portly German housewife who runs away from her husband in the middle of the Mojave Desert. She finds refuge and employment in the old, run-down truck stop and motel, Bagdad Cafe.

'Bagdad Cafe'
"Bagdad Cafe," will be at 7 and 9:30 p.m. today and 9:30 p.m. Saturday at Forum Hall. It is 91 minutes long.

She soon encounters the grouchy manager, Brenda (CCH Pounder), who is frustrated with her irresponsible husband, excessively flirtatious daughter, and a son obsessed with Bach. Not to mention the grease-spoon cafe, which doesn't even have a coffee maker.

Audiences used to plot-driven kinds of movies with obvious, cued punchlines will probably have a hard time getting into this film.

Adlon is not afraid to let the audience get the chance to know several characters rather intimately in a short amount of time. This is often a risk in an hour-and-a-half movie, but he is successful at it. As we are introduced to extraordinary-ordinary people such as Debby (Christine Kaufmann), a tattoo artist who hates harmonious environments, and Rudi Cox (Jack Palance), a former Hollywood set painter who is deeply intrigued with nudity and lighting in his art.

The movie begins and ends in a small town, Bagdad, no longer on the map. In a way, this may be symbolic of the general atmosphere of nostalgia present throughout the film. It's a nostalgia for vast, open spaces, for places far away from civilization and for the nomadic way of life.

The western landscape, the trucks and the motel in the middle of nowhere are symbols of the world, so unlike our increasingly hectic world — a world slowly ceasing to exist.

Peace Corps recruiting

Students sought with experience in agriculture, farming

STACEY HAGER
Collegian

The Peace Corps is a viable option after graduation, said Patricia Garamendi, associate Peace Corps director.

Garamendi is at K-State through today recruiting for the Peace Corps from the Kansas City branch.

She spoke to a very diverse group of over 100 students, faculty members, adults and former volunteers Wednesday in the Union.

Garamendi was appointed to her current position by President Clinton in 1993. She now works to recruit volunteers and place them in 94 different countries.

There is a rigorous application process to get into the program, Garamendi said.

First, those interested fill out a long, involved application. There are also intensive interviews. If you are accepted, they have you on a plane within seven months.

Volunteers need to be knowledgeable in a foreign language and have experience in their preferred area. However, there is training in either area.

"We can make it work for you," Garamendi said.

Garamendi said there is a huge need for volunteers who speak French.

The program includes three months of intensive training in the country, while staying with a host family.

Garamendi said the Peace Corps is in need of volunteers in business, forestry, health and various other fields.

PEACE CORPS

For more information or an application, call Patricia Garamendi at 1-800-424-8580

However, she said, she chose K-State to visit because it is the number one recruiting school in the four-state region in the field of agriculture.

"We need people with backgrounds in agriculture education, farm management, small and large animal husbandry, and soil sciences to go overseas and share their training as Peace Corps Volunteers," Garamendi said.

The Peace Corps has 140,000 volunteers who have served.

Mary Lou Haag, an instructor in English, served in the Peace Corps in 1977 to 1980.

Haag served in Niger in West Africa teaching English. She said it was an adjustment and you learn to get along with a lot less.

She said it was a very special time in her life.

Terry Pruett-Said, also an instructor in English, served in 1983-85 in Morocco.

"You learn the culture more than just as a tourist," Pruett-Said said.

K-State currently has 29 graduates serving in the various countries.

Becky Forman, sophomore in Elementary Education, has always dreamed of being in the Peace Corps.

"I have always been fortunate in my life and gotten the things I want; this could be my chance to give something back to someone," Forman said.

Forman hopes to be accepted in the Peace Corps upon graduation and to volunteer in a Spanish speaking country, teaching English or providing health services.

After volunteers serve in the Peace Corps, they receive a $5,400 scholarship. The program can open doors to employment and graduate school, and it is possible to obtain academic credit.

Bosnia still blockading troops

U.N. gerneral fails to negotiate flight continuations

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia (AP) — The U.N. commander for Bosnia failed Wednesday to solve a dispute with the Bosnian government that has left nearly 1,000 U.N. peacekeepers short of food and heat in bitter mid-winter.

Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose returned empty-handed from a trip to Tuzla in north-central Bosnia, where the United Nations has tried for a year to persuade the Serbs to allow aid flights to a nearby airport.

Government troops have been blockading 450 U.N. soldiers at the airfield and nearly 600 others in the region for eight days. U.N. officials angered the government by allowing a Serb liaison officer onto the airfield Jan. 8 as a guarantee against its military use.

The Serbs have continued to bar aid flights, prompting the government on Monday to give the United Nations until Feb. 1 to open Tuzla airport or withdraw.

The last U.N. helicopter flight to and from Tuzla airport was Jan. 11. The last fixed-wing plane landed in July 1994 when a Russian IL-76 was shelled on the ground while the crew tried to unload radar tracking equipment.

A U.N. spokesman in Tuzla, Capt. Philip Jerichow, said food was being rationed at the base and forward observation points were withdrawing from the nearly 240-mile front line because they were running out of provisions.

"There are cease-fire violations all along the confrontation line, but our soldiers cannot go out to the observation points," he said.

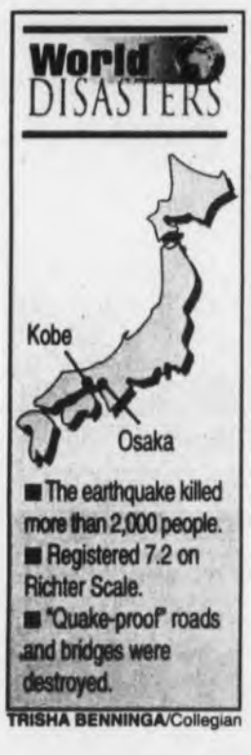
Another dispute lingered between Croats and Muslims, allies against the Serbs in a U.S.-sponsored federation that has yet to take shape other than on paper.

A session of the federation assembly scheduled for Wednesday in Sarajevo was canceled after federation President Kresimir Zubak, a Croat, refused to step down and make way for Ejup Ganic, a Muslim who is also vice president of Bosnia's Muslim-dominated government.

Federation provisions call for rotating the post between Croats and Muslims every six months. The Croats argue that rotation can only begin half a year after election of the first president. Both sides agree elections cannot be held in wartime.

Dario Kordic, a Bosnian Croat leader, said Muslim leaders lacked the goodwill necessary for the assembly to meet.

Kordic said help from Bosnian Croat allies abroad was needed to bridge the differences. The United States, Germany, Turkey and Austria are involved in behind-the-scenes talks to shore up the crumbling federation.



U.N. officials said Wednesday that the northwest Bihac region was generally calm, but noted troop movements that could signal more fighting.

A Dec. 24 cease-fire and subsequent four-month truce have failed to halt the fighting between Serbs and government troops around Bihac. The battles also involve Croatian Serbs and rebel Muslims not party to those agreements.

An estimated 200,000 people have died or disappeared since Bosnia's war began in April 1992.

Fire, 7.2 earthquake proves nature's might over man's technology

TRISHA BENNINGA/Collegian

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KOBE, Japan (AP) — Survivors with blank expressions wandered the battered streets of a city that was supposed to stand up to earthquakes. Their faith in technology was smashed by a disaster that killed more than 2,000 people.

In large areas of this once-prosperous city, fire destroyed what Tuesday's 7.2-magnitude earthquake did not. But by Wednesday many of the fires ran out of fuel and burned themselves out.

Elevated roads and bridges that Japanese engineers boasted were quake-proof were broken at angles, flung to earth by the force of nature, crushing whatever was beneath them.

Motorists perished as their cars skidded off the collapsing highways. Tracks and bridges for Japan's famous "bullet" trains were damaged badly enough to be out of action for months. Hundreds of thousands of survivors struggled without electricity, gas or water.

Hardly a block in this industrial port city of 1.4 million people had a house or building intact. Many streets were reduced to piles of rubble by the strongest quake to strike an urban area of Japan since 1948.

Only a few fires still burned Wednesday. One building near the railroad station was burning violently, but few firefighters were in sight. The surrounding area was nearly destroyed, and there was no place for the fire to spread.

Osaka, Japan's second-largest city, which is across the bay from Kobe, was also heavily damaged. The wreckage extended 50 miles northwest of Kobe to the ancient capital, Kyoto. There, the treasured Buddha statues and a five-story pagoda built in 951 suffered minor damage.

More than 600 aftershocks hit the area through Wednesday morning, including 60 that could be felt.

National police said 2,014 people were known dead by midday Wednesday; 1,058 were missing and 11,977 injured. One American was among those killed, the U.S. Embassy said. Details were withheld pending notification of next of kin.

Japan's largest newspaper said an American woman named Voni Wong, a resident of Ashiya City, had been killed. It was not clear if the newspaper was referring to the U.S. citizen whose death was announced by the embassy.

Just outside Kobe, damage seemed almost arbitrary. A showroom window at an auto dealership survived undamaged. Next to it, four wooden houses collapsed. In the city, a five-story building had fallen on its side, and a seven-story bank building leaned over the sidewalk.

"I thought it was the end of the world," said 64-year-old Minoru Takasu, whose house fell down around him in Nishinomiya city, six miles from Kobe.

"I survived by sliding into a small gap between a dish cabinet and the wall," he told the Asahi newspaper. "I'm happy to be alive!"

The shaking lasted about 20 seconds, and when it was over, 8,380 buildings were destroyed. Many people slept outside for fear aftershocks would cause further damage.

About 100,000 people spent the night in emergency shelters, eating rice balls handed out by rescue workers and sipping water trucked in by the fire department because so many water lines were fractured.

Many fled their homes with nothing more than scanty nightclothes.

"I brought no food with me," said a man interviewed by Japanese television as he huddled near a fire in a garbage bin in a parking lot. "But someone gave me food. We're all sharing everything."

Takarazuka, Ashiya and Awaji Island were also damaged in the quake, which occurred a year after a magnitude 6.7 quake killed 61 people in and around the Northridge area north of Los Angeles.

"The quake came suddenly. I could not stop trembling with fear under my futon," Tomiko Watase, a coffee shop owner in the town of Awaji, told Kyodo New Service.

The military sent 2,000 soldiers to the quake zone. In Kobe, helicopters buzzed overhead as the government ferried in food and blankets.

The devastation shattered Japan's belief that sophisticated engineering would enable its newer buildings and roads to withstand a major quake.

Criticism was being voiced about prevention and rescue efforts.

"I think rescue measures have been very slow," said Tokyo University professor Osamu Koide. "I think there was a lack of quake-preventive knowledge."

Following damaging earthquakes in the United States, Japanese experts had confidently predicted that roadways in this country would stand up to even a serious quake. But sections of several major expressways collapsed, as did many modern buildings. Some overpasses buckled like an accordion.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Firm to evaluate food service

"There are four or five scenarios they could recommend," Connaughton said.

The firm will take into consideration the demographics of the campus, the student body and Union financial records as well as numerous interviews with students, faculty, staff and Union employees.

Becca Korphage, arts and sciences senator and the Student Senate representative to Union Governing Board, said she sat in on some input meetings with the firm.

"They wanted to know what we like and don't like about different aspects of food services, things we'd like to keep and don't want to keep," Korphage said.

The firm is supposed to make its recommendation March 1. From there, the committees will have a decision to make.

"The committee will have to put a lot of value in what they propose," Connaughton said.

Regardless of the outcome, Connaughton said the decision will be a difficult one. Aspects of current food services, the desires of the students and Union tradition will all have to be considered.

Once Ricca gives the Union its recommendation, the committees will be able to tell an architect how they want to handle food service so a design can be made to accommodate the plan.

Connaughton also said a number of architects have begun to look the Union over, but the actual interview process to pick the architect won't begin until late February or March.

Also in late February, there will be a telephone survey of about 1,000 students, faculty and staff members to get feedback on the different food-service options, he said.

Besides the survey, both Korphage and Connaughton hope the committees figure out a way to keep getting student input.

Actual construction for Union enhancement is planned to begin in May 1996.

Subway won't affect recreation the K-State and Manhattan connection that this shop has," Sills said.

Huffman said Subway and the Union will mutually benefit from the addition. The shop will take the place of the snack bar in the recreation department.

"I think it's going to do well for us, and it's going to do well for the Union," Huffman said.

The Union will also profit financially from Subway, Sills said.

"We do get a commission on their gross sales and rent for space they occupy to cover electricity, water, trash removal and pest control," Sills said.

In addition to the Union shop, a mobile food preparation cart in Trotter Hall will offer a limited Subway menu, Huffman said.

The Union used to have a limited noon menu at Trotter but because of financial reasons, had to stop serving in Trotter, Sills said.

"We couldn't operate it economically. We were losing money," Sills said.

With the exception of potato chips, Huffman said Subway offers a generally healthy menu.

"I see a trend with students trying to eat healthy," she said.

Scott McCobb, general manager of the Union location, said good service is one of his priorities.

"We really try to focus on our customer service," McCobb said.

Huffman said everything has been agreed upon in the contracts and the only thing that remains is the signing of the documents.

"It's not going to obstruct billiards or anything else," Huffman said. "We're just going to add things to it."

Panel: People can end racism

"From the age of six, I have been in fights for the color of my skin," he said.

Kathiellen Gilligan, panel member and sophomore in education and ethnic studies, said it's important to stay informed and to remember everyone can make a difference.

"People think they are too busy or that they can't make a difference," she said.

Gilligan said she attended the 1963 civil-rights march in Washington, D.C., with her mother when she was 14 years old.

"I listened to Martin Luther King make his speech, and I went home making it my responsibility as a white person to do as much as I could," she said.

Performances give film merit

Connelly) and Malik's roommate (Jason Wiles).

Singleton never resolves the relationship, moving on to the faster developing Malik-Remy conflict.

Columbus University is a poor portrayal of college life, seeming more like a place where people go to have bad things happen to them.

The film is not without its merits, Ice Cube delivers an excellent performance as Fudge, the fatherly sixth-year senior who knows the campus game from all angles. Laurence Fishburn also excels as Professor Phipps, a cool-minded political-science professor. John Singleton has proved he can tell a story in his other movies, but "Higher Learning" is a letdown. Its subject matter fails to dissolve the stereotypes it seeks to end.

LOVE & MARRIAGE

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN SPECIAL SECTION JANUARY 19, 1995

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

Elope cheap; go to Vegas

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Skipping town or sneaking to the closest Justice of the Peace is sometimes more exciting and a less expensive way of getting hitched.

That is exactly why Lance and Denise Lunsway eloped.

They eloped to Las Vegas, the wedding capital of the world, and were married at the Chapel of Flowers, just five days after they decided to elope.

Lance Lunsway, parking control supervisor for parking services, said he proposed to his future wife on Easter Sunday. In September, while making definite plans for the wedding, they decided to elope instead of waiting for a traditional ceremony.

"She (Denise) told me it would take a year, and I didn't understand why, so we did it in five days," Lunsway said.

He said part of the reason it was so difficult to plan for a traditional wedding was because Denise wanted the wedding in California, where she was from, and that meant they would have to move there to prepare for it.

Lunsway said at first they had planned on eloping to Las Vegas on Sept. 5, but they decided to wait until Sept. 10 so they could tell their family and friends.

He said 15 people ended up joining them on their elopement, which took 10 hours of planning on the phone with three different travel agents and airline companies.

The entire cost of the trip was about $4,000, which included plane tickets for four people, chapel rental, and gambling and spending money, Lunsway said.

The chapel rental cost about $500, which included fresh flowers, photographs, a video cassette, a limousine ride from the hotel to the chapel and a ride anywhere after the ceremony, he said.

Marriage licenses can be obtained in about 15 to 20 minutes at the marriage licensing bureau in Las Vegas.

Victoria Sanchez, deputy clerk of Las Vegas marriage licensing bureau, said 99,310 couples received marriage licenses in Las Vegas last year, which is 12,702 more than 1993.

2 RELIGIONS, 1 MARRIAGE

Family feuds, conflicts can be prevented through love

NOLAN SCRAMM
Collegian

Ah, that great thing called love. The most beautiful thing about it is that it knows no boundaries.

Except maybe for religion. Many couples find family relations can become a little hazardous when forced to choose between, for example, a formal Catholic ceremony and an informal Baptist ceremony.

Because college students are able to make contact with thousands of prospective mates, such interfaith marriages are becoming increasingly common.

Instead of having one partner convert to another's faith, many couples choose to keep their individual religious faiths intact.

Seth Galitzer, junior in music education, is Jewish, and his fiancée is Christian. Even so, he said he doesn't think it will create problems between them.

"It's not a big issue with us. We're just very happy with each other," he said.

Being happy with each other is one thing, but spreading that happiness to relatives is sometimes another. Luckily, the parents of the couple were understanding.

"We haven't had any friction along family lines, which makes things easier with all people involved," Galitzer said.

Father Keith Weber of St. Isidore's Catholic Church said the best way to prevent any friction is for each person to first gain a basic understanding of the other's faith, then to talk it over with the families involved.

In order to understand one's partner, each person must first understand the three basic background factors that have shaped the other person's life: family, school and religious faith, he said.

"They need to be able to work these things out before they get married, because they're going to have enough problems after they get married without these," Weber said.

Perhaps the most challenging part of an interfaith marriage is deciding what religious faith to raise the children in.

This is just one of the decisions that Abdellah Laytimi, a Muslim, had to deal with before marrying his Christian wife.

They decided they would not raise their children exclusively in either faith.

"We decided I wouldn't take them to a Mosque, and Mom wouldn't take them to church. If they ask questions, we will provide answers," Laytimi, a K-State graduate, said.

Galitzer said he and his fiancée both have traditions from their respective families they want to hand down to their children.

"We've talked about raising our children generally Jewish but sharing traditions with Melissa's side of the family," he said.

Jewish and Christian values are basically the same, so there shouldn't be much trouble, Galitzer said.

"When it comes to the two of us, what we share together is more important than our religious faiths," he said.

"It's not a big issue with us. We're just very happy with each other," he said.

Another big decision couples must make is how to handle the wedding.

When it came time for Laytimi to decide where to hold the ceremony, he and his finacée compromised. The couple met with the minister at his fiancée's church.

The ceremony was made slightly more formal, and references to Jesus were changed to God, because while Muslims accept that Jesus was a prophet, they do not believe in his divinity, he said.

When conflicting religious beliefs are involved, sometimes the best thing a couple can do is to focus on the greatest common denominator.

"If the marriage works or if it doesn't, you can't blame it on the religion. It's got to be something else," he said.

The responsibility of making a good marriage lies in the hands of the couple, not the religion itself, Laytimi said.

Weber said the success of the marriage depends on the commitment from the couple.

"I really believe interfaith marriages can be good, solid marriages if the couple is willing to work at it," he said.

▶ BEFORE THE VOWS

Expect nervousness, unexpected to happen

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

There are quite a few things to be nervous about on the day of a wedding, especially when the groom fails to arrive until 15 minutes before the ceremony begins.

This was the case at a wedding in western Kansas that Bill Shea, minister at Crestview Christian Church, was conducting the ceremony for.

It seems the groomsmen and best man had decided to go fishing.

"The bride wasn't angry," Shea said. "I think she was just thankful he was back."

During the wedding reception, Shea said the groom disappeared again.

"After the ceremony, they had taken him down to the local gas station, which was a mini-mart type of place," Shea said. "They handcuffed him to the front door and put a sign up saying 'Kisses $1.' They told him he had to earn $10 before they'd release him."

Eventually, Shea said, a member of the wedding party saw the groomsman, and the bridesmaids went and released him.

Jan Wolff, senior in accounting, said she has seen quite a few nervous brides and grooms. She has been the wedding coordinator at First United Methodist Church for the last two years.

"A lot of times, the grooms are just a basket case," Wolff said. "Other than just pacing, they frequently go outside to get air. Sometimes, they'll just sit there saying, 'I can't believe I'm getting married today.'"

Wolff said it is especially humorous when the bride and groom opt to not see each other before the ceremony.

"Sometimes, the groom will tease the bride and yell something like, 'I'm coming out. If you don't want to see me then cover your eyes,'" she said.

To ease nervousness, Wolff said she recommends that couples not come to the church until three hours before the wedding begins if pictures are to be taken, and two hours before the wedding begins otherwise.

"The longer you're there, the more nervous you get," she said.

Robert Schaedel, pastor of St. Luke's Lutheran Church, said to ease a couple's nerves, he tells them to expect something not to go the way they planned.

"I always say something's not going to go the way you expected," Schaedel said. "But, that's the thing you'll be laughing about in a year from now."

Schaedel said the level of nervousness varies with the individual.

"It varies with couples and with their maturity level," he said.

A lot of times, Shea said, the bride is more nervous than the groom because she feels the burden of the ceremony on her shoulders.

For weddings at Crestview Christian Church, Shea said, five counseling sessions dealing with topics such as finances and relationships in general take place before the wedding.

Counseling and the rehearsal before the wedding help ease the level of nervousness, Shea said, because the couple knows he will help them if they forget their lines or have other problems.

Wolff said in all the weddings she's been involved with, no two have been alike.

"All weddings are kind of formal, but the ones that are laid-back are much more fun," Wolff said. "Some get to be tedious, and it's just too much."

Brides-to-be are departing from traditional wedding colors and choosing dark, rich and sophisticated color schemes.

"Most weddings I do are in the rich jewel-tone colors," Rosa Jones, owner of Designer Boutique, said. "For the fall and winter, I made a lot of forest green and burgundy bridesmaid dresses. I think black and white is still popular with the girls, also."

Other stores that specialize in wedding invitations and supplies see other trends.

"I see a lot of people wanting burgundy now, but I think one of the big colors for the summer will be navy," Pat Leikam of Mr. P's Party Outlet said.

Trends in wedding colors depend on the season of the wedding. Dark colors are appropriate for fall and winter weddings, and light colors are seen during the spring and summer.

"You could have pastel weddings in June, July or August. I think we'll start seeing more of those when people start planning for their summer weddings," Leikam said.

Although pastel colors aren't as popular for bridesmaids dresses, pastels are popular with some people for wedding invitations and decorations.

"Some of the girls still like the pastels. I've noticed a few orders for lavender. Lavender is a nice color for invitations," Geri Walker of Confetti's said.

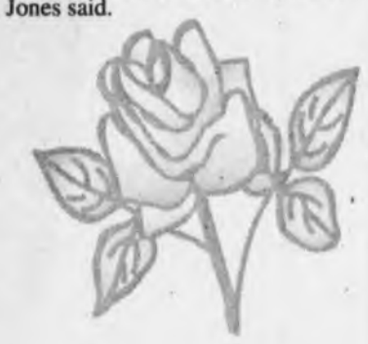
The colors of the decorations and invitations don't have to match the bridesmaids dresses. They can also complement the dress colors.

"As far as the new trends in colors are, gold and ivory are very popular. We sell mostly pearlescent balloons for the receptions. Nine out of 10 choose them over the regular balloons," Walker said.

When planning a wedding, choosing a dress and color that suits everyone is not an easy task. Since not all bridesmaids look alike, teal is a good choice for a color that is flattering on almost everyone.

"Teal is a good, basic wedding color. It's a good color for people of all skin and hair types," Jones said. "Teal looks good on blondes, redheads and people with dark hair."

Teal is also a popular color for invitations and decorations.



"I think our No. 1 color this year is teal, and of course white," Mrs. Von Riesen of Campbell's said.

Most people are planning their wedding with dark and sophisticated colors and choosing more simple dresses that could be worn again.

"The girls want to wear the bridesmaid dresses more than once, so they are choosing patterns that could be worn to other functions," Jones said.

Some people choose their wedding colors to go along with a theme.

"I've got one wedding I'm working on now that the colors are Kansas City Chief's colors — red and yellow. The dresses are red, and the flowers will be yellow," Jones said.

are all that is needed for a marriage license. Both parties must be 18 or above or have a parent's consent, she said.

Eloping is not for everyone. There are both disadvantages and advantages, he said.

Some advantages of eloping are it costs less, is quick to plan and more exciting than a traditional wedding, Lunsway said.

A disadvantage is that there is not a lot of time to make sure that eloping is exactly what you want to do, he said.

Lunsway said the only thing he regrets about eloping is he wishes it were somewhere other than Las Vegas.

"I always said if I eloped, I'd never go to Vegas," he said. "See where I ended up?"

Picking out the engagement ring might be harder than popping the question

There's a lot more to popping the big question than asking, "Will you marry me?"

Buying the perfect diamond for that special someone can be more difficult than you've ever imagined.

"You're at the mercy of the man who sells it to you," George Elliott, owner of Reed and Elliott Jewelers, said.

When a couple purchases a diamond, there are several questions they should ask, Elliott said.

The first questions should deal with cut, color, clarity and carat, he said.

Cut refers to the shape and the facets of the diamond. A thin cut is worth less than an ideal proportion cut because it reflects less light. An ideal proportion has brilliancy and fire because all white light is reflected as the colors in the spectrum. The number of facets in the stone is as important as the proportion in the value of the cut stone.

The marquise and the round or brilliant cuts are the most popular, said Mary Ann Kempke, manager of Zales Jewelers in Manhattan Town Center. Zales has sold several bridal sets featuring the new triangular trilliant cut, Kempke said.

Color refers to the color of the diamond, he said. When purchasing a diamond, steer clear of yellowish diamonds. A crystal-clear diamond has a color of zero and is the most precious and expensive diamond. One out of every 2.6 million diamonds are colorless, Elliott said.

The clarity of the stone is based on the inclusions present. Never buy a diamond without looking at it under a binocular microscope, Elliott said.

Elliott said looking at the diamond under a binocular microscope is very important in checking the quality of the stone. Inclusions invisible to the naked eye are visible under the microscope.

Carat is the weight of the stone. There are 100 points in a full carat. A half carat weighs 50 points, and a quarter carat weighs 25 points. When the diamond is cut, the weight may vary a few points from the accepted weights, he said.

The best sellers at Reed and Elliott are the diamonds between three-eighths and one-half carat, he said. The most popular shape is the marquis cut, followed by the brilliant or round cut.

"I think your best sellers are between $1,000 and $2,500," Elliott said.

The size of the band depends on the person's likes and dislikes and what is attractive on the woman's hand, Elliott said.

Rings can be tailored to suit the couple's budget, he said. One way to get a larger diamond for less money is to purchase a diamond with inclusions in it. Inclusions lower the value of the diamond but are often invisible to the naked eye, he said.

"Diamonds are rarely on sale," Elliott said.

Shoppers should be cautious of signs advertising sales, he said, because everyone pays the same price for the gold and the diamonds.

"Usually we sell one-half carat to a 1-1/4 carat. We can get up to a two carat upon request," she said.

The men's diamond wedding rings have also become popular.

"Our men's wedding bands have come a long way," she said.

▶ ENGAGEMENT PROCESS

Engagement length up to you

JANICE MELIA

Long engagements can create problems or help to strengthen a relationship.

"I think a long engagement is good. You can see them in a lot of situations, with different perspectives, see their reactions with different emotions and problems that you encounter along the way," Teresa Prothe, senior in animal science, said.

Prothe and her fiancé, Sean Rhodes, a student at Pittsburg State University, have been engaged for three years and plan to marry in June 1996. Their engagement will be 4-1/2 years total, Prothe said.

"My opinion would be that longer engagements are better," Don Pahl, pastor of Grace Baptist Church, said.

Pahl requires six to seven sessions of counseling for couples, each session lasting one to 1-1/2 hours.

"Plan for a life together, not just a wedding day. I know the day is important, but the life together is most important," Pahl said.

"Engagements are not any longer or shorter for college students. One to three years is pretty typical," Father Keith Weber, chaplain of St. Isidor's Catholic Student Center, said.

Longer engagements allow for more time to plan the wedding day.

"It provides a longer chance to get it all done. It is good to be prepared," Carrie Loomis, junior in biology/pre-physical therapy, said.

The ideal time of engagements seems to depend on those involved.

It is on a person-to-person basis, and people cannot be put into a mold, Jason Hildebrand, senior in animal science, said.

Weber said he agrees. Some people can date for a year and be sure, but others may need three to four years, he said.

Added pressures may occur when a couple has been going out for a long time.

"Everyone expects them to get married, but hopefully they will be old enough to make up their minds for themselves," Weber said.

Kathy Kippes, senior in elementary education, said she felt pressure to become engaged after her boyfriend graduated. But she said she is glad they waited.

For some couples, another problem with a long engagement is the need to resist the physical relationship before getting married when their religious beliefs discourage premarital sex.

"Look to the Lord for your source of love and be committed to purity. Then your honeymoon will be something special to share and not just a 'oh, it's you again' experience," Loomis said.

A long engagement may also spot future problems.

If the engagement is too long, a couple may drift apart. But if you can't stay together in the engagement, you probably can't make it through the marriage, Prothe said.

So what is the best way to deal with the pressures of a long engagement?

Kippes recommends setting a definite date when becoming engaged.

"I thought our engagement would be long and drawn out, but with a date you can see the end," Kippes said.

Hildebrand said she stresses the importance of communication.

"You've got to talk. You have to both know what you expect. A lot of times, the other person has something else in mind," Hildebrand said.

Prothe said she thought if more people would have longer engagements, divorce rates would be lower, and she said she recommends long engagements to others.

Sky is the limit for honeymooners

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Sand, sun and clear blue skies. Cinderella, Prince Charming and the whole fairy-tale wedding.

David Garvin, owner of Creative Travel Inc. in Manhattan, said the most popular locations for honeymoons are the Caribbean and Orlando, Fla.

"I'd say probably half of our vacations that we do for honeymoons are in the Caribbean," Garvin said.

In Orlando, a lot of the hotels do Walt Disney weddings, he said. Couples can get married in Cinderella's castle, Davy Crockett's frontier or one of the pavilions in Epcot Center, Garvin said.

Usually for a Disney wedding, the bride and groom, a couple of close friends and the parents attend the wedding, he said.

"It's more expensive than if you did it yourself," Garvin said.

He said he thought it would be interesting to get married in Cinderella's castle.

"They'll put together anything you want," Garvin said.

Terry Pearson, president of Kansas State Travel, said his No. 1 honeymoon location was Florida, followed closely by cruises.

The two most popular cruises are five-day cruises from Miami to Mexico and five-day cruises to the Bahamas.

"I think the five-day is the most popular part of both the cruises," Pearson said.

Most weddings happen on the weekend, and the cruise sails on Monday and returns on Friday. This makes it easy for a cruise to fit into a schedule, he said.

Another combined wedding and honeymoon idea is getting married on a ship, Garvin said. Marriages at sea are legal again and are becoming more popular.

"A real popular idea is to get married in Jamaica," Garvin said. Couples can marry in Jamaica for a small fee.

An expensive but off-the-beaten-track honeymoon might be the Turk Islands. The Turk Islands are 500 miles south of the Bahamas. Once you've landed in the islands, you fly out on a commuter plane to another island. The plane lands on a dirt airstrip that ends in the water, and you are picked up in a golf cart and taken to an eight-room hotel.

There are a couple of hundred islands in the Caribbean, he said. Many of the smaller islands have hotels with five to 10 rooms, but they are more expensive.

"The sky is the limit," Garvin said.

One of the problems couples and their travel agents face is limited time to plan the honeymoon, he said. When people come in four months before the wedding, it's hard to find what they want, Garvin said.

"If you're getting married next summer, plan it now," he said.

Couples often know a year in advance when they plan to be married, so they can begin planning and save money on their honeymoon, Pearson said. Couples that book their cruises a year in advance can save up to 30 percent, he said.

Another problem occurs when couples have different ideas of what they want to do, Garvin said. The bride will often want to go to the beach, and the groom will want to go skiing, he said.

Garvin said he encourages couples to buy all-inclusive packages. Food, drinks, hotels and transportation are all included in these packages.

"You pay one fee, and that's it," Pearson said. "That's an easier thing to budget."

Garvin said couples know up front how much the honeymoon will cost because food, drinks and entertainment are included in the fee along with lodging and other expenses so they can plan for it financially.

"We really try to get the best price possible," Garvin said.

▶ MUSIC OPTIONS

Play something more contemporary, Sam

CARY CONOVER
Collegian

Wedding music isn't what it used to be.

Although it's simply a matter of personal preference, choosing music for a wedding and reception is still a big task on any wedding preparation checklist.

"The quality of music is very important in a wedding," said Lyn Scardina, partner of the Wedding Ladies, a wedding coordinating service in Topeka.

Scardina said traditional songs are still common in weddings, especially during the prelude, procession and recession, but she said many couples want a special song played in their wedding, perhaps after the rings have been exchanged.

"I think it's special when the bride and groom can pick out a special song," Scardina said. "What you're going to find a lot of times are the popular songs of the day. 'I Swear' is very popular at weddings."

Scardina said the ethnicity of the couple has a lot to do with the type of music that is performed at their wedding.

> "The quality of music is very important in a wedding."
> LYN SCARDINA
> Partner of the Wedding Ladies

"When you have a couple with a strong ethnic background, say Scottish, they'll pretty much know what they want," she said.

"We never have the bride come to us and say, 'I'm one-tenth Irish and I want an Irish wedding.' It's going to be enough to the couple that they're going to know what kind of music they want."

But in almost every wedding there is a soloist, whether it be a hired musician or the groom singing to the bride.

"I would say 99 out of 100 weddings have a soloist in them," Scardina said.

Christy Salmans, senior in secondary education, said her and her husband's families have a tradition of singing in each other's weddings. For her, finding a soloist was as easy as calling her brother, who sings at weddings.

"I knew from the very beginning that I wanted him to sing," Salmans said. "He's got an incredible gift of writing songs and singing them," Salmans said.

Her brother, Tim Suttle, graduate student in secondary education, not only performs the traditional songs associated with most weddings but is also able to write an original song.

"If somebody wants an original song, I'll write a song for them," Suttle said.

Suttle said he charges around $65 for a usual wedding performance. If a couple wants an original song, however, it will cost an additional $50. He said it takes him a couple weeks to write each song.

"It takes a lot of practice. They definitely get their $50 worth, but I love doing it," Suttle said.

Suttle said he spends a lot of time working with the couple and talking to them to find out more about them for the lyrics of the song. Usually, the song is about the lives of the bride and groom.

"It's completely how they want it," Suttle said. "I can usually get a feel for what they want. Some like country music; others like cheesy love songs."

"The music I'm more geared for is kind of a rough folk. I like a lot of James Taylor's music," said Suttle, who performs his music by singing and playing piano.

For music during receptions and parties after weddings, Complete Music is one local business specializing in mobile disc-jockey service. Complete Music played at 734 dances during the 1994 fiscal year in Manhattan alone. Mark Kuecker, Kansas area manager of Complete Music, said of those 734, about 50 or 60 percent were weddings.

"Reception entertainment is our main focus," he said.

Children can distract

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

When using small children in a wedding, couples should keep in mind that problems could easily develop, said Phyllis Livingston of Livingston's Bridal Gallery in Topeka.

The youngest recommended age for having a child in a wedding is 4, although younger children often are in weddings, Livingston said.

Small children can often be distracting and are unpredictable, Livingston said.

"I don't think there are any advantages to having a small child in a wedding," Livingston said. "I tell people that unless it's someone in the immediate family or a close friend, then to pass on the flower girl or ringbearer."

Livingston also said when planning a wedding to keep in mind that children younger than 5 should not have much responsibility, and the ringbearer should only use a token ring.

When her own daughter was in a wedding, Livingston said she walked down the aisle then said, "Mommy, I have to go potty."

"When children do something cute in a wedding, everybody laughs," Livingston said, "but still it distracts from the wedding."

Livingston recommends using older children in the wedding.

"Age really isn't important. It's what the person means to you," she said.

For those couples who do decide to use small children in their wedding, finding a tuxedo or a formal dress for small children to wear is not difficult.

"We can rent tuxedos for small kids," said Michaela Turner, sales associate at Lowman's Men's Store. "It's the same price as the others."

For children, there is an option of renting shorts instead of pants for the tuxedo, Turner said.

"During the summer, most people tend to get the shorts, but most of the time they rent pants," she said.

The issue today is not who's superior, but instead how we can save this country, said Tony Brown, host and executive producer of the long-running TV series "Tony Brown's Journal."

Brown presented the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week University Convocation Lecture Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

Americans must end racism to ensure future success of the country, Brown said.

"There are no victors in a racist society. There is this paradigm that in the future one race must defeat the other."

Brown quoted King as saying, "We'll survive together as friends or die separate as fools."

We will find out soon if King was correct, Brown said.

"We're down to you and me — we may not like one another, but we're all we've got," he said.

Brown said by the year 2000, 50 percent of the work force will be female and non-white. White males will no longer be the majority in the work force.

Brown's said affirmative action must be reformed. Work shouldn't be an issue of color, but must be aimed at those who need it, the poor people, Brown said.

"I, Tony Brown, don't need affirmative action," he said. "The person who really needs it is the young boy on the corner selling drugs and his sister on the other corner selling you-know-what.

"The weakest link of the chain must be strengthened first to make the entire chain stronger," Brown said.

Anyone in need of help, no matter what color, should be able to get help from the people in America, and race should not matter, Brown said.

"If you are polka-dotted and want to run the world, you can," Brown said.

Brown said black people have spent too much time trying to be liked and not enough time being equal.

"Black people need to understand that only liberation in themselves and knowing they can do what they decide to do will make others like them," Brown said.

Heidi Johnson, freshman in occupational therapy, said she enjoyed Brown's speech and learned a lot from it.

"I thought it was interesting that he believes it is up to the individual to believe in themselves," she said.

Christopher Obi, graduate student in business, said he thinks Brown's views are becoming more conservative.

"I still more agree than disagree with his views," he said.

Computer network in demand

MARY EMERSON
Collegian

With a little help from K-State, the sophistication of computers and high-speed communications networks is becoming a reality for Manhattan public school students.

Clark Reinke, associate superintendent for Site Support Services for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said, "We must approach teaching and learning through technology. It's the future."

This is possible through the Comprehensive District Technology Plan passed last week for USD 383 by the Board of Education.

The plan was proposed to update the computer systems and provide an interactive network for the Manhattan schools.

The plan is a five-phase process to be completed during the next two years.

The district's goal is to place data retrieval, video and telecommunications systems in each classroom. This includes computers, phones and various forms of TV and video technology.

All school buildings will be connected to form an area-wide network with Robinson Education Center as the hub.

The area schools are also trying to become part of the K-State computer network.

K-State already has connections with USD 383, but they are slow and indirect.

The College of Education is working with Reinke and other members of the technology plan to improve the connection.

Michael Holen, dean of the College of Education, said, "Some of the clinical instructors at the schools are already connected to K-State through the use of modems, but it is very slow and lacks elegance."

"We are trying to make a decision that benefits all the parties involved. Three different options are being explored. One — to continue the way things are through the use of modems. Two — to install different equipment for direct connection at both ends. And three — for USD 383 to use a different network and pay for direct hook-up," Holen said.

Tom Hawk, director of staff development and special projects for USD 383, said, "Extending the partnership with the College of Education to electronic mail and communications will benefit both the district and the University."

There are also issues concerning security and file storage that must be discussed before a decision can be reached, Hawk said.

Rick Summerhill, assistant director of Networks and Systems at K-State's Computing and Network Services, said the decision should be finalized soon.

None of the options would require any major changes for K-State's computing facilities because of continuous updates made by Computing and Network Services, Holen said. The only thing that will change is the speed of

Senate fails to override veto of election guidelines

Student senators failed to override the veto on the election guidelines passed in December.

Senate voted down a motion to override the veto 17-39 at Thursday night's meeting.

Brandon Clark, arts and sciences senator, said spending limits lead to an unequal playing field.

"A candidate running for student body president is not going to say that he spent $2,000 too much," Clark said. "There are always ways for people to get around the rules."

Becca Korphage, arts and sciences senator, said most people should not have a problem staying within the spending guidelines. However, she said she sees problems with the future makeup of student government.

"If we take out the election guidelines, we are opening the door for the group to become an elitist organization," Korphage said.

Jeff Peterson, student body president, offered an amendment that included campaign spending limits to the election guidelines. This bill came up for first readings and will be voted on next Thursday.

Senate also discussed the possibility of creating a chief financial officer position. The CFO would join the allocations chair and privileged fee chair in allocating student funds.

Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, said she thought the position was an unnecessary addition to Senate bureaucracy.

"We would be having three people doing the job that one person did just two years ago," she said. "I think we need to look at the allocations process itself."

Bryndon Meinhardt, privileged fee chairman, said he understood concerns of the senators about hiring an additional staff member. However, he said the allocations process is too much for two people to handle.

"I hate to hire new people and spend the extra money," Meinhardt said. "But I think this new position would give students better service."

Senate voted down the bill to create the CFO position 37-16. The bill needed 39 votes, a two-thirds majority to pass.

Senate also filled three vacant positions at Thursday's meeting.

Close your eyes; you're getting ve-r-ry sleepy

"Close your eyes. You have nowhere to go and nothing you really have to do. Just relax.

"Ignore me. You're on vacation. You're on a beach — it makes no difference what beach, just a gorgeous beach. The sand is soft, and you're totally relaxed ..."

Sound like a bad episode of "Three's Company?" No, it is a hypnosis session.

Pam Johnson of Chapman attends hypnosis classes to learn how to use her mind for relaxing and losing weight.

Overall, Johnson has lost 70 pounds and said she feels wonderful.

"I was 230 pounds and never had a come-on. And then to have a guy interested in your butt is a real good feeling," she said.

Johnson gives all the credit to her hypnotist, Clifford Webb. She said the key is going to the sessions with an open mind and being ready to relax.

Webb has 20 years' experience in the field of hypnotherapy and teaches that everyone can lose a bad habit, such as overeating or smoking, by altering the subconscious and liberating the success mechanism.

"Each one of us have a degree of acceptance, but we tend to accept negative thoughts more than positive thoughts," Webb said.

Self-confidence, motivation and enthusiasm are some of the thoughts Webb likes to reprogram the thinking process with.

Johnson said one of the most noticeable changes she made was replacing the amount of Dr. Pepper she drank with water.

"That has been what impressed me the most," Johnson said.

Webb also teaches people how to stop eating chocolate. During hypnosis he places a piece of chocolate in a person's hand. Slowly, he brings the person to realize that the chocolate is actually a piece of

▶ 73-YEAR-OLD K-STATE PROFESSOR OF VETERINARY MEDICINE DIES IN SLEEP

A former professor of veterinary medicine and head of the department of veterinary diagnosis died Monday on his way to Florida for a vacation.

Harry D. Anthony died in his sleep in Clarksville, Tenn. He was on his way to vacation in Florida. He was 73.

Anthony was with the College of Veterinary Medicine for 31 years. He was head of the diagnostic lab from 1967 to 1986, when he retired. Anthony helped develop the lab into its present status as a prominent regional facility.

The lab serves in helping veterinarians evaluate tissue samples for conducting bacterial studies.

Anthony's studies brought him international recognition in the area of livestock-disease diagnosis. He won the Pope Memorial Award for Outstanding Work in Veterinary Diagnostic Laboratory Medicine in 1983 from the American Association of Veterinary Diagnosticians.

"The Pope Award is a big honor. It's a peer acknowledgement of all of his accomplishments," Mahlon Vorhies, head professor of veterinary medicine said.

In 1974, he was chosen Veterinarian of the Year by the Kansas Veterinary Medicine Association.

Anthony's work in the College of Veterinary Medicine helped develop the department and earned him an international reputation in diagnosis of animal diseases.

Anthony was involved in a number of professional societies, including the Kansas Veterinary Medicine Association, the American Veterinary medicine Association, the Kansas Livestock Association and United States Animal Health Association.

Anthony

"I've known Harry since about 1969. He and I were members of the American Veterinary Medicine Association. He was president in 1974, and I was in 1975," Vorhies said.

Anthony was a Kansas native, born in Fredonia in 1921. He graduated from Fredonia High School in 1938 and served in World War II. Anthony was a member of the 41st Infantry ground forces unit and served for three years as Sergeant.

After his service in the U.S. Army, Anthony attended Coffeyville Community College for one year before earning his doctorate in veterinary medicine from K-State in 1952.

Anthony was appointed by Gov. Mike Hayden to be one of the five original members of the Kansas Racing Commission after his retirement from K-State.

Anthony was the only member with experience in racing as he served as a race-track veterinarian in Chicago for three years.

Anthony is survived by his wife, Alberta Seavey, whom he married May 21, 1955; a son, Seavey Anthony, of Olathe; and a daughter, Lisa Gardener, of Lenexa.

Anthony was cremated, and a memorial service is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Saturday at the First Congregational Church in Manhattan.

▶ FIRE CAUSES KOBE RESIDENTS TO FLEE CITY DESPITE BLOCKED ROADS

NISHINOMIYA, Japan (AP) — Leaving behind a city ravaged by earthquake and fires, thousands of refugees trekked out of Kobe Thursday along a route of charred rubble dotted with bouquets of pale flowers for the dead.

The nearest railway stop that still had service to neighboring Osaka was a 3-1/2-hour walk away.

"It's a miracle none of us was injured," housewife Noriko Sato said as she hiked out of one of the hardest-hit areas with her husband and two children. "But we have to leave. There's no water or gas or food."

They planned to stay with friends.

Fires flared again Thursday in central Kobe, and an old woman wept inconsolably beside her partially collapsed house as flames approached.

"It's inherited from my ancestors," she said. "I cannot let it burn."

In Kobe's gutted center, small knots of mourners gathered at homes that had collapsed or burned.

The main Osaka-Kobe road was closed off Thursday except to supply and emergency vehicles, which were able to make progress for the first time. Until then, even wailing ambulances sat trapped for hours in mammoth traffic jams.

On one of the few trains still running, well-dressed workers heading to Osaka offices sat side-by-side with grimy, bleary-eyed quake victims.

The exodus from the city was met by a steady stream of others hiking into the city with backpacks and luggage carts loaded with water, food and other relief supplies for their friends and relatives.

Authorities were so busy with the immediate task of putting out fires and saving survivors trapped in wreckage that other safety hazards went unattended.

At the site of a Kobe chemical factory that had collapsed and burned, the air was heavy with an acrid smell. The street was blocked off with barrels of chemicals marked with signs warning of danger.

"We have no idea what to do, when we'll be able to get back to work or even how to clean this up," factory supervisor Kiyomitsu Takamura said.

Some residents tried to re-establish the routines of everyday life.

On a street lined with ruined homes, a man walked his dog, looking straight ahead with a blank expression.

Compliance on review

Resident wants accessibility for those with disabilities

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Lewis "Tobie" Tyler and the city of Manhattan will be back in court Jan. 26 to review the city's progress toward compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The city of Manhattan says it has complied fully to a district judge's order to make proper improvements and modifications in the city before the mandatory deadline.

Tyler said he disagrees.

Tyler, a Manhattan resident, filed the precedent-setting disability discrimination lawsuit under the ADA on Feb. 9, 1993.

District Court Judge Dale Saffels ruled on July 7, 1994, that the city had to make certain ADA improvements by Jan. 26. The improvements included all curb cuts, a self-evaluation plan, modifications to several parks and a transition plan, said L.J. Leatherman, attorney for Tyler.

The self-evaluation plan involves a perspective view of policies, practices and services provided by the city in order to provide disabled people with equal accessibility.

The transition plan involves the removal of architectural barriers, he said.

"We believe that every one thing that was required by us by judge's order has been completed," Jim Pearson, city manager, said.

But Tyler said the city has not met the judge's orders completely.

He said while many of the curb cuts are good, there are a number of them that have not been constructed and others that are unsafe.

In addition to the curb ramps, Tyler said several parks lack accessibility to wheelchairs because of barriers and an unpaved surface.

He also said he was told there would be more handicapped parking spaces built, but there were not.

Tyler said he wants accessibility.

"I only want what all average people want, disabled or not disabled," Tyler said.

He said that when he returns to court on Jan. 26, he expects the judge will rule that the city has not completed the required improvements.

The expense of the modifications, which was primarily the cost of constructing 1,000 curb ramps, totaled about $700,000. An additional $600,000 was spent on the transition plan, Pearson said.

He said it is his expectation that there will always be a need for more improvements, and the need is not just going to stop.

"There's just no ending point here. It's an ongoing thing," Pearson said.

"I think compliance with ADA is something that will require continued attention," he said.

K-State's budget may be increased

ANGIE STUMP
Collegian

TOPEKA — K-State may receive a 3.8-percent budget increase for fiscal year 1996.

The Kansas Board of Regents met Thursday to discuss how Gov. Bill Graves' budget recommendations will affect students.

Among Graves' recommendations:

- A 3-1/2-percent average increase for the basic budget of all universities.
- A 3-1/2-percent increase in student salaries.
- A 2-percent tuition surcharge at K-State and the University of Kansas for the purchase of equipment.
- Funding for the library enhancement initiative.

Ray Hauke, director of planning and budget for the Kansas Board of Regents, said the governor's recommendations are good ones.

The board also discussed the report presented by the task force on telecommunications.

The Telecommunications and Information Technology Committee has developed a three-phase program.

Regent Karen Krepps, chairman of the committee, said, "The goal of our committee is to tie all of the universities together with the use of telecommunications."

The first phase of the program would include 12 sites. K-State would be the centralized control center of the program.

Krepps said the program will provide multimedia opportunities to state colleges and allow nontraditional students to take college classes in community centers across Kansas.

The board members voted unanimously to support an environmental scan of the economic, cultural, social, political and technological dynamics likely to affect Kansas education for the next two decades.

The cost of the scan is to be limited to $40,000, and a request for funds to support the scan will be requested from the governor.

"The reason for the scan is to make sure that as the Board of Education, regents and the Legislature work on funding and governance, that we are all using the same data base," Regent Phyllis Nolan said.

Other items the board approved:

- Approval for K-State to raise private funds for the construction of an accelerated testing laboratory building of the Department of Civil Engineering.
- Allowing K-State to request authorization to raise private funds to help complete phase four of the renovation of Calvin Hall.
- Approval to tear down four buildings on the K-State-Salina campus.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

No class would boost Landon Lecture attendance

The University pays thousands of dollars to Landon lecturers so our education can be expanded by listening to these important people.

President Wefald needs to call off morning classes Tuesday.

That morning, the Landon Lecture Series will bring another excellent speaker to the K-State campus.

Once again, we are having an internationally influential speaker coming to our University to explain his beliefs about national issues.

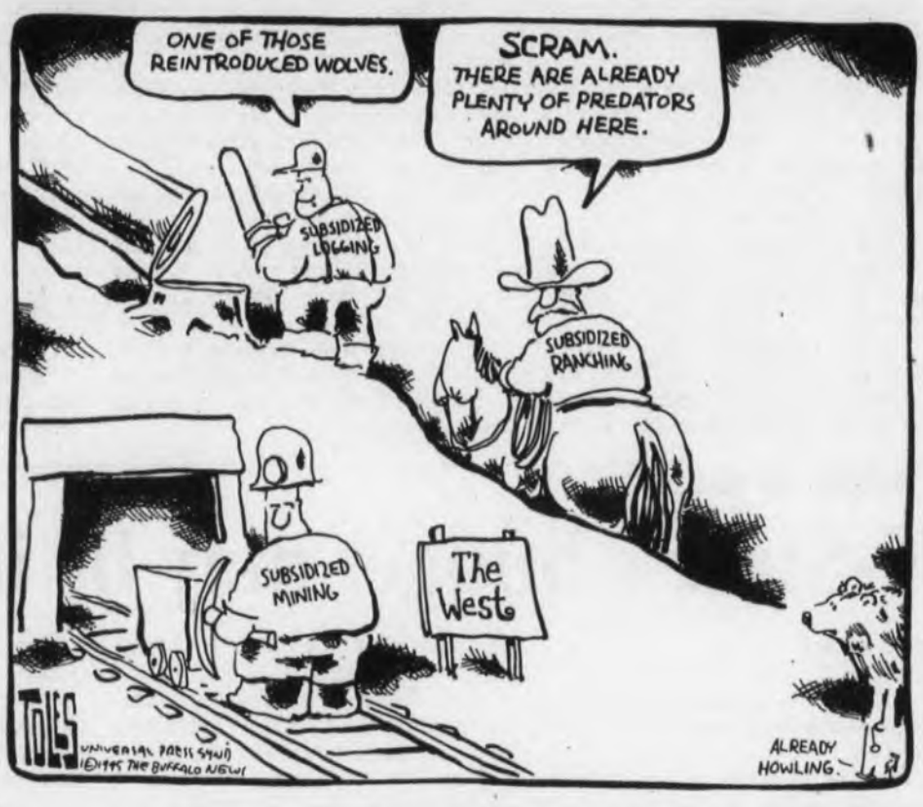
It is too bad most students won't get to see it.

Most students will be in class, because they are required to be.

Professors are supposed to excuse students from class so they can go to Landon lectures.

The reality is that it rarely happens. Tests are scheduled, labs are planned, and life goes on.

Students not only have to get out of 9:30 a.m. and 10:30 a.m. classes, but they must get out of 8:30 a.m. classes just so they can get to Bramlage before the lecture starts.



While it's true that many students wouldn't go, many other students want to, but can't.

The University pays thousands of dollars to Landon lecturers so our education can be expanded by listening to these important people.

They waste the money by making it hard or impossible for students to attend.

Let's call off class for a good cause.

1995: year of hope

JAMIE PROVOST GUEST COLUMN

It was a great day in Nebraska on Jan. 1. It was a great day in America. You don't have to be a Husker fan to know it was right. It wasn't just a win for Nebraska; it was a win for substance over style. Nebraska proved they were the true champions in Miami. Tommie Frazier won the MVP, but there were no MVPs in the sensational, media-hyped ratings game we call the Orange Bowl or the National Championship.

It was a sweet win, as well as an unselfish one. Both Brook Berringer and Frazier, as well as the entire team, contributed to the win. They both won it for the team. They won it for Tom Osborne and his struggle to be a winner — a winner in his own eyes. Making it to the Orange Bowl isn't enough in this society based on money and style. Osborne has built a dynasty in Lincoln, and it is sad that his entire program is based on one game.

The game is over, and I guess we could argue who the true winner is with Penn State. I'm not a Nebraska fan, but if there were a true champion this year, it was Nebraska. This doesn't include the fact that Oregon ran up almost a career day in offense in its losing effort to Penn State. But in my mind, if Penn State wants to be the championship team, it deserves to be called such. It doesn't need a trophy to know the players are champions.

The first snow on the ground has come to signal the new year. A time for change, and a time for hope. Nebraska will feel it this year.

Will America feel it?

Is the year 1995 just another moment in time, or is it a year of struggle and change? Is it the year when we overcome our inner struggle to be free? With movies out like "Natural Born Killers" and "Pulp Fiction," it makes you wonder what is happening and what is going to happen.

Nathaniel Hawthorne speaks of the Power of Darkness in us all that comes out when our desires want to be heard. Everybody has something to say. Everybody wants to cry out and be heard. It's not what's on the outside that makes you different. There's what you have inside your heart and what you believe to be right and good. Your style and your status will fade with time, just as the actor will get tired of acting and wish for a more fulfilling life.

As I was paying fees and getting my financial aid this semester, it amazed me how it affected me to have money. It was almost sinister how money could affect how happy I was. Just think of all the things I could buy to feed this demonic passion inside. This dependent society of people crying out for something to believe in is lacking something.

We all have something to overcome physically and internally. This believing is what helps us overcome our flaws and accept them. We are all different and deserve to be loved, and that substance is better than style. Beauty is in the eye of the beholder, and love is the passion for the imperfect beauty in this imperfect world.

In "Bankruptcy 1995" by Gerald J. Swanson and Harry E. Figgie, they speak of this being the year when we can't pay the interest on debt. Is this true, or just another book published that is never read? The Republicans have control of Congress now, and the eye is on them.

Rush Limbaugh and his conservative allies have talked and talked about how the Democrats have lost control of our Congress and have lost grip with the American people's confidence in the system. Well, it is their ballgame now, and they must put up or shut up. Do they have the answers? Or are they going to try a few things, and if they don't work blame the Democrats again? I don't think Americans will fall for it this time. Can the Republicans turn it around? I wish them heavenly intervention.

With the ethnic wars in Bosnia and religious wars in Ireland, we need to realize that life is more than just country, heritage, race or religion. It's not about who's right or wrong or who's to blame. We all suffer and learn to try and make it in this world. We all have suffering in common — some more than others. The only thing we consistently need in this world is love. The inner struggle is part of the pain in life but also part of the passion — the passion that must make sacrifices. We can understand each other better by standing on this common ground. If we all make sacrifices, we can realize we all want one thing. As long as we have that one thing, a struggle is worth it.

Maybe I'm misled. What riches have I amassed? I am a king in my own eyes. The days go by, and so do the years with little change and hope. It was a great day for Tom, Nebraska and the road less traveled.

So what happens if we stop trying and suffering? Do we stop keeping our minds open? Do we stop thinking? Do we stop loving?

Jan. 1 was all right with the world for at least one great night. Substance triumphed over style, and good triumphed over evil. In this uncaring world, passion is more rewarding than indifference.

Multiculturalism can't be taught; it must reach the heart, mind

JEREMY STEPHENS

Let me begin by saying that I am NOT a member of the American Civil Liberties Union, the Ku Klux Klan, the National Organization for Women, the Rainbow Coalition or the Black Panthers. I am an individual with a particular set of ideas and beliefs that cannot be represented by another individual's organization.

I say this to preface what will appear in the following paragraphs because the topic of multiculturalism is highly sensitive to some who will read this column, and it is my intent that these words are not taken in a reactionary manner. Please consider what I am saying before I am labeled.

Recently, there has been much discussion on whether or not this campus is diverse enough to provide an education for the "real world." This statement assumes two things: that diversity can be measured by examining the racial composition of this university, and that diversity defined in this fashion somehow ensures success over those who were never exposed to this kind of "diversity."

If diversity is measured simply by counting the presence of minorities, then we are no better off than discriminating on the basis of race, for neither can occur without considering a person's skin color, which is precisely what the civil rights movement is trying to prevent.

In his "I Have a Dream" speech, one of Martin Luther King Jr.'s key points was that the goal of colorblindness was among the highest priorities.

When diversity is measured by skin color, it mocks exactly what King was trying to accomplish when he said we should not be judged by our skin color, but by the content of our character. This leads us to what diversity is.

Diversity is the presence of a wide range of ideas and beliefs, without regard to the skin color of the person who holds those ideals. The presence of a certain number of persons with different skin colors does not constitute diversity, because ideas and beliefs are what make people different.

If you have an equal number of every race under the sun represented, but they all think the same way, you do not have diversity. In other words, to use a quote I once saw in a psychology class, "Where all think alike, there is not much thought."

Do not construe this to mean I am advocating minorities are unable or should not teach at an institution of higher learning. I have been instructed by and have become acquainted with minority members of our faculty and find their character beyond reproach and their instruction more than adequate.

Many in the area of education have called for diversity (in a racial sense) and multicultural training for our teachers so that these concepts can be taught in the classroom. These concepts have been fought for with religious fervor and propose to give peace and harmony between people, much like a religion.

Now that we are so intent on removing religion from all functions of the state, let us keep these religions in the home, where parents can instruct their children in the way they should go.

I do not advocate any discriminatory policy, only that as of yet, freedom of thought and speech are still protected in this country, and multiculturalism is an attempt to prevent free thought. Let us use the same argument that applies to the presence of religions in the state: Let the pupils decide for themselves.

Teaching multiculturalism also assumes that racism and bigotry can be ended with such things as tolerance and enlightenment. I will be the first to say that an emotion or a state of mind will not change anything.

Change occurs in the hearts and minds of people, not in rhetoric that flows freely and at no cost.

To those of you who are intent on making the world aware, I would like you to know that I speak for many when I say, "I am aware." Posters, slogans and buzzwords all seem lovely, but they do not affect change any more than the verbiage of multiculturalism.

During the past week, as the celebration of King's birthday has progressed, many have questioned how far the civil-rights movement has come, where it is now and how much further it should go. In our present setting, I question the direction in which civil-rights organizations are heading, for equality has been achieved under the law.

"The presence of a certain number of persons with different skin colors does not construe diversity, because ideas and beliefs are what make people different."

All American citizens are provided the same rights under the law, and further legislation will begin to stack the deck against one group. I do not question the original need for the movement before the law was equally applied, and I deeply respect King for three reasons.

He knew what he believed in and why, who he believed in and why, and he sought justice rather than retaliation for those who persecuted him.

However, the latter concept does not govern those leading the movement today. As time has passed, laws have been passed, and court decisions have been made that are not in the interest of justice but are vengeful in nature.

For example, under the Civil Rights Act of 1991, practices for contracting by the federal government give preference to minority- and women-owned businesses. Just this week, a construction company in Washington, D.C., was denied a contract from the government because it was owned by whites. In addition, the contract was awarded to a minority-owned company on the basis that the company was minority-owned.

These practices are no better than the segregation that once marred this country. It was my understanding that the purpose of the civil-rights movement was to level the playing field.

Let us not make it uneven again for the sake of "fairness." It is my hope that King's dream that character matters most becomes a reality.

Japan deserves prominence

Dear editor,

I'm sorry, but this really bugs me. One thousand eight hundred people die in an earthquake, and it makes page 10. Would a nuclear holocaust get page six? Or the destruction of the world by space invaders page two? We would only be so lucky, for then we would not be forced to endure the Collegian.

P.S. Good crosswords.

▶ RELIGION

God belongs on campus

Dear editor,

Maybe it does need to be stated more bluntly — we need to give our creator His rightful place back as the God and King of the Nation. America was founded on the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that is the only reason why she has been a world leader.

However, we have gone against the warning of Moses that he gave in Dueteronomy 8:19, "And it shall come about if you ever forget the lord your God and go after other Gods and serve them and worship them, I testify against you today that you shall surely perish." He was speaking nationally, and the same promise holds true for us today.

In the 1960s, our leaders decided we didn't need God anymore and that we could do just fine on our own, so they banned Him from our schools and other public arenas. Thirty years later, we can see the results: teen-age pregnancies, sexually transmitted diseases and violent crime have skyrocketed, and ACT and SAT scores have plummeted, just to name a few. The AIDS epidemic and natural disasters of a number and magnitude like this country has never seen before are merely warnings of the coming destruction if we don't return to Him on our knees. Therefore, I call and challenge all those who call Jesus Christ their Lord to stand up and be the leaders of those who will return this nation to its godly heritage. The university campuses across America are cesspools of liberal agenda. They are governed by a hateful, anti-Christ spirit. I ask, will K-State follow suit or be the leader in restoring the true freedom that our founding fathers intended?

"The university campuses across America are cesspools of liberal agenda."

Smatterings

Compiled from Collegian staff and Associated Press reports

666 — the number of the kindergartner

Children can be little monsters, but boy No. 666 at Evansville, Ind.'s Tekoppel Elementary School is no satanic student.

An automated computer system gave the little boy the biblical number of the beast, principal Sandra Altheide says.

Altheide said she was unaware that the family was upset until she heard the boy's uncle had called a local radio show to complain.

After calling the boy's mother, Altheide agreed to change the number.

"She had never requested a change," Altheide said. "She has now."

After Smatterings asked the boy if he was happy about the change, he turned bright red, and smoke came out of his ears.

"Yes, I am very pleased with having the number changed," the boy said, in a voice about three octaves lower than expected.

A later press release from the devil himself said that he was petitioning for a new number as well, citing the "fears and stereotypes that have now become associated with 666."

Brownies are getting bitten by the taxman

It's up to a judge to decide whether Maine can take a bite out of Girl Scouts' cookie sales.

The state of Maine wants to impose a 6-percent snack tax on the cookies. The Girl Scouts say their cookies should be exempt because the annual sale is a fundraiser for a nonprofit group.

Either way, a lawyer for Girl Scouts said the organization needs a ruling because the cookies are being sold, and scouts would have to collect extra money if a tax is imposed.

"We need to know whether they will collect $3 a box or $3.18," said Jane Hartwell, lawyer for the Girl Scouts' Kennebec Council.

Documents acquired by Smatterings indicated that nothing is sacred from the tax-crazy legislators of Maine.

Next on the list to be taxed is: Scout-o-Rama tickets, pancake feeds and, if they can find a way, anything cheap and fun.

Fan slaying result of possible Big Mac attack

A stranger approached a group of men and asked them if they were fans of the hometown team. When they said yes, he opened fire, killing one and seriously wounding another.

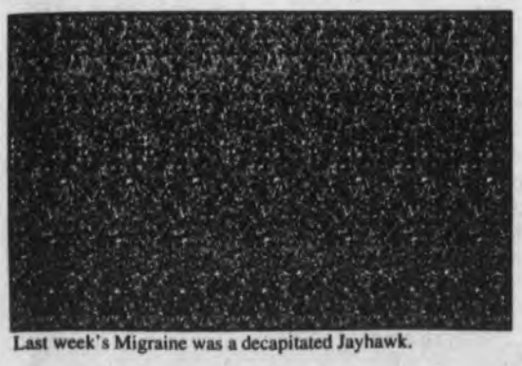
Police assume the gunman in Monday night's shooting was a fan of the Dallas Cowboys, defeated Sunday in the playoff that sent the San Francisco 49ers to the Super Bowl, San Francisco homicide inspector Napoleon Hendrix said Wednesday.

Of course, Cowboy fans are usually blamed for most of the world's problems on the West Coast.

Police also are not ruling out a plot to relieve the 49er fans of their prized Super Bowl tickets by unnamed ticketless suspects appearing in McDonald's commercials.

A Big Mac wrapper was rumored to have been found at the scene.

Aquaman always sucked anyway, I thought...



Scientists have identified a quirk in crocodile blood that enables the beasts to hold their breath for more than an hour, and they've reproduced it in a human blood protein. Crocodiles, which often use their breath-holding ability to drown their prey, have an unusual form of hemoglobin, the stuff that carries oxygen in blood.

When they hold their breath, their tissues give off a chemical signal that makes their hemoglobin give up more of its oxygen than usual. The studies have been going on for several decades now, and we all remember one of the first recipients of the altered blood, Aquaman.

Aquaman was unavailable for comment on the release of the information. His office said he was "out playing with some fish or something."

The group huddles around the screen, silent in anticipation. As the credits begin to roll, they smile to themselves and those around them in silent understanding. They are a cult.

Cult films, movies that usually do poorly at the box office and go on to achieve an enduring and loyal following, are a longstanding component of pop culture.

If you have ever seen lines of people waiting to buy tickets to "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" or witnessed a group of teen-agers gather together to watch "Highlander," you know what a cult film is.

"It takes the right audience to appreciate the kind of movie that would become a cult film," said Mark Good, a senior in journalism and mass communications who makes a hobby out of watching cult films and TV shows.

Most cult films have one thing in common — they're all a little strange.

"Repo Man," a film about car-repossession men chasing after a car with alien body parts stashed in the trunk, was Emilio Estevez's first movie.

"There's always 'Repo Man.' It always throws me off when they show that on A&E," Good said.

Other wacky cult classics include "Real Genius," "Mad Max," "Strange Brew" and "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes."

"That's a classic," Good said, referring to "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes." "They even made a sequel that was pretty good."

Some cult films are music-based, such as "This is Spinal Tap," "Pink Floyd's The Wall," the Who's rock opera "Tommy" and "The Blues Brothers."

"Tommy" was recently made into a Broadway musical.

"There were a lot of people that were upset with Pete Townsend when he changed the ending for his Broadway show," Good said.

Cult films are not always sleepers. Sometimes they are controversial or even Academy Award nominees, like Stanley Kubrick's "A Clockwork Orange," which was both.

"I usually try to watch that every time it comes on," Good said.

"A Clockwork Orange" was originally rated X in the United States, and the Rolling Stones were even considered for the lead roles, with Mick Jagger as Alex and the rest of the band as his three "droogs" (that's friends or buddies in the jargon of the movie and book).

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show," perhaps the quintessential cult movie, does a lot of business at midnight showings and in rentals.

Sarah Hadley, program adviser for Union Program Council feature films and kaleidoscope films, said that cult-type movies are generally a big draw when they show at the K-State Union.

"Most of the films that students have heard of were well-attended, such as 'Mystery Science Theater' and 'Rocky Horror,'" Hadley said.

As far as seeing cult films at the Union, Hadley said students can expect some different things this semester, like "Superfly," which will be coming in March. "Dr. Strangelove" will be showing this week at the Union.

UPC had a big hit last semester at the Union when it showed Francis Ford Coppola's legendary movie about the Vietnam War.

"'Apocalypse Now' was a huge success," Hadley said.

Cult audiences follow no rules. Some movies are popular only among certain groups of friends.

"'Dazed and Confused,' that's something we get together and watch," Good said.

Some cult movies, like "Highlander," actually were popular at the box office, but their popularity has not waned, Good said.

"That's one that was more commercially popular, so it has both audiences," he said of "Highlander."

The kind of fixation that turns a movie into a cult classic can do the same thing to a TV show.

Cult TV shows circulate on public television and in syndication, being taped and traded around constantly until they're memorized.

They usually develop loyal followings while on the air, then keep that audience after being canceled.

Good said a lot of cult TV shows are science-fiction shows from decades past, like "The Twilight Zone" and "Dr. Who."

"I used to watch 'Dr. Who' a lot when I was younger," Good said.

"Twin Peaks," David Lynch's comedy-suspense-drama about an eccentric FBI agent's investigation into a small-town murder, had such a zealous following its fans successfully pressured ABC into putting it back on the air after its first cancellation.

Copies of the original pilot and all 29 episodes of "Twin Peaks" are available in video rental stores.

Good said watching a cult movie or TV show over and over can get out of hand.

"There are people that base their lives on these movies, to where that's all they think about," Good said.

Good said one of his friends had seen the movie "Spaceballs" so many times that he had all the lines and facial expressions memorized.

Replacements scare pro ball players

A medium-sized white ball with red stitches, nine players with gloves on a diamond, one player at the side of a plate, holding a long, narrow piece of wood, and here comes the 3-2 pitch.

You all remember the game, don't you?

DEREK SIMMONS

It's baseball. America's favorite argument since Aug. 12, 1994 — the day the game and countless fans struck out swinging on a sucker pitch.

I know it may seem like an odd time to talk baseball, but with spring training coming up in a month, aren't you curious about what's in the future?

Get ready for Dennis "Oilcan" Boyd. Boyd, who saw his better days in the early 1980s (if you could call them better days), was one of the biggest names so far to agree to be a replacement player.

The pitcher recently signed with the Chicago White Sox.

Yes, it looks like we will have a baseball season even if the owners and players fail to negotiate on the ever-expanding wallet crisis.

Some of the striking major-leaguers have taken offense to the replacement players.

Here's what minor-league pitcher Dana Ridenour, who signed with the Chicago Cubs and is planning to be a replacement player, said in the Kansas City Star:

"Greg Jefferies said that life will be a nightmare for replacement players. On top of my (current) job as a waiter, I worked for UPS during the Christmas push, loading boxes from 2 in the morning until 9.

"Obviously, I don't think playing ball in Wrigley Field would be too much of a nightmare."

Well said.

What prompted Jefferies' comment was fear — pure and simple.

It seems a bad hop has bruised some players' egos. They might realize now that they are replaceable.

"I'll play for free," Jaime Chafee said in Associated Press reports.

Chafee is a 23-year-old former Milwaukee Brewers minor-league utility infielder who wants to be an Atlanta Braves replacement.

"Just give me food money," he said.

People should fall for players like Chafee.

All they want is a chance to do what millions dream about — playing in the big time.

My theory is most baseball fans will have the same attitude as Chafee when it's time for the first pitch in 1995.

"Just give us baseball. Just let us see a grand slam in the bottom of the ninth inning."

Baseball-hungry fans will be able to sit in the stands for practically nothing, too.

The Los Angeles Dodgers have said ticket prices will be the same as they were in 1958 when you could see a game for $3. Can you even buy a beer for $3 at a Royals game?

These has-beens and former flunkies of the major leagues wouldn't be as bad as you might think.

These guys all have one thing in common: They want to play ball.

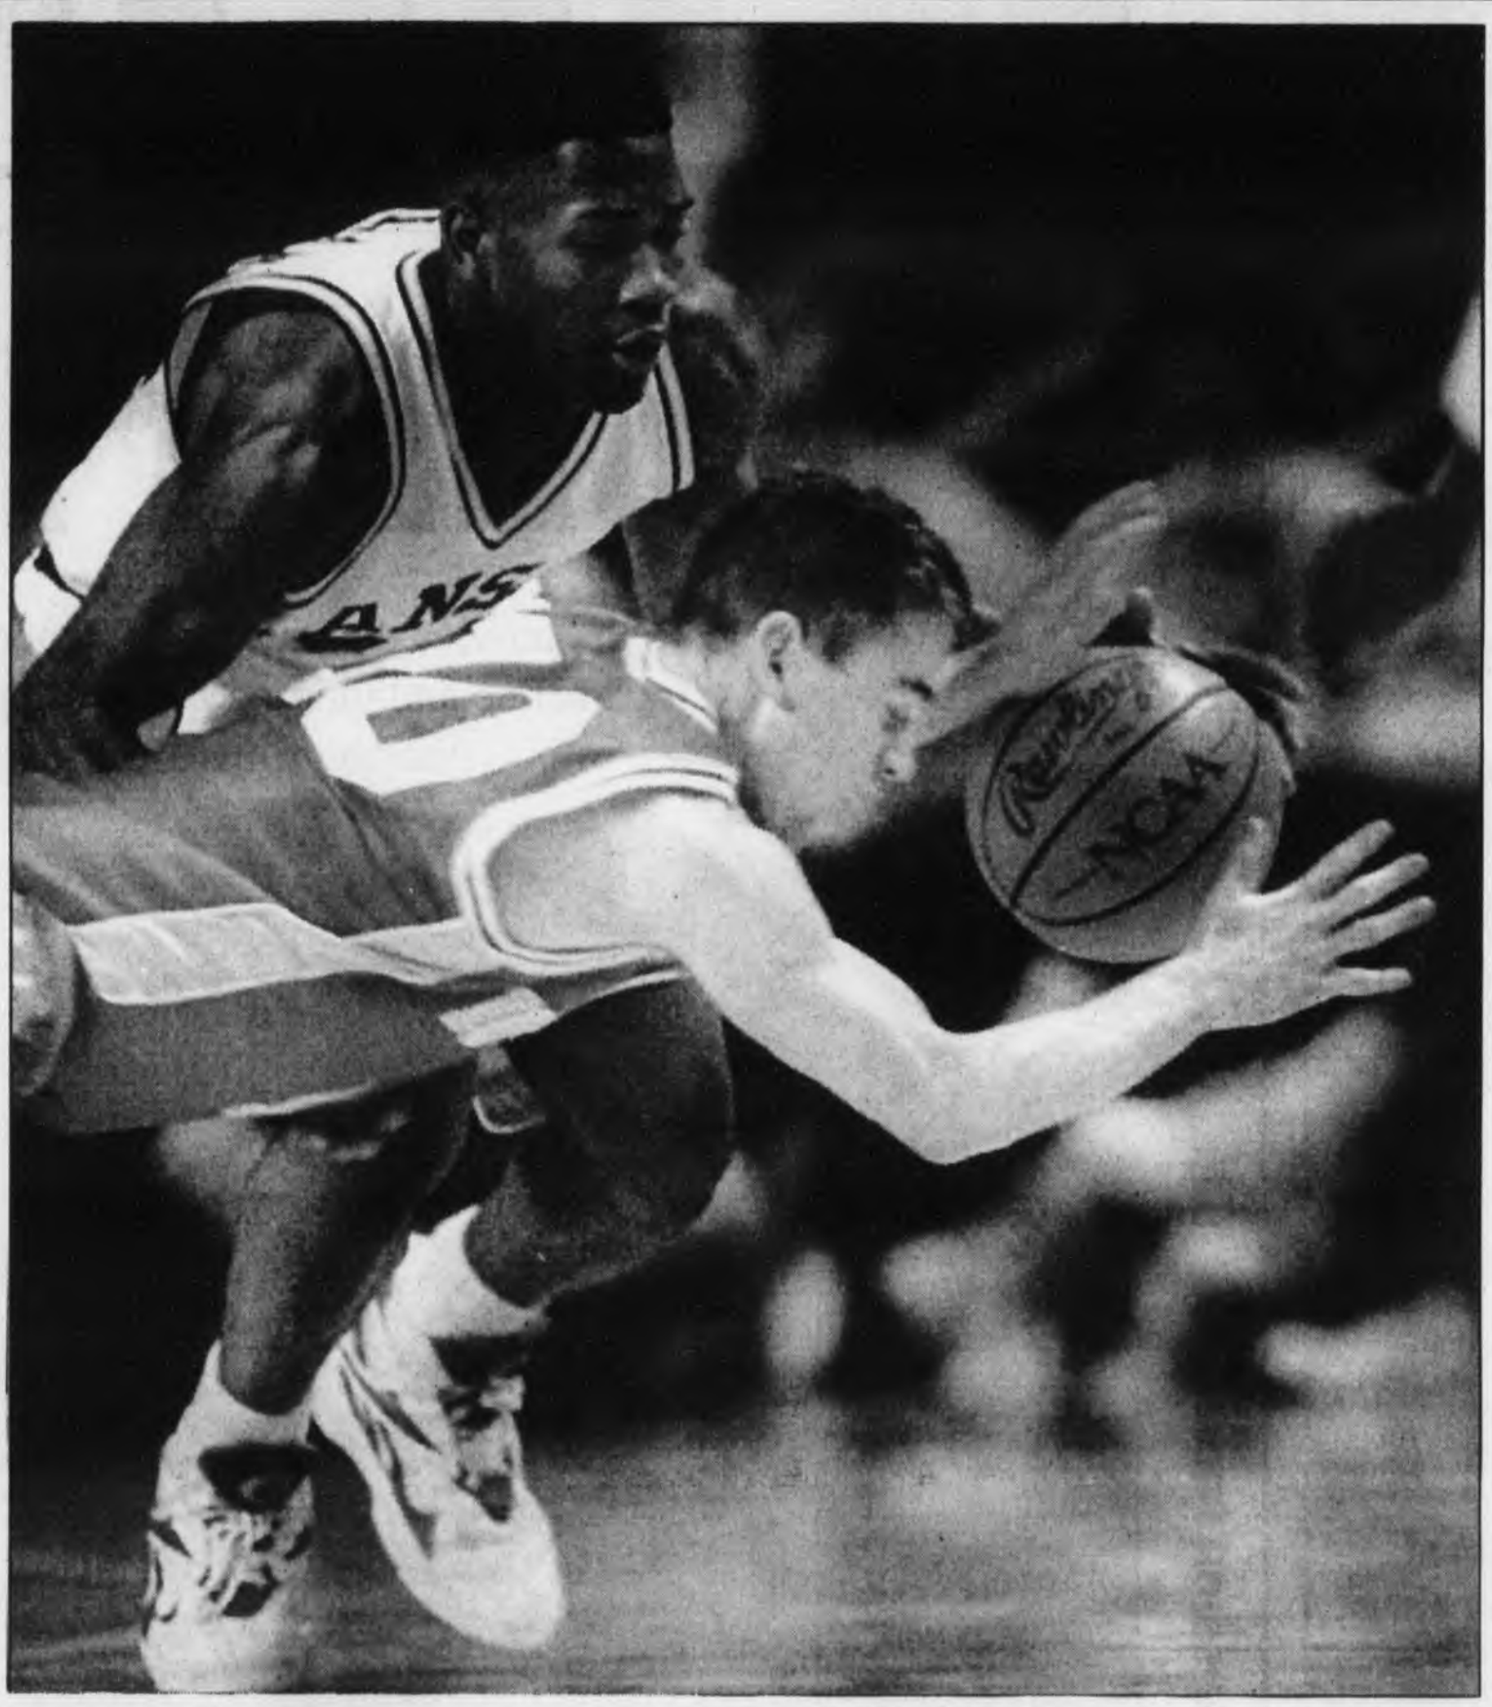
And as horrible and unfair as it may sound, the owners are in control. Isn't that the concept of owning something?

Let Barry Bonds salvage tips off dirty tables to pay his alimony. Let Jefferies dig ditches in the hot July sun for minimum wage.

I hope their employers don't let them take a day off to go to the ballpark.

The owners, in the meantime, will still be making money.

But I'd really like to know what you think.



Would you pay to watch the standby players, or would you rather have no hardball at all?

Should the replacement players agree to play? Who's at fault — the owners, players or both?

If you'd like to respond, please drop a letter by the Collegian or e-mail me at dsimmon@ksu.ksu.edu.

Sometimes I think the owners and players forget that there is a third party (what used to be called a fan) involved in this struggle.

After all, would professional baseball exist without someone to watch it?

Cats return home against Iowa State

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

It has been a long, hard road for K-State. A road filled with three straight losses to Big Eight opponents.

Saturday the Cats return home to try to turn things around against the 14th-ranked Iowa State Cyclones at 12:40 p.m.

The Cyclones, who are 14-2 overall and 1-1 in the Big Eight, are fresh off of victories over Creighton and Kansas.

The Cyclones are led by senior guard Fred Hoiberg.

Hoiberg, who averages 20 points per game, has had 20 or more points in 23 games during his career and is one of Iowa State's three preseason all-America candidates.

In Iowa State's 69-65 upset of Kansas, Hoiberg lit the Hawks up for 32 points, which included the last 17 points for the Cyclones.

Last year in Manhattan, Hoiberg scored 22 points and dished out five assists during the Cats' 76-70 victory.

In that game, the Cats out-rebounded Iowa State by a margin of 42-28.

When the Cats traveled to Ames, Hoiberg scorched the Cats for 27 points and five rebounds, during Iowa State's 85-60 blowout.

Julius Michalik, a 6-foot-10 inch senior forward, is also a major contributor to the well-balanced Cyclone team.

Michalik, who is a preseason all-American, is averaging 16.1 points per game and shooting more than 53 percent from the field.

During last year's game in Manhattan, Michalik had 19 points, three rebounds and only one assist.

But during Iowa State's victory in Ames last year, Michalik pulled down six rebounds and scored 21 points.

A big piece of Iowa State's team, which was missing last year, was senior center and preseason all-America Loren Meyer.

Meyer suffered a broken collarbone in a pickup truck accident and missed the last 15 games of the season, including the two against K-State.

Since his return this year, Meyer has averaged 16.2 points per game, along with shooting 60-percent from the field.

Despite his accident last year, Meyer is third all-time in block shots at Iowa State and is currently blocking two shots a game this season.

Saturday will also be the first time since the 1979-80 season that former Iowa State coach Johnny Orr will be on the court.

Former University of New Orleans coach Tim Floyd now oversees the Cyclones. Floyd led the Privateers to a 127-58 record during his six years at New Orleans.

Pokes, OU to play Cats over weekend

DAN LEWERENZ
Collegian

After suffering their first Big-Eight loss of the season in Lawrence, K-State will return to Manhattan this weekend for a two-game homestand.

The Cats (10-5, 2-1 in conference play) will face Oklahoma State at 7 p.m. Friday. The Cowgirls bring a 10-4 record, 2-2 in the Big Eight, to Bramlage Coliseum.

"Oklahoma State is a heck of a team," said K-State coach Brian Agler. "They're a veteran team, and they're very well-balanced."

While not ranked, Oklahoma State is receiving votes in both the Associated Press and CNN/USA Today Coaches polls.

The Cowgirls return four starters from a team that finished third in the Big Eight last year.

They are led by junior forward Stacy Coffey, a defensive stopper who leads the league in steals.

"She's a thief — there's no question about it," Agler said. "It's almost an art with her. I've never seen anyone like her. And it's more than just that. She's strong, creative. She's a good rebounder, and she's a real team player."

Coffey leads Oklahoma State with 10.8 points per game. Junior forward Amy Scales also averages in the double digits with 10.6 points per game.

After a poor offensive performance at KU, the Cats will need to step it up against the Cowgirls.

"We'll see some different types of defenses, we'll see some zone, and we'll see some man. We've tried to make improvements in both those areas," Agler said.

K-State will also take on an 11-4 Oklahoma team that is also receiving votes in the Coaches poll. The Sooners are 3-1 in Big-Eight play. Tipoff will be at 2:00 pm.

Though OU is the only team that K-State swept last year, the Cats are not taking their opponent lightly.

"They're big inside, have quick guards and shooters. It's a team that can put a lot of points on the board," Agler said.

"Oklahoma is extremely talented — as talented as anybody in the conference."

The Sooners are led by senior forward Angi Guffy and junior forward Etta Maytubby, both returning starters from a team that won last year's National Women's Invitational Tournament.

But newcomer Pam Pennon, a first-team all-American out of junior college, should also give the Sooners a boost.

"Pam is one of the quickest guards I have ever seen," Oklahoma coach Burl Plunkett said.

"She's a thief — there's no question about it. It's almost an art with her. I've never seen anyone like her."

Dear Cassandra,

To this lady with the bedwetting problem: I have a cousin who had the same type of problem of wetting the bed at night.

The doctors could never find a problem, but when my cousin had a baby and had a C-Section, they found her uterus (or whatever it is that lets out urine inside a woman) had collapsed totally.

It was only when she was asleep and was totally relaxed that everything would open up and she, of course, would wet the bed. The doctor told her that if she had not wet the bed at night that she would have died.

Anonymous,

I think it's the urethra and not the uterus that you were thinking of, but thank you for writing in and giving us a possible explanation for Be-puddle's problem.

▶ MOVIE REVIEW

'Lion King' reigns realm of '94 films

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

From the opening sequence, featuring the harmonious cavortings of nature and the pride of the animal aristocracy, to the ending, "The Lion King" pleases in a big way.

Easily the most original movie of 1994, "The Lion King" was also the No. 1 moneymaker, bringing in $300 million in domestic grosses. (That doesn't even consider the merchandising — which probably grossed more than the movie.)

Lion King
Ratings:
★★★★ Must see
★★★ Worth a peek
★★ Good future rental
★ Bastardization of cinema

"The Lion King" does a lot of things differently from Disney's past fairy-tale masterpieces.

For instance, King Mustafa dies, or rather is killed, in a violent, nail-biting scene that involves an incredibly animated stampede of wildebeest.

That stampede is indicative of the level of quality the Disney folks have achieved with animation. If you were dazzled with the magic carpet ride in "Aladdin," "The Lion King" will definitely live up to your expectations.

One of the main strengths of "Lion King" is the music. Disney risked a lot by asking Elton John to compose, but it paid off royally with Grammy nominations. John and lyricist Tim Rice also have a good shot at grabbing the best-score and best-song Oscars in March.

"Circle of Life," "Hakuna Matata," and "Can You Feel the Love Tonight" are gorgeous songs infused with a tribalesque funk as in "Matata," when synthesizers breathe a fresh, gurgling life into a jungle teeming with creatures.

Elton and Rice's music can also be disturbing as well, such as in Scar's (Mustafa's evil, scheming brother) mean-spirited, plotting song "Be Prepared." Coupled with the Nazi-esque animated hyena march, this passage is by far one of the scariest of the film.

I'd have to say "The Lion King" was definitely one of the best movies I saw in 1994.

Of course, with competition like "Dumb and Dumber" and "The Mask" and over-hyped duds like "Interview With The Vampire" and "Star Trek: Generations" setting the pace, it isn't that hard to create something of high artistic standards.

There has been a lot of buzz lately about "The Lion King" being nominated for a best-picture Oscar.

If you remember, "Beauty and the Beast" was nominated and didn't win, probably because it was an animated film without live performances. With Jeremy Irons' ambitious performance as the conniving Scar and Nathon Lane as the adorable Timon, I think that "The Lion King" deserves an Oscar, even though it's an animated film.

▶ COMMUNITY SERVICE

Help given locally, afar

Program links students, faculty to service agencies

LINDA HARVEY
Collegian

K-State's Community Service Program has provided numerous ways for people to get involved in community service since 1987.

Opportunities are available ranging from local projects to chances for student and faculty teams to spend two months during the summer providing service and living in a Kansas or international community.

Local projects vary in content. Through the Volunteer Clearinghouse, students can select from a number of different projects within Manhattan and surrounding communities.

The Clearinghouse serves as a liaison between local agencies in need of volunteers and students and faculty interested in providing community service.

Students interested in working with young children and education can become Youth Education Service tutors in area elementary and junior-high schools.

This program normally runs from the beginning to the end of the semester, but anyone interested can join at any time.

"Students benefit from the joy of doing service," Sandra Hiebert, 1994 alumna and coordinator of the international teams, said. "Students gain a commitment to continuing service."

For people not interested in a summer-long commitment, projects are also set up through the Structural Assistance Volunteer Effort to go out to a Kansas community for a day and provide service for manual labor projects. These projects usually involve beautifying playgrounds, painting and rebuilding.

Brian Hesse, senior in political science and student coordinator for the Kansas teams, started out on a summer team in 1992.

He eventually took over as the coordinator for the YES Tutoring program.

He then became the Kansas teams coordinator.

"I believe in giving something back," Hesse said.

Many of the people working as coordinators started out in the programs, and wanted to provide the same opportunity for other students, Hiebert said.

Hesse will spend this summer in Africa, along with Shante Moore, junior in political science, developing new sites for projects. Moore is a veteran of a summer 1994 international team in Paraguay.

In 1990, the team program expanded its focus to include international teams.

Teams have since served in Mexico, Paraguay, Costa Rica and Zaire. This year, a trip to Jordan has been added.

Selections for summer 1996 Kansas and international teams have already been made. The process began in September, when a drive for applications was conducted.

Interviews, including a group interview, were in early November, and selections were made. Plans for summer 1997 projects are already underway.

After selection, students and faculty enroll in a community development seminar and meet with teammates throughout the spring to focus specifically on what they will be doing during the summer.

Most teams leave right after Memorial Day, and some do not return until early August.

The project in Africa is to evaluate possible sites and projects for K-State. Moore and Hesse will be establishing contacts with African organizations in South Africa and possibly in Zaire and Camaroon.

"My first trip was real exciting, and it made me rethink my college career," Moore said. "I'm hooked on international travel now."

The best way to get involved is to call the program's office and ask for the coordinator, Hiebert said.

"It's something worth applying for," she said.

In conjunction with the Community Service Program, the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives serves Kansas communities by establishing resource links.

The Center was created in 1988 to help these communities access the expertise of the University and provide an information exchange, Carol Peak, director of both the Community Service Program and KCRI, said.

'Guys and Dolls' visit

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

Gambling, hoods and a taste of Broadway are coming to K-State. "Guys and Dolls," a Big League Theatricals production, will take the stage at 3 p.m. Sunday at McCain Auditorium.

"We were fortunate to get them to stop. Someone from Big League called us and said they were going to be touring in the area," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said. "We began to discuss bringing it early in the fall of 1993, and by September 1993 I was sure we were bringing this."

The musical was a successful Broadway production a couple of years ago. It deals with the exploits of a small-time gambler, Nathan Detroit; his fiancee of 14 years, Miss Adelaide; a hard-core gambler, Sky Masterson; and Sgt. Sarah Brown of the Save-A-Soul Mission.

A cast of 20 and a 15-member crew tour 140 cities in the United States and Canada to perform the musical, which is set in a romanticized 1950s stretch of Broadway called Runyonland.

"The crew plays a lot of the one-nighter market," Alee Ralph, production supervisor for Big League, said. "They work hard and travel anywhere from 100 to 500 miles a day to get to shows."

Martin said several factors affect bringing an act like "Guys and Dolls" to K-State.

"Shows have to be near Manhattan at a time that fits our schedule," he said. "Also, the decisions aren't exclusively mine. I put this to subscribers, staff and other people to see what the interest is in something like "Guys and Dolls."

A working relationship and fan support from the Broadway productions help Big Theatricals bring hits to local markets.

SHOW TIME
"Guys and Dolls" will be performed at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

"We have a semi-direct relationship with Broadway," Ralph said. "We work with them to get recent acts to go on tour with. We went with the the 1992 revival of 'Guys and Dolls,' and it has been an outstanding success."

Martin said he thinks the McCain production will be a success as well.

"'Guys and Dolls' is the first big production in McCain this semester. I think we will have a good turn-out," Martin said.

the access between the two parties.

The cost of the plan is estimated at about $5.9 million. The passage of a bond election in October 1993 and district funds are providing the funding for the basics of the network.

Before the entire plan was passed, a pilot plan was approved by the board. Phase I began during the summer of 1994 to test the idea.

Manhattan High and Lee Elementary schools were chosen as the sites for the pilot plan.

Reinke said pilots were done for two reasons. First, to test the technical and installation issues; and second, to teach staff how to use computers before putting them in all of the existing and new schools.

"We want to make sure it works," Reinke said.

Lee is the main site for the pilot test. It has the full system set up, while the high school only has the cabling work completed.

Lee has access to 12 different sources of video equipment from laser discs to videotape, Reinke said.

"A teacher can order a video directly from the library using either a telephone or a computer in the classroom," he said.

Special workshops have been conducted in order for the teachers at Lee to gain experience on the computers and voice and video equipment. The teachers then take the knowledge back to the students.

"The plan has been very successful so far, but very complex to install. Most of the students pick it up quickly for themselves, usually before the teachers do."

Hypnosis used on football players slimy fat. The person becomes disgusted with chocolate.

However, Webb said helping people lose weight is a lot easier than helping them quit smoking. But the goal is to erase the memory of smoking.

"There are people who come in here smoking five packs of cigarettes a day and leave acting like they never smoked in their entire lives," he said.

Webb has also used hypnosis, or motivational thinking, to help create a positive self-image and build strength in football players.

His history includes working with the Dallas Cowboys, the Los Angeles Rams and Brigham Young University.

But today, Webb is helping housewives, secretaries and school principals build a positive self-image.

At the beginning of each session, Webb explains that being hypnotized means relaxation and not falling asleep or being numb.

Each subject will go through three different stages of hypnosis during two hours. During the first stage, Webb walks around the room to make sure everyone is relaxed.

"There are four ways to test if the hypnosis works," Webb said.

"First, we look to see if you have your eyes closed. Next, you must have a heavy arm. And it should feel like time passes quickly. Finally, it needs to make you really thirsty," he said.

The last two stages replace old habits with new ones and teach students how to hypnotize themselves. To ensure success, the students must relax and use their imagination.

But not everybody can relax.

Mary Louise Dillon of Manhattan said she went into her session with a skeptical attitude.

"It's a neat idea," Dillon said.

But it didn't work. While Dillon's classmates were imagining trips to Hawaii, she was still in her chair.

"I didn't go anywhere, and I wasn't at the beach," Dillon said.

Instead, Dillon said she believes in willpower. Last September she decided to cut chocolate from her diet, and she said she hasn't eaten any since.

"We all have willpower, but we just have to work at it," Dillon said.

Class won't count for all engineering degrees

DEN 450 will no longer count as a humanities credit for mechanical engineers.

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

Students majoring in mechanical engineering will no longer be able to use DEN 450: Impact of Engineering and Technology on Society as credit toward graduation.

Allen Cogley, professor of mechanical engineering, said the decision was made at a Jan. 10 meeting of the department faculty.

"It was the faculty's decision, and it did pass. It was voted on, and it was unanimous," he said.

Cogley said the Department of Mechanical Engineering sent letters to students majoring in mechanical engineering to inform them the class will no longer count toward a degree.

"We had been watching the course for four or five years, and nothing was done," he said.

Previously, the course counted as a humanities or social science credit.

The department's main arguments for not allowing students to use the course for credit were the number of A's given in the class and the lack of quality control, Cogley said.

According to a memo sent from Cogley to the department faculty, 92 percent of the students who have taken the class over four semesters received A's.

John Matthew, professor of chemical engineering, said he doesn't think DEN 450 should be counted as a humanities credit for engineering students.

"The only thing I would say is that I discourage students from taking that particular course as a humanities credit," he said.

Amy Hageman, senior in mechanical engineering, said she thinks the class should count for everyone.

"Maybe the class isn't extremely difficult, but you can still learn from it," she said.

Byron Jones, head of the department of mechanical engineering, said he didn't want to discuss the issue any further.

"I'm not going to discuss this issue with the press. Is there anything else you want to talk about?" Jones said.

Senate votes to rewrite guidelines

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Student Senate was faced with two options for passing new elections guidelines.

Senate could override Student Body President Jeff Peterson's veto or introduce a revised set of guidelines.

After a long debate, Student Senate voted 17-39-0 against overriding Peterson's veto.

"There has to be a cap," Brenda Halinski, graduate senator, said.

Halinski said she was concerned that some candidates could spend all they had to get a position and then not be able to live.

"I don't care if you set it at 100 percent of tuition, but there has to be a cap," she said.

Trent LeDoux, agriculture senator, said he thought the spending limits were unfair because the student body president and vice president could spend a much larger amount of money on campaigning than students running for other campus wide offices such as the Board of Student Publications, Union Governing Board and the Fine Arts Council.

LeDoux said he thought Senate was putting more regulations on an election it has not been able to run right the first time for two consecutive years.

"In the last two elections, the ones who didn't spend as much won," Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator, said.

Henry said he thought the past two elections proved that elections can't be bought. Both former Student Body President Ed Skoog and

Though defeated in his 1992 independent bid for the presidency, Ross Perot comes to K-State to define success

MIKE MARLETT/Collegian

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Here's the deal.

Ross Perot.

10:30. Tuesday. Bramlage Coliseum.

All you have to do is show up.

Perot, a former presidential candidate, United We Stand America founder and billionaire, will bring his charts and graphs to K-State as he delivers the 99th Landon Lecture, "Defining Success."

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the President, said K-State is fortunate to get Perot for the Landon Lecture series.

"He's very difficult to get," Reagan said. "K-State got him because of the prestige of our Landon Lectures and our outstanding list of speakers."

Lee Pepper, national college director for United We Stand, said Perot's appearance at K-State is one of the only trips he's making in the near future as a speaking engagement.

Pepper said Perot has spoken at Harvard, Boston University and the University of New Hampshire, and has been popular with students because of his anti-GATT and anti-NAFTA message.

"Our generation has to bear the burden of the job loss because of NAFTA and GATT," Pepper said. "Perot sends a message about reforming the government to make it work better for us."

Pepper said Kansas is one of Perot's top states because of its traditional farm base and strong middle class.

"He's excited about coming to K-State," Pepper said. "Kansas is a very good state for him."

Reagan said Perot was selected as a Landon Lecturer because he was a third-party candidate in the 1992 election.

"We look for major political figures who are at the fringe of a political party," Reagan said.

Reagan said Perot will only be the third Landon Lecturer to speak at Bramlage in the history of the series. Jimmy Carter and Jesse Jackson were the other two.

The lecture will be held at Bramlage because 4,000-5,000 people are expected to attend, Reagan said.

Lee said he expects Bramlage to be packed not only with national United We Stand supporters, but also with students.

"It's a once in a lifetime opportunity for the students to hear him," Lee said.

April Kasselman, senior in political science, said she doesn't agree with all of Perot's ideas but thinks Perot will be a welcome addition to the lecture series.

"I think a lot of people have strong views on Perot one way or another, but by having him come to K-State, I don't think it's going to influence people," Kasselman said.

Joe Unekis, associate professor of political science, said Perot is popular at K-State.

In a mock election at a K-State Open House in April of 1992, Unekis placed Perot's name on the ballot for an experiment. To his surprise, Perot won by a narrow margin.

"It was very unusual. It really caught my eye," Unekis said.

Unekis said although Perot was defeated in the election, he has been successful at keeping himself in the public eye by his opposition to the GATT agreement and his talk of running for President in 1996.

Besides becoming a billionaire, he has also worked to release American prisoners of war from Southeast Asia, led the statewide "Texans' War on Drugs," and led an effort to reform Texas public schools.

Rose Kennedy dies at age 104

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HYANNIS PORT, Mass — Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, matriarch of the Kennedy clan, whose faith and quiet strength saw one of America's most prominent families through three generations of political triumphs and personal tragedies, died Sunday, a family spokesman said. She was 104.

Mrs. Kennedy died from complications resulting from pneumonia at 5:30 p.m. at the family compound on Cape Cod, said Scott Ferson, a spokesman for her son Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

"She was surrounded by family," Ferson said.

She had used a wheelchair since suffering a stroke in April 1984.

Mrs. Kennedy lived her life in the public eye, always in a supporting role: daughter of a congressman, wife of an ambassador, mother of a president and two U.S. senators. For her, family was all.

She once described her life as a series of "agonies and ecstasies." The exhilaration of political success and the horror of violent death

Part-time employment difficult to find

MARY EMERSON
Collegian

Tuition, books and after-Christmas bills send many K-State students scrambling to find a job to pay off debts.

Lorene Oppy, manager of the employment and training center at the Kansas Department of Human Resources, said, "Looking for a job is a full-time job."

Looking for any kind of a job can be difficult, but in Manhattan, it is even more of a challenge.

"We don't have excess jobs in Manhattan, but there are jobs out there. For students, there aren't a lot," Oppy said.

"The jobs that are available to students are usually for minimal pay," Oppy said.

While in school, most students look for part-time work. This has a good and bad side.

Some employers look for only part-time associates and are willing to work around school schedules. Other employers are not as flexible.

Shelly Mohn, junior in apparel and textile marketing, said, "Businesses don't hire students because they don't want to work around schedules. They want people full-time and year-round, and not those who go home at breaks and weekends."

Another factor that may cause problems is lack of transportation.

"I was working at Rod's Hallmark Shop in Westloop, but I don't have a car anymore or a way to get there. I had to find another job that I could get to. Now, I walk to work in Aggieville," Mohn said.

Students may find they have to wait quite awhile before being hired for a position.

Mohn said, "I just started a job at the Palace. I've been applying there for over a year."

The key to finding a job is to keep applying and calling the businesses to remind them that you're looking, Mohn said.

K-State graduates looking for a full-time position in Manhattan may have the toughest time of all.

Oppy said the majority of the full-time jobs are held by local residents or those married to students or military.

"If you want to stay in the area after graduation, you may have to leave your field of study to find a full-time job," Oppy said.

Minimum wage could increase

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FARMVILLE, Va. — Sandra Easter has landed on her feet, for now, at the Goodwill used clothes store near where the Norfolk Southern freight trains barrel over the shiny mudpacked shallows of the Appomattox River.

Her minimum-wage job brings home hamburger instead of the roast she'd sometimes buy when she worked at the garment factory that closed last year. But she said it keeps her and her daughter, age 3, off the street.

"You don't go out to eat," the single mother said of the drop to $4.25 hourly from almost $7. "You don't run around. You just slim down. But I'm thankful for what I have."

Easter is among the more than 2.5 million Americans who will have a little more if President Clinton gets his way. Clinton is likely to propose raising the $4.25 federal minimum, perhaps to $5, staged over several years.

But opposition is strong, the numbers are in flux and the effort Clinton is prepared to put into fighting for it is uncertain. Critics say pumped-up wages cost jobs.

The minimum wage does not lift a family out of poverty as it once did. It brings in $8,840 a year for full-time work, leaving a family of three more than 25 percent below the poverty line.

America's minimum wage workers tend to be climbers, if only because they are most often young and have practically nowhere to drop.

They follow the crops from Rio Grande farm country to Northeast orchards, process catfish along the

▶ HEAVY RAINS COMPLICATE RESCUE EFFORTS, RAISE FEARS OF MUDSLIDES

KOBE, Japan (AP) — Bone-chilling rain brought new misery Sunday to survivors of Japan's deadliest quake in more than 70 years. The death toll rose to 4,936 with 171 still listed as missing.

Police said a 66-year-old man and a 78-year-old woman were trapped Sunday when a quake-weakened building next to their home collapsed, blocking their building's entrance. They were rescued several hours later. Earlier reports said they had been trapped since the 7.2-magnitude quake struck before dawn on Tuesday.

Doug Copp of the San Francisco-based American Rescue Team, who came to help with rescue operations, said there was a good possibility that more survivors would still be found.

Heavy rain fell most of the day, raising fears of landslides and shifting debris. Police evacuated hundreds of people from about 34 landslide-prone neighborhoods.

But no large mudslides were reported by Sunday night, and the forecast called for skies to clear Monday. The government Meteorological Agency said the threat of landslides would persist because the quake had weakened soil in the hills above Kobe.

That was small comfort, however, to the nearly 300,000 people living in crowded, chilly emergency shelters or camped out in cars, tents and sleeping bags on sports fields and vacant lots.

Helmeted workers roamed the city distributing about 200,000 plastic sheets to cover damaged roofs or help build shelters.

Many of the homeless could be seen spreading the sheets over makeshift frames they'd strung together from scrap wood as the rainwater dripped down their faces.

A team of 74 U.S. Marines from the 3rd Marine Division on Okinawa set up 20 tents, each capable of accommodating about 25 people, at locations throughout the city.

"It felt real good to get off the island and do our part to help out," said Gunnery Sgt. Stephen Ruvio, 39, of New York City. "We could probably do more if they'd allow us to."

Virtually all of Kobe's 1.4 million residents have no natural gas to keep warm. Overcrowded hospitals, which lacked heat and running water, prepared for new patients.

There were still 17,000 homes without electricity, down from more than 100,000 a few days earlier. As many as 800,000 homes were without water.

▶ KANSANS FOR LIFE MEET TO CAMPAIGN AGAINST ABORTION, ROE V. WADE

TOPEKA (AP) — About 300 pro-life advocates gathered at the Statehouse for a Kansans for Life rally.

The rally marked the 1973 Supreme Court ruling that legalized abortion in the United States.

"The message is to stop abortion now and the practice of private promiscuity," the Rev. Thomas Moffatt said during Saturday's gathering, one day before the 22nd anniversary of the ruling.

"We are here to manifest the defense of the unborn," he said.

The group played spiritual music, and speeches were presented by pro-life leaders, including Rep. Gayle Mollenkamp, R-Russell Springs, and Harry Blitz, Kansans for Life Topeka Chapter president.

The rally ended with the group marching in prayer around the Statehouse grounds.

Kansans for Life State Director David Gittrich said three busloads of Kansas pro-life advocates will represent the state at Monday's Roe v. Wade rally in Washington, D.C.

▶ BOSS INVADES VOICE MAIL AFFAIR; $1-MILLION PRIVACY LAWSUITS RESULT

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — It was a short-lived, middle-distance love affair.

They worked at McDonald's restaurants in towns 60 miles apart. To fill the void between their get-togethers, Michael Huffcut and Rose Hasset left messages for each other on their voice mail at work.

Then, everything came undone. Their boss allegedly monitored the ir whisperings. He recorded them and played them back to Huffcut's wife, Lisa. Huffcut was soon fired.

The two-month liaison is long over, but a legal question is left hanging. How private is the American workplace?

In a federal lawsuit, Huffcut is seeking $1 million in damages from McDonald's Corp.; from Harry Harvey III, a fellow McDonald's supervisor, who was also a family friend; and from longtime employer Fred Remillard, who operates 12 McDonald's franchises in western New York. Lisa Huffcut is suing for the same amount.

The couple claims Remillard violated privacy rights guaranteed them by federal law and intentionally inflicted emotional anguish, embarrassment and loss of reputation and income.

The case could become the nation's first to test whether conversations recorded in electronic voice-mail boxes are granted the same confidentiality protection as live telephone calls or postal mail.

It also delves into the ill-charted terrain of how far an employer can go eavesdropping at work for quality assurance or other business reasons.

The American Civil Liberties Union argues that covert electronic monitoring generally should be avoided.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce said employers should not be legally restrained in trying to ensure their telephones, computers and other property are used for business.

TODD FEEBACK/Collegian

Missionary Sarah Brown, played by Jen Little, is wooed by smooth-talking gambling man Sky Masterson, played by Ross Neill, during the Sunday afternoon performance of "Guys and Dolls" at McCain Auditorium.

'Guys and Dolls' rocks McCain

Musical lives up to its name; music and lyrics remain popular

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Forty-five years after premiering on Broadway, "Guys and Dolls" blew the roof off McCain Auditorium Sunday night.

Many times, "Guys and Dolls" has been called America's best musical. It may very well be.

Frank Loesser's music and lyrics stand as originals, ignoring the saccharin musicals of the past and creating their own style.

Loesser didn't cut to the grim grit of New York City but chose to make a farce of gamblers, drunks and nightclubbers.

Songs like "Luck Be a Lady Tonight" and "I'll Know" have entered that glorious pantheon of American standards — familiar to all.

But songs such as "A Bushel and a Peck," "Take Back Your Mink" and "Sit Down, You're Rockin' the Boat" create surprise and laughter every time the show is performed.

No, they're not standards, but they're definitely classics.

There was a movie made in 1955 with Marlon Brando and Frank Sinatra, but it fell far short of what Loesser created for the stage.

Loesser's vibrant jazz score is as fresh and remarkable as ever. I think of many musical composers who have reached his level of genius with jazz.

Sure, there was George Gershwin and maybe, now, Cy Coleman. But neither created a musical that so changed and affected Broadway more than "Guys and Dolls."

You could almost split Broadway's history in two parts: pre-"Guys and Dolls" and post-"Guys and Dolls."

What is more remarkable is that "Guys and Dolls" could be revived in 1992 and rock up Broadway once again. In a season of excellent plays and some varied musicals, "Guys and Dolls" stood out as the one must-see event on Broadway.

Why do you think "Guys and Dolls" is touring now?

Which brings us to Sunday night's performance. Based on the 1992 revival, the show has been brought to high farcical form, stylizing the characters of Nathan Detroit (Jason Singer), the leader of New York's oldest floating crap game; Miss Adelaide (Sharon Kay White), Detroit's fiancée of 14 years; Sky Masterson (Ross Neill), a high-flying gambler; and Sarah Brown (Jen Little), the missionary destined to reform Sky.

Sunday night did go smoothly, but who didn't yearn to see Faith Prince, the Tony-winning superstar of 1992's original Broadway production of "Guys and Dolls," playing Miss Adelaide?

Her performance turned her into a star. Adelaide's songs, probably the funniest in the show, especially "Adelaide's Lament," are delicious comic fodder, ripe for a good actor like Prince to relish.

Sharon Kay White's performance was good but not excellent.

She couldn't decide if she wanted to go all the way with Adelaide's whiny, bittersweet New York accent or use a common stage voice.

It could be attributed to her being an understudy for the part, but come on — what good actress can't have loads of fun with a New York accent?

White was endearing, but not in the star-making style of Prince.

With help from the various Hot Box Girls (Adelaide's backup dancers), Adelaide's songs "Bushel and a Peck" and "Take Back Your Mink" were delightful to watch.

Jen Little was enchanting as the missionary Sarah Brown, slowing the tempo of the show with her soft vocals in her songs "I'll Know" and "I've Never Been in Love Before."

Little was even a believable drunk in her little Havana scene-stealer "If I Were a Bell."

Tim Salamandyk, playing Nicely-Nicely Johnson, brought the show to a wonderful peak with the adrenaline-rushing song "Sit Down, You're Rockin' the Boat."

Singers, dancers wanted for summer session

HEATHER BALLEW
Collegian

Put on your dancing shoes and warm up your voices.

Worlds of Fun will be holding auditions at 3 p.m. Tuesday in the K-State Union for singers and dancers interested in performing during the 1995 summer season.

Gary Noble, director of creative services at Worlds of Fun, will be leading the auditions with Walter Bryant, Worlds of Fun music director.

Noble said singers are required to perform one verse and one chorus from two songs during their three-minute audition. Dancers need to prepare a jazz dance routine not exceeding two minutes and perform a verse and chorus from one song.

"This year we don't have jobs for people who are strictly dancers," Noble said.

Worlds of Fun will provide a piano and cassette player, but students should provide their own accompaniments, Noble said.

Noble said he's looking for people who have the ability to sing well, are enthusiastic and entertaining, and have a little performance magic.

Students who make callbacks will be notified by mail by the end of January and will be required to attend callbacks either Feb. 11 or 12 at Worlds of Fun. The final cast will be chosen soon after callbacks and notified by Feb. 15 or 16.

Noble said students will be able to audition for two of the park's shows including a contemporary country music show at the Tivoli Music Hall. The Tivoli show opens in early June and closes in August. Ten positions are open for this performance.

The second show, "Stax of Wax," is performed in the Moulin Rouge Theatre and features popular music from the 1950s, '60s and '70s.

Two casts of six employees will be hired for this show. One cast will perform on the weekends in the spring and the fall plus six days a week in the summer. The other cast will perform during June, July and August only.

Noble said rehearsals for the shows take between 10 and 12 days before the performances are ready to open.

"They are very intense days of rehearsal," Noble said.

Performers will work a maximum of 35 hours per week during the summer. Pay starts at $285 per week, and bonuses of $500 to $1,100 may be earned by performers.

Noble said he is often asked if performing at Worlds of Fun can lead to stardom.

He said although the job provides wonderful experience in a professional environment, it probably won't lead to a professional career in entertainment.

"This job helps young people make a decision about whether this is what they really want to do with their lives," Noble said.

▶SMITH TO USE MENTAL STATE AS DEFENSE

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Susan Smith's lawyer said Saturday that the plans to focus on her mental state when she is tried for the deaths of her two young sons.

"When the story is told, it's going to be a story of mental illness, and it's going to be a story of why people become mentally ill and what happened to Susan Smith at Michael Smith's age," David Bruck said on CNN's Larry King Weekend. Lawyer Jerry Spence interviewed Bruck.

Smith, 23, is charged with murder in the Oct. 25 deaths of her sons, 3-year-old Michael and 14-month-old Alex.

After claiming for days that they had been kidnapped by a carjacker, she confessed to letting her car roll into a lake with the boys inside.

Her trial is set for April 24. The prosecutor has said he will seek the death penalty if Smith is convicted.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Other departments should eliminate DEN 450

Often, it is welcoming to receive an 'easy A,' by taking a class primarily with the purpose to raise one's grade point average.

The Department of Mechanical Engineering should be commended for its decision to eliminate DEN 450, Impact of Engineering and Technology on Society, as a class counting toward graduation for a mechanical engineering bachelor of science degree, beginning in fall 1995.

It's apparent by looking at grades from fall 1992 to spring 1994 that a change was in order: of the 814 students who took the class, 92 percent received A's.

The College of Engineering is well known for its stringent class load and challenging curriculum.

A class such as Impact of Engineering and Technology on Society, with a grading scale based primarily on attendance, does not fulfill the high standards set by the college.

Often, it is welcoming to receive an 'easy A,' by taking a class primarily with the purpose to raise one's grade point average.

This, however, is the wrong attitude: each student should expect and strive to get the most out of their education.

Other colleges should follow the Department of Mechanical Engineering's lead and re-evaluate classes in each of their own departments. In the long run, they will be doing each student at K-State a favor.

TOLES

Watching politics helps us make decisions, select future leaders

Is it election year already?

Not just yet. However, the picture becomes unclear with mud flying in the air so early before the 1996 election.

This month marks the historic journey of the 104th Congress. The new appointed House Speaker Newt Gingrich already has been making waves along with the revolutionary House Republicans. It seems difficult to sort out who is who, who called who what, who to believe and who's on first.

Let me clear up some things. Here are just a few of the players that represent Kansans: Bob Dole, Sam Brownback, Nancy Kassebaum and Bill Graves.

Bob Dole is the Senate Majority Leader Republican from our state of Kansas. He has had some power in the past. Currently, he is very influential, and he has begun to take serious steps for a fund-raising committee for the presidential bid in 1996. He has said he will make a final decision in late March or early April.

BOB MCMANIS

"The pay increases implemented by Gov. Graves will surely help students, staff and faculty — although to what extent is still unclear."

It seems he is the big guy in Washington these days and has begun to take a stand on international events.

This is his third time to organize a bid and news of making the run. Even Ross Perot asked a curious audience on CNN what his intentions are.

His second bid occurred when there was a majority of Democrats in he House. However, now the tide has changed, and he may have all the cards in his favor.

Sam Brownback has been elected to the House Budget Committee. This committee controls fiscal allocations and is considered by many to be a 'key' group of the House. He is the only Kansas representative of this committee and should prove to be important in discussing views of small businesses and international groups.

Nancy Kassebaum is a senator who commands the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee. She is the first woman to lead a prime committee and will push to what she calls a "bold agenda."

She is planning to cut 25 percent of the staff jobs at her own Labor and Resources Committee.

These cuts will affect education, student loans, the elderly, Red Cross, private pensions, health care, biomedical research, child labor, worker safety, welfare, jobs and training, and the arts.

This will cut out the responsibility from Washington and let the power abide in the states.

Bill Graves is the newly elected governor. He revealed his new budget at $7.75 billion for 1996 and proposed to operate under a four-year plan.

Spending would concentrate on public schools, state universities and social-services programs.

How will these representatives affect us as students, and should I care?

Of course, these people will affect many of us. As students, they may decide if you can continue your education.

The pay increases implemented by Gov. Bill Graves will sure help students, staff and faculty. To what extent is still unclear.

We should care who is representing our views, concerns and wishes this year and for the years to come.

But you may be telling yourself it's too early to be thinking about whom is representing my views or even to begin thinking about whom to vote for.

I am keeping it tucked away in the back of my mind, especially when I may be fortunate enough to see and listen to what Ross Perot has to say Tuesday morning.

There is a percentage of the population out there that voted for Mr. Perot in the last election. And of this percentage of votes, many from Kansas, showed a large movement for a third-party candidate. This was the best showing of any independent candidate since 1912, when Theodore Roosevelt's Bull Moose Party brought about any chance of a third-party candidate being nominated and elected.

For now, it is amazing to witness the new Republican Revolution.

It is great to listen to all the different views and be able to make a decision. Let's take advantage of this opportunity and listen to one of the former presidential candidates Tuesday morning.

Bob McManis is a graduate student in geology.

Honor code, expulsion could prevent cheating, academic dishonesty

"Current Academic Dishonesty Policies are a minimum standard," Dennis Kuhlman, president of Faculty Senate, said.

These principles are a line created by the administration below which students are not allowed to fall.

These minimum standards were put to the test during the last semester. The resounding answer was horrifying. A portion of our student body is not worthy of the trust given by faculty members.

"All academic relationships ought to be governed by a sense of honor, fair play, trust, ..." is a guideline given in our current Academic Dishonesty Policy. Unfortunately, not everyone operates with those same suppositions.

It should be obvious that these minimum standards fall short of their goal. K-State needs to reform the regulations regarding academic expectations.

As an institution of higher learning, we are compelled to demand more from our student body.

Perhaps it is time to return to the practices of an era gone by, and the honor code which once governed classrooms, hallways, and even homes. Students were held to a higher norm; more was expected, and more was given.

The link between rights and responsibilities has been so corroded that we no longer see the correlation between the two.

As a student, it is your privilege to attend a public university, however, should you fail to fulfill your responsibilities your privileges should be terminated. The time has come to challenge K-State students to use stricter rules regarding academic honesty, regulations to the highest common denominator, instead of to the lowest.

KATHLEEN MASTIO

Professors can and should require their students sign some type of honor code, a contract at the beginning of the semester or a contract on every test and assignment.

By signing an honor code on papers and tests students submit, students would be accepting the responsibilities that accompany a college education. A student's signature on an exam paper would be their personal oath on which a teacher would rely. By signing an honor code, students would be reminded with each and every test, paper and assignment that cheating has serious repercussions. Academic honesty should be strived for by teachers in addition to being encouraged among the ranks. Influence from peers is the strongest incentive to conform to the status quo.

Encouraging students to set lofty goals for themselves as well as their peers would yield honor and commitment. As a university, honor and commitment are two things we should aspire to.

Students should demand that classmates who have cheated be expelled from the University. Cheating is not something to be brushed aside and treated as a minor offense. Expulsion is the best way to deter other students from cheating.

Dante once said, "A mighty flame followeth a tiny spark." That said, controlling the problem before it is out of hand would be wise.

Having an honor code would help reconnect rights and responsibilities, as well as deter cheating. If students are willing to cheat, they need to be prepared to accept the consequences. Martin Luther King Jr. said, "We will not be satisfied until justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream." We shouldn't be satisfied with little or no justice, either.

"As a student, it is your privilege to attend a public university, however, should you fail to fulfill your responsibilities, your privileges should be terminated."

All risks have repercussions. If the risk seems to be the better option even with the potential aftermath, it is a personal choice. However, just because some choose to take the risk does not mean we need to accept it.

Our society has decayed so much that consequences that bring swift, strong punishments are almost unheard of, a possible cause of eroded behavior.

The time has arrived to stand up to peers who would tarnish the reputation and value of our University.

Kathleen Mastio is a sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine.

▶ PUBLIC BROADCASTING

PBS needs public support

Dear editor:

On Jan. 19, the Subcommittee on Labor, Health, and Human Services of the House Appropriations Committee began plotting the demise of the entire Public Broadcasting System.

That's right: Sesame Street, MacNeill/Lehrer, Nova and National Public Radio.

In the name of privatization, the subcommittee is seriously considering not just diminishing already-appropriated funds for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, which generally supplies 15-20 percent of PBS's budget, but defunding it altogether.

The loss of CPB funding would force most local PBS stations to eliminate such standard programming as NPR news or MacNeill/Lehrer. In fact, many rural stations — any station not in a large metro market — might have to shut down completely.

The politicians' (specifically, the Republicans') motivations for killing CPB funding are predictably slimy: they would like us to think that it will somehow help balance the budget, despite the fact that the whole fund for CPB constitutes less than 1/20th of 1 percent of the entire federal budget.

The carcass of Big Bird is a strange political trophy. However, is this really what they think we want them to do?

There are few federal expenditures that provide services to so many public citizens for so little money.

As a struggling graduate student who already gives all that I can to my local PBS station, I very much resent the suggestion of my own representatives that I should somehow give a little more, just so they can have the cheap luxury of appearing to take significant budgetary action.

No less offensive is the other argument of the anti-PBS contingent: that the government should not fund PBS programs because they're too liberal.

Never mind the fact that one of the longest-running shows on PBS is the very conservative McLaughlin Group. It makes me extremely nervous when government officials try to censor certain kinds of information just because it doesn't flatter their own political agendas. Pravda, anyone?

It's particularly ironic that Bob Dole is one of the loudest voices opposing PBS.

He seems to have forgotten that you can't exactly pick up a New York Times or a Washington Post in the vast majority of this state, which means that publicly available programming like NPR news and MacNeill/Lehrer supplies the only quality national and international news to most Kansas citizens.

He also forgets how difficult it is to get cable in rural areas, and how important educational television can be to rural children.

(My own husband, also a K-State graduate, grew up watching Cosmos and Nova on the public television station that was one of the three signals the family set could pick up on the farm. Is it sheer coincidence that he's gone on to pursue a Ph.D. in physics, or that his older brother works for NASA?)

"He (Bob Dole) also forgets how difficult it is to get cable in rural areas, and how important television can be to rural children."

It's sad that all of our Kansas representatives are so willing to sell out such a rich local resource for such cheap political sleight-of-hand.

If you value public broadcasting as much as I do, please write your U.S. senators and representatives and tell them. Ask them to talk to Representatives Joe Knollenberg and John Porter (chair) of the House Appropriations Committee, to make sure that CPB funding survives the 104th congressional session fully intact.

(It wouldn't hurt to talk some sense into Sen. Larry Pressler, either.)

Given the current political climate, only a significant show of constituent support can save public broadcasting from the privatizing scam that could be closing a PBS station near you.

They've got the votes and the lack of foresight to do it this year.

This is not a drill.

HOME IS WHERE THE WORK IS

> "I opened my door and saw big, black smoke all over the walls. It was hard to know what to do. I called the front desk and then immediately started worrying about my residents."

> GIL GARCIA
> Haymaker Hall resident assistant

Fires, breaking pipes and midnight phone calls are just some of the hazards of being a resident assistant

Home is supposed to be a place to relax, flip the television on and forget the surrounding world.

But for Kimberley Dennis, junior in sociology, neglecting the events and people where she lives are grounds for being fired.

As a resident assistant on the fourth floor of Goodnow Hall, Dennis lives at her job.

Being a friend is a primary responsibility for Dennis, but the job includes planning programs, attending a lot of meetings and answering the phone or a knock on her door at any time.

"I love meeting people and just knowing them," Dennis said.

This year, Dennis has had the opportunity to be friends with a lot of freshmen because fourth floor, which consists of 95 percent freshmen, is the Fast Track floor.

"It is a new program this year designed to help freshmen orient to college life," Dennis said.

Early in the job, Dennis discovered the real work involved in her occupation.

"I suppose it was kind of my initiation to the job," Dennis said.

"One of the pipes had burst in the laundry room, and rain was falling from it. It flooded into the recreation room," she said.

In the chain of events that night, the maintenance man couldn't find the building blueprints, signs went up on all elevators and access to the basement was eliminated.

"We were up until five or six that morning mopping up water," Dennis said.

But a single pipe breaking is minuscule compared to the numerous fires RAs at Haymaker Hall have to handle.

Gil Garcia, fourth-year architecture student, has been an RA at Haymaker for three years. He has experienced firsthand the various heat waves within the hall. However, the fires don't merely blend together in his mind. Each fire stands out as a significant experience, especially the one Garcia calls "the big one last year."

"I opened my door and saw big, black smoke all over the walls. It was hard to know what to do, I called the front desk and then immediately started worrying about my residents," Garcia said.

Fires at Haymaker Hall are often caused by the carelessness of residents. However as an RA, Dave Hasemann, junior in animal science, reminds students to take responsibility for their own actions.

"I talked to the guys and told them it is their floor, and we are all responsible for it," Hasemann said.

As a result, Hasemann found students on his floor watching each other and taking pride in the floor.

"It is unbelievable how you can see the different sides of people," Hasemann said.

Different programs conducted by the RAs also help the staff see changes in residents. The programs at Haymaker include a wellness model and talks on alcoholism, health and social life.

Often, the RAs go through extensive training to enable them to better serve the students. Kim Winkler, director of Haymaker, said not everybody is cut out for the job.

"Good RAs are very personable with their residents and respect their individualism," Winkler said.

Mindi Woods, senior in biology and pre-med, said she likes to plan an activity a week with the residents on her floor in West Hall.

She said the responsibilities of going to school and living at her job require good time management.

Dennis also points to time management as a necessity of staff life.

But she doesn't let all the work stop her from having fun.

"I'll never grow up," she said.

Other people's problems: 24 hours as an RA

A day in the life of a resident assistant involves going to classes, taking care of other people's problems, rushing to meetings and being a friend.

Kimberley Dennis, junior in sociology, thrives off of the rush of living at her job and the thrill of being a friend to all she meets.

Jan. 12 was a relatively calm day for Dennis, with plenty of time to spend with the women on her floor.

8 a.m.
Get up, take a shower and get ready for the coming day.

9:30 a.m.
Dennis works at New Student Services on campus. Outside of her job as an RA, Dennis enjoys showing incoming freshmen and their families the ins and outs of campus and college life.

11:05 a.m.
Being a good example and attending class is an important part of being an RA, so next stop is Methods of Social Research.

12:30 p.m.
With classes back-to-back, Dennis goes to her Social Gerontology class until 1:45.

2:05 p.m.
The final class of the day is Corrections.

3:30 p.m.
After getting an earful of how to be good, Dennis gets back to Goodnow Hall to spend a few hours relaxing with the women on her floor.

Activities during this time include finding food, hanging out with people on the floor and checking on people in the hall who may have problems or questions. Because this is the beginning of the semester, Dennis may help residents with schedules, drop/add or setting up appointments with advisers.

5 p.m.
Dinner is a welcome relaxation period. A group of friends heads over to Kramer Food Center.

7 p.m.
After a long dinner, she has a chance to sit down and look at her homework.

Usually, homework isn't attempted until 10 p.m., but tonight, there is a staff meeting, and more time is spent taking care of the hall and catching up on the day's events.

10 p.m.
Goodnow staff meeting to discuss recent events and issues.

The end of the meeting heralds the end of the day. After staying and chatting with friends, Dennis tucks in for the night.

ISU hands Cats 4th straight loss

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

This time, the third time wasn't the charm.

After playing two straight ranked opponents, K-State got another chance to win against a ranked team but lost for a third straight time against the 14th-ranked Iowa State Cyclones 79-73.

The win ended the Cyclones' three-game losing streak in Manhattan.

"Our guys have played hard," said K-State coach Tom Asbury, whose team lost its fourth game in a row.

Iowa St. 79
K-State 73

"I don't want to say we are overachieving, but I think we are playing as hard as we can."

The loss to Iowa State dropped the Cats to 10-7 overall and 1-4 in the Big Eight.

K-State shot out to an early lead at the start of the game, leading 8-4 after Tyrone Davis, junior forward, made two free throws at the 16:43 mark in the first half. Davis had 11 points plus five boards.

Iowa State would then go on a 6-0 run to take the lead 10-8 with 14:13 left in the first half. K-State tied the game at 10-10, when Demond Davis, who finished with 14 points and five rebounds, hit an 18-foot jump shot at the 13:02 mark.

Both teams then exchanged leads with either team leading by more than three points, until Fred Hoiberg closed the first half with three straight three pointers to give Iowa State a six-point lead, 40-34, at the intermission.

Asbury said the Cats' coverage on Hoiberg was good at first but in the long run it could have been better.

"It was really pretty good for the first 12-to-13 minutes, and then we didn't quite do as well as I hoped," Asbury said.

The Cats started the second half on a 12-7 run, which tied the game at 47-47 on a Belvis Noland three-pointer at the 14:26 mark.

Noland led the Cats off the bench with 19 points.

K-State would never lead in the second half and would only tie the game one more time, when Hamilton Strickland hit a two-foot hook shot with 11:20 left in the game.

"We played real hard and real spirited and got the ball when we needed it," said Iowa State coach Tim Floyd, whose team's record improved to 15-2 and 2-1 in the Big Eight.

This was apparent at the 1:24 mark when Iowa State center Loren Meyer rebounded a last-gasp Jacy Holloway shot with one second left on the shot clock and put it in for two.

"The bounces went their way. They got some calls," said junior guard Elliot Hatcher, who was held to just seven points.

Hatcher's seven points tied his season low in scoring. Hatcher also had seven at Alabama in the season opener Nov. 16.

"These last three games we could have won," Hatcher said. "We could be 4-1 right now."

K-State shot 45.2 percent from the floor, which was the best mark that team has shot since shooting 48 percent against Marshall.

Despite K-State's second-best shooting effort of the season, Iowa State just did the things that it needed to do to win. "That's what quality teams will do," Asbury said.

"That's what experience will do for you. Look at the big three. There's the difference in the game right there: Hoiberg, Michalik and Meyer."

Hoiberg led Iowa State with 24 points and two steals. Both Michalik and Meyer poured in 17 points.

Although Iowa State won the game, Fred Hoiberg said the Cyclones respect the athleticism of K-State.

They're a good ball club. They're probably the most athletic team in the Big Eight," Hoiberg

Cats lose 3rd straight in closing minutes

Inexperience has proven to be a handicap for the K-State Wildcats this season.

With only two players on the K-State roster having played what head coach Tom Asbury calls quality Big Eight Conference minutes, team youth showed during the 79-73 home loss to the seasoned Iowa State Cyclones Saturday.

"Probably the major difference in that game was just experience," Asbury said. "They made the big plays when they had to, and we didn't."

This theme is starting to ring a little too familiar for some of the Cats.

The last three games have told the same story of Wildcat mishaps late in the game.

"I think where we're losing it is in the last four or five minutes of the game," senior forward Stanley Hamilton said. "We just start doing crazy things."

The story at the Missouri game on Jan. 14 was poor late-game execution. The story against Kansas last Wednesday was lost composure. The story Saturday against Iowa State was an inability to make the big plays.

The Cats are hoping the experience comes around sooner instead of later.

Freshman guard Mark Young said with the experience they are getting, there should come a team that can more consistently make the big plays.

Echoing Young's comments, junior guard Elliott Hatcher said the end-of-the-game breakdowns need to end.

"We have confidence. We can play with anybody. It's just a matter of getting it done at the end."

One area where the inexperience is evident is at the free-throw line. The Cats missed seven of 17 charity shots, while the veteran Cyclones connected on 21 of their 27 attempts.

"We missed a bunch of them in the gut of the game," Asbury said. "If we're not missing those toward the end, then it's a little closer. The whole perspective, the whole game's different."

But the Cats still could have overcome that if it wasn't for missing eight of 12 field goals in the last seven minutes.

"We played hard for 40 minutes. We played fairly hard and smart for 35," Asbury said. "Then we started to do things that show inexperience in big games."

Hamilton agreed.

"I think what we've got to do is be patient," he said. "It's got to turn around for us."

It doesn't get any easier for the Wildcats, though.

Up next for the Cats is a Wednesday-evening showdown with the Oklahoma Sooners, led by Big Eight scoring leader Ryan Minor and last year's conference three-point leader Calvin Curry.

Coming so close in the last few games has made the desire for a win all the more intense, and Asbury said the key is a cool head late in the game.

"Sometimes guys get a little shell-shocked at the end of games," Asbury said. "I hope not. We could be in a bunch of them this year."

OSU, OU sweep weekend series over Cats

DAN LEWERENZ

After a 2-0 start in conference play, K-State has fallen to 10-7, 2-3 in the Big Eight. The Cats lost home games to Oklahoma State Friday, 72-63, and Oklahoma Sunday, 79-70.

Fouls plagued the Cats in both games, with both opponents combining to shoot 70 free throws.

Additionally, K-State has suffered offensive lapses after jumping to an early lead in both games.

A running jumper by OSU point guard Yogi York at the 11:35 mark opened up a 23-8 run to close out the half for the Cowgirls.

"When it was 19-13, I thought we were going to get on a roll, and it never happened," said Wildcat senior Shanele Stires about the Oklahoma State game.

"That's what's been killing us all year, our little five-minute spells where we can't get anything going offensively, and we're not stopping them defensively."

Stires led all scorers with 21 points. Freshman wing Brit Jacobson added 13.

Senior guard Regi Smith lead the Cowgirls with 19 points.

"Smith hurt us," said Coach Brian Agler. "For some reason we didn't want to make an adjustment on her."

Amy Scales added 14 points, and Gina Shaterkina had 13.

Against OU, K-State jumped out to an early 4-0 lead.

But again the Cats fell short, allowing the Sooners 10 unanswered points over the next 7:33.

The Oklahoma lead reached 11 near the end of the half, before Jacobson's last second lay up sent K-State to the locker room down 31-22.

"We didn't do a very good job of reading the defense," said Agler.

"They were switching on pretty much every pick, and that got us out of sync right away," said sophomore wing Missy Decker. "We had to get quicker ball movement, get the ball inside. ... When we did that, we got shots."

The Oklahoma lead reached 17 in the second half before the Cats mounted a comeback.

K-State pulled within seven on three-point shooting by Decker and Stires before the clock and the solid free-throw shooting by OU began to take their toll.

The Sooners balanced attack placed five players in double figures.

Stires led all scorers with 24. Decker contributed 14, and Jacobson scored 12.

Senior wing Shawnda DeCamp remained in her shooting slump, finishing the weekend without hitting a three-pointer.

DeCamp scored seven points against OSU and hit her only shot against OU to finish with two.

"Shawnda's going through a rough period right now," Agler said.

▶ CATS BREAK WORLD RECORDS

K-State track coach Steve Fritz and track standout Gwen Wentland both set world records in the Pentathlon this weekend.

Fritz

Fritz achieved a new World Pentathlon Best by scoring 4,478 points at the Wildcat Pentathlon Friday.

Fritz, who was competing for Accusplit TC, broke the record that was held by France's Christian Plaziat.

"I was glad I competed well, because I don't have too many opportunities to compete indoors since I'm not in college anymore," Fritz said.

Wentland recorded a three-peat by posting her third straight Wildcat Pentathlon victory with a new personal best of 4,115 points.

Wentland also improved on her high-jump record with a jump of 6 feet, 4-1/2 inches.

"She also had PR's (personal records) in the hurdles and in the shot put," K-State track coach Cliff Rovelto said. "Her score of 4,155 is a pretty significant mark."

Sheep, undies cause dream confusion

Dear Cassandra,

Please interpret my psychotic dream. It all started when I was counting sheep. Then this one jumped over that was wearing my favorite pair of underwear. You know, the little thong ones with little naked pictures of Barney all over them.

I was chasing after this particular sheep when I fell into this hole and ended up in Japan in a pile of earthquake rubble. To my surprise, the person who rescued me was my acting teacher.

Among the clothes she gave me at her house were the little Barney thong underwear. I awoke in a shock. What can this mean?

Signed, Baffled

Dear Baffled,

The answer is clear. God is calling you to do emergency assistance in Japan, and your acting teacher has apparently had a rather unique past with Barney.

Woodstock comes home via Internet

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

Experience the sights and sounds of Woodstock '94 right from your own computer.

That's right, do it on your own computer. You can sit back and watch video clips of Aerosmith, Rollins Band or your favorite performer.

How is this possible, you ask? Simple. Kaleidoscope maintains a home page for Woodstock on the World Wide Web.

WEB SITE

The address for the Woodstock '94 program on the World Wide Web is http://woodstock94.com/album/

The site is a graphics-rich page with links to all types of information and footage of Woodstock. The graphic information, however, slows down the loading of linked pages.

The home page is an image of the actual stage and the crowd. You can access two different video clips of the crowd and the entrance to Woodstock from the stage, but these clips aren't really impressive because they mostly eat valuable time and memory.

The best link on the home page leads you to the performances page. On this page, each band that performed is listed, along with a link to a separate page.

This is where it gets good. From the individual band page, you can download pieces of video footage from a performance. The footage offers a chance to participate in a little of the Woodstock experience.

The only drawback is that the clips take a while to load. They are also pretty short for all the wait, but they'll satisfy your curiosity.

A new feature on the home page, just added Dec. 12, is a link to Woodstock Interactive Press Kit.

This kit has more information about musicians, quotes from musicians, facts about Woodstock and even a cybermosh pit game, all unavailable on the regular home page. The information is made to be downloaded and kept on your computer for future reference or for using the game later on.

The kit is touted as "high energy, visually stimulating ... and a lot of fun" by A&M's publicity release.

I have to disagree. You are forced to wander around in cyberspace and figure everything out on your own. (You can't get help without quitting and loading the help text.) The kit uses sound clips as background music while you tour what's offered. However, only three clips are available, and they get on your nerves in a big hurry. Another annoying feature is that the clips change each time you go to a different page.

As for the cybermosh pit, it sucks. The object is to mosh with muddy people and avoid clean people. It is boring, amateurish and cheesy.

I think the Woodstock '94 home page is a great place to take a break on the information highway. Just avoid the interactive kit — it is a waste of your time and A&M's money.

Webb speaks against book

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Farrell Webb, assistant professor of human development and family studies, said the authors of "The Bell Curve," by Charles Murray and Dick Hernstein, make assertions that intelligence is related to race. Webb focused his speech and offered his views on Chapter 13 of the book, which explained race and ethnic differences related to IQ levels.

Speaker says people shouldn't be judged by their IQ

KIMBERLY WISHART
Collegian

People should not be measured by their IQ, said Farrell Webb, assistant professor of human development and family studies.

Webb spoke Friday morning at McCain Auditorium against the best-selling book "The Bell Curve," an 845-page book by Charles Murray and Dick Hernstein.

The book makes assertions that intelligence is related to race.

"It talks about the current state of affairs in America. It gives the view that others are different, and that causes social problems," he said.

"It's a plea to change America back to what it used to be and not to what it's becoming," Webb said.

Webb summarized some points of the book and offered his opposing views.

"We should not ask for whom the bell tolls," he said. "It tolls for all of us."

Webb concentrated on Chapter 13, which explained race and ethnic differences related to IQ levels.

"The book is not directly about race, but it uses it," he said.

The authors refer to intelligence as the cognitive ability of a person. Intelligence is too strong of a term, Webb said.

"They say IQ is in your genes, not your Levi's jeans, but your family genes," he said.

"IQ is based on verbal skill acquisition that comes from interacting with other people," Webb said.

Because of this theory, the cognitive elite would marry only the cognitive elite, Webb said.

"Murray and Hernstein said those with higher cognitive ability have better lives. This is for the white population," he said.

"They have less of a chance at poverty, better chance of high school and college education, less chance of illegitimate children, less chance of being on welfare, less chance of being poor parents and abusive, and that they are just better citizens."

Webb also pointed out other points made by Murray and Hernstein.

"Women on welfare will stay on welfare forever," he said. "They will not stay on welfare. They will make changes in their lives. That is just linear thinking."

Webb said the argument is repeated throughout that black people are less intelligent and always will be.

"The book says dumb people keep having children, so the world keeps getting dumber and dumber," he said.

"People with lower IQs are having more children because the people with higher IQs are more likely to be involved in more activities."

In the normal curve of intelligence, reproduction is not an issue, Webb said.

"There's danger in the hidden meanings and what they don't say," he said.

"If they can't find an answer to support their position, then they shift positions. This goes on throughout the book," Webb said.

IQ tests reflect the people who invented them.

"'The Bell Curve' was written by members of the cognitive elite," Webb said. "The authors fall into the trap they intend to set for others."

Audience members were surprised at the topic of the book.

"It was eye-opening, " Michael Tillman, sophomore in secondary education, said.

"I didn't know there was a lot of people thinking like this. I didn't even know people considered IQ to be so important," he said.

Gail Reno, sophomore in elementary education, said the speech was interesting.

"I had no idea about the book," Reno said. "It's interesting to know books like that are out there."

Webb said there will be a supplemental book coming out in May that will provide commentaries from other scholars.

4 students nominated for Truman

Four K-State students with excellent academic records and proven leadership qualities have earned nominations for the Truman Scholarship.

The Truman Scholarship will award $30,000 to state-by-state recipients to use toward graduate school. The money is given to the students with the idea that their graduate studies will lead to a career in public service.

Liz Ring, junior in history, is one of the four finalists from K-State.

Ring said if she is awarded the scholarship she wants to pursue a master's degree in domestic and social policy at Georgetown University.

"Eventually, I would like to be involved with children's programs and education," she said.

Ring will have her final interview for the scholarship Feb. 10 at the Denver Federal Reserve Bank. There she will be competing against finalists from Wyoming, Montana, Colorado and Nebraska.

Finalists represent the state they are registered to vote in. Ring is originally from Lincoln, Neb., and will be the only finalist from K-State to represent another state.

At K-State, Ring has been involved with Student Senate for three years and is vice chairwoman of the Student Governing Association.

Jennifer Arnett, senior in political science and Spanish, is another finalist from K-State.

Arnett said she hopes to use the scholarship to earn her master's degree in human rights and international affairs at Columbia University.

Eventually, Arnett said, she would like to work at the Carter Center in Atlanta, which concentrates on human rights and agricultural issues in third-world countries.

Jocelyn Viterna, senior in sociology and Latin American studies, is also a nominee for the Truman Scholarship. She wants to attend University of Wisconsin at Madison and study sociology and sociological issues of Latin America.

Viterna is a Blue Key member and served as K-State ambassador last year.

Another K-State finalist is Dan Lewerenz, senior in philosophy and American ethnic studies.

Lewerenz said he hopes to achieve his master's degree in philosophy and American ethnic studies at either UCLA or Arizona University.

"I would like to end up teaching college, focusing on American Indian history," he said.

Lewerenz, Viterna and Arnett will all have their final interview at the Kansas City Federal Reserve Bank. The final selections for the Truman Scholarship will be made in March.

Debate team gets off to good start

MIKE HILL
Collegian

K-State's young debate team has set high goals for this year.

K-State's debate squad got the spring semester under way by tying for third and fourth at the William Jewell debate tournament.

Debate coach Susan Stanfield was happy with the outcome.

"I was real pleased with the team," she said.

Even though the team is made up of mostly freshmen and sophomores, the expectations for this year are high with the streak of 11 national championship tournament appearances on the line.

One of the tournaments the team hopes to attend is the Cross Examination Debate Association National Championship Tournament in March. Only the top 64 teams in the country are accepted to attend, Stanfield said.

"Our goals for this year are to win the Junior Varsity Nationals in March and then to make it to the field of final 64," Stanfield said.

Courtney Knapple, sophomore in speech, said the team had another goal.

"We want to beat one formidable team and have one big win," she said.

Even with the streak on the line, Isaac West, freshman in pre-law, said he didn't feel any pressure.

"I'm not nervous. I think we will make the field," West said.

Knapple said the biggest point of anxiety is maintaining the debate team's excellent reputation.

"The pressure is to keep the K-State name high in the community," Knapple said.

John Burtis, debate coach, said although the team has one junior and the rest are underclassmen, they could go a long way.

"Our top team consists of a sophomore who qualified for nationals last year, and her partner is stronger than her at this time last year," he said.

Burtis said even with the loss of most of the upperclassmen, there was no need to panic.

"Kansas State always has good recruits. We are well known for competing nationally. It's a visibility factor for K-State. Many people come to K-State even though they don't compete because they know the program," he said.

The debate team's next tournament is at Southern Illinois University.

"It should tell what the competition is like and who has the best position," Burtis said.

Minister begins 26-night lecture series

"I've never had so much peace in my life as I've had with this church."

JIM ROSS
Member of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church

JOE KLEIDOSTY
Collegian

Pastor Charles Buursma presented more than 150 people at the Manhattan Seventh-day Adventist Church with a thought-provoking question Saturday night.

"I look forward to Jesus coming, aren't you?" Buursma said.

"That's what this lecture is all about," he said.

Saturday night marked the beginning of Buursma's 26-night lecture series, The Word of Prophecy, in Manhattan.

Buursma presents about seven lecture series, or 175 lectures, throughout the United States and Canada each year.

He has been involved with this on a full-time basis for about 24 years.

Buursma said he heard the call of God to be a minister at the age of 16 while attending a youth camp in Michigan.

He said the purpose of the lecture series is to help people have a better grip on life and learn alternative ways to solve problems.

"The lecture series helps people come to a personal realization of their lives," Buursma said.

"In general, it's wanting people to develop a personal relationship with a personal God," Buursma said.

Buursma said many people believe the word prophecy has only one meaning.

"People believe the word just means prediction," Buursma said.

He said that it comes from the Greek word prophetes, which actually means to speak forth.

God chose certain people, prophets, to communicate with because he couldn't directly communicate with ordinary people, Buursma said.

These prophets then wrote down their visions, dreams and inspirations, creating the prophetic books of the Old Testament.

"Prophets are like God reporters," Buursma said.

Buursma said the Bible is not just a book, but a library of books.

Jim Ross, member of a Seventh-day Adventist Church in Topeka, attended a lecture similar to this one in Scotts Bluff, Neb., in the early 1980s.

"That's when I first had exposure to their truth," Ross said. "

I've never had so much peace in my life as I've had with this church."

Ross said he was once a successful businessman making and spending a lot of money, but he was not very happy.

"I just know it was good for me when I found this church, and I'll never regret it," Ross said.

Susan Woods, member of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Manhattan, said God knew she was searching for the truth, and this church is closest to the truth.

"It's been my first love ever since," Woods said.

The lecture series is intended to prepare people for the end of this world and to introduce the way into the new world of peace.

"This world hasn't evolved. It has degenerated," Buursma said.

"The only answer is a new

Clinton to step up laws

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — President Clinton plans to seek more money to step up enforcement of the nation's immigration laws and labor standards, the New York Times reported.

He also is believed to be leaning toward increasing the minimum wage, the Times said. Clinton supported an increase in the 1992 presidential campaign, and the idea has been advocated by Labor Secretary Robert Reich.

White House press secretary Michael McCurry said Clinton was still weighing the recommendations of his economic advisers on whether to mention raising the minimum wage in his State of the Union address Tuesday.

Administration officials told the Times Clinton hoped to be a few steps ahead of Republicans in promising to move against illegal immigration. Republicans in Congress are likely to go beyond Clinton's proposals, especially for expansion of the Border Patrol.

As for labor standards, Republicans are divided over plans to increase inspections of factories and other work sites.

According to the Times, confidential budget documents show the Clinton administration is drafting ambitious proposals to combat illegal immigration, which often supplies cheap labor for low-wage, low-skilled jobs that could go to American workers.

The draft budget calls for hiring 650 investigators, an increase of 41 percent compared with the 1,600 at the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Times reported.

Clinton also will seek $131 million to detain and deport aliens who have committed crimes or are in the United States illegally.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Access the Future informs parents of goals

AMY SIMON
Collegian

Organizers of Access the Future have taken their message across the state to raise support for their program.

Parents of all K-State students received letters last week explaining the goal of Access the Future and asking for their support.

Access the Future is an effort to keep tuition low and maintain open admissions at Kansas Board of Regents schools.

Mary Roush, director of Access the Future, said a parent has already contacted her about helping Access the Future.

"We are anxious to find out what will happen when more of the letters arrive," Roush said.

Roush said she hopes students will talk to their parents about the letter and explain their concerns about the issues of tuition and open admissions.

"We want students to inform their parents about what is going on," Roush said.

"The students need to be involved."

Parents can help the program by writing or phoning their state legislators. They can also contact organizations in their area that may be interested in hearing from a pair of students about Access the Future.

The success of Access the Future will depend largely upon the involvement of students and their parents, Jeff Peterson, student body president, said.

There will be an organizational meeting at 7:30 p.m. today in Union 212. Anyone interested in becoming involved with Access the Future is encouraged to attend.

Members of the group will finalize speaking engagements and review content for statewide presentations at this meeting, Roush said.

INVOLVEMENT

There will be an organizational meeting at 7:30 p.m. today in Union 212. Anyone interested in becoming involved with Access the Future is encouraged to attend.

"We are going to divide up the state into districts to prepare for our speeches," Peterson said.

"The meeting is also going to give us a definite structure and time line to get things accomplished."

Pairs of students are traveling around the state explaining the program. The first speeches about Access the Future will be Thursday at a Lions Club meeting in Sabetha, Roush said.

Roush said the most rewarding thing about working with Access the Future is when people tell her they have heard about the issues.

K-State, fort help job market services at K-State, said, "The job market in Manhattan is not especially oriented for college graduates. There are other places that are better to go for technical and managerial positions."

The market for full-time, professional work has been getting better over the last few years for three reasons, Akin said.

"Being near a major university, graduate school and major military base is drawing more professional jobs," he said.

There is concern over what effect the downsizing of Fort Riley will have on the local job market.

"If it is slow, we won't see a big effect, but if it's fast, we'll see a lot of changes — what kinds of changes, I don't know. It's hard to surmise what could happen," Oppy said.

Oppy and Akin offer these suggestions to students looking for employment:

Jobs can be found through many different sources. Job boards, job services, faculty and friends are among the places to look for ideas.

Akin said, "Let friends know you're looking. There is no substitute for finding out who knows and keeping them on the lookout."

Sending out applications and résumés to more than one business is a good idea, and always having inquiries out is a good way to stay in the hunt, Akin said.

"Be prepared," Oppy said. "Have a résumé ready. The days of walking into a business and applying for a job are gone."

The most important thing to remember when searching for a job is to not get discouraged.

Akin said, "If you get a rejection, keep your morale up. It's important to keep morale up. If you don't, you will be rejected."

Women, teenagers make up work force

Mississippi Delta, serve burgers and fries from coast to coast.

More than a third are teenagers, making their first regular bucks. Three in five are women, among them 192,000 single mothers or wives bringing home the family's main or only wage.

The minimum is something people grab when they can in parts of south Texas where migrant farm hands work hunched over broccoli and cucumbers they often can't afford for themselves.

"Sometimes we buy (new) clothes, sometimes secondhand clothes," said Guadalupe Lechuga, 56. He has worked the fields since he was a child, makes $4.25 an hour when there's work and, with his wife, has raised six children.

Use of the minimum varies widely not only region to region, but county to county.

In Virginia's Fairfax County, a Washington suburb, the state job bank showed only one job starting at $4.25 out of 124 positions needing no experience.

But in Farmville, Virginia's rural heart 60 miles west of Richmond, $4.25 lands a job as sales clerk at the downtown general store, part-time bus driving and a variety of fast-food and retail positions. It's a quarter short of the starting wage for gluing up soles at a boot and shoe plant.

Senators debate spending limits

Peterson spent less than their opponents and still won, he said.

David Norris, Elections Committee chairman, agreed elections can't be bought.

"We've had candidates who spent the limit who didn't make it," Norris said.

Norris said a member of his committee was a senate candidate who spent the limit and still did not get a seat.

Becca Korphage, arts and sciences senator, said she had never spent more that $25 on her campaign.

Brandon Clark, arts and sciences senator, said there were two ways spending limits affected the elections. People get hurt because they break them or else they find a way to get around them, he said.

"I want to see quality people in this room," Clark said. "We're not going to see a rich-kid Senate."

Korphage said she disagreed.

"If you don't have guidelines, you open the door for this organization to become an elitest organization," Korphage said.

Norris said he knew the override wouldn't pass.

"I was surprised it passed the first time," he said.

Paul Freidrichs, agriculture senator, said he thought there were too many rules in the elections guidelines that were causing problems.

"I don't think anyone's been kicked out for spending too much," Freidrichs said. "The problem's not how much you spend. It's filing the reports."

Norris said the reports would still have to be filed, and the Collegian would be able to publish the financial statements. The Elections Committee is not trying to micromanage the election, he said.

"I don't think I have the right to tell someone who has the resources they can't use them," Norris said.

Peterson said he vetoed the elections' guidelines because there were no spending limits for campaigns.

Derek Kreifels, business senator, sponsored the amended election guidelines.

In the new guidelines, candidates for student body president and vice president may spend 100 percent of in-state full-time student tuition. Candidates for other all-university offices may spend one-fifth of tuition.

Kennedy remembered for her children ran like twin threads through her long life.

Four of her nine children were killed in their prime — two in plane crashes and two by assassins' bullets. One daughter was retarded, and a grandson died of a drug overdose.

She was a devout Roman Catholic, and her church helped her bear her sorrows. After President John F. Kennedy's assassination in 1963, she said, "I've learned to be brave and put my faith in the will of God."

"No matter what, God wants us to be happy. He doesn't want us to be sad. Birds sing after a storm. Why shouldn't we?" she said in a 1983 interview.

Rose Kennedy knew kings, queens, presidents and popes. She spent her summers in Cape Cod and her winters in Palm Beach, Fla. She was a tireless worker for her sons' election campaigns in her middle years and continued to make public appearances until late in life.

But she was rarely seen in public after April 1984, when she suffered a stroke.

At celebrations marking her 100th birthday, her only surviving son, U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, told a crowd of nearly 400 people, "In the chaos of our household, she was the quiet at the center of the storm, the anchor of our family, the safe harbor to which we always came."

In her autobiography, "Times to Remember," she said: "What greater aspiration and challenge are there for a mother than the hope of raising a great son or daughter?"

Rose Kennedy was born in Boston on July 22, 1890, and tasted politics early, parading through the streets with her father, John F. "Honey Fitz" Fitzgerald, a congressman, Boston mayor and Democratic power.

Kennedy

Her wedding to Joseph P. Kennedy in 1914 was front-page news in Boston.

Kennedy was a dynamo who amassed a fortune in banking, real estate, liquor, films and Wall Street — holdings that grew to an estimated $500 million by the 1980s.

Cap, gown, tassle ... $15 graduation fee?

JANET GILLILAND
Collegian

The graduating class of spring 1995 will be the first at K-State to have to pay a fee to graduate.

"The fee was approved in 1993 by the Kansas Board of Regents," Provost James Coffman said.

The Regents approved a $15 fee in 1993, when it first came up for consideration, because they determined their account was becoming too costly.

The $15 fee will be used to help cover commencement costs such as facilities, printing diplomas and the diploma covers.

This semester will be the first time K-State will require the fee for graduates, Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said.

"K-State implemented the fee to begin this semester," Rawson said.

Until now, the Provost office had paid for the commencement exercises.

"The reason for the fee is that the account became too costly for the Provost office to handle," Keith Ratzloff, University controller, said.

Since the graduation fee is in a transition period right now, it

Riley to lose 4,000 soldiers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Army has identified 1st Infantry Division units that will be inactivated as part of force reductions, Fort Riley officials announced Saturday.

Fort Riley will lose an estimated 4,200 soldiers through the reductions, which are scheduled to begin in June and be complete by February 1996.

"Many of the soldiers in the (inactivated) units will stay at Fort Riley because they will be moved over into the two remaining brigades and nondivisional units, perhaps," Capt. Jim Gray, a public affairs officer at the fort, said.

"That reduces soldier and family turbulence to some degree," he said.

More than 10,000 soldiers will remain at Fort Riley in what are now the 1st and 2nd brigades of the 1st Division, and the 937th Engineer Group and other units that are not part of the division.

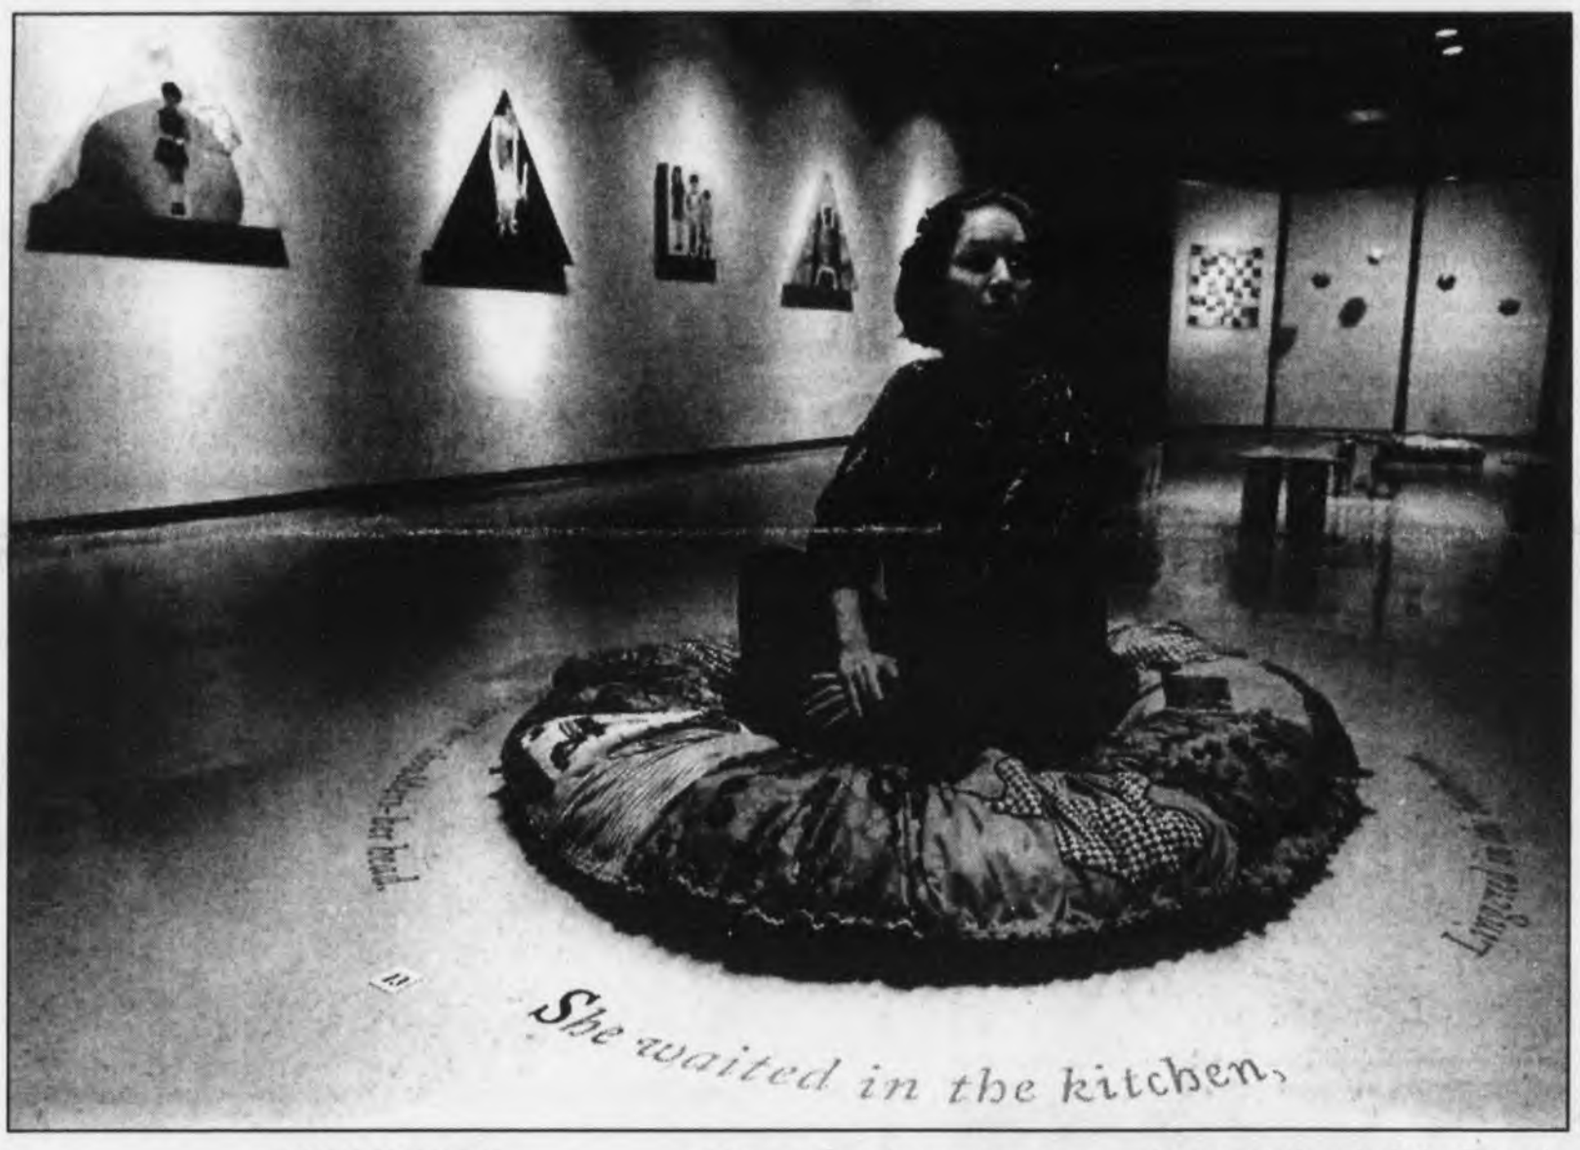
The two brigades will retain their two armor battalions and one mechanized infantry battalion and each will gain an artillery, engineer and forward support battalion.

The 1st and 2nd brigades will remain at Fort Riley, but each will be assigned to one of the two Army divisions in Germany.

Those units are the 1st Armored Division and the 3rd Infantry Division.

The Big Red One is one of the Army's oldest and most historic units, and the Army traditionally keeps such units on active service in preference to newer units or those with a lesser combat record.

INACTIVATED UNITS



Units scheduled to become inactive are:

- Headquarters Command, 1st Infantry Division
- Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Infantry Division
- Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, Division Artillery
- 25th Target Acquisition Battery, Division Artillery
- B Battery, 6th Field Artillery Division Artillery
- Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Aviation Brigade

SPOTLIGHT

Thoughts of family, playings with color, and varied mediums fill Manhattan artist Lea Cyr's work with an imaginative nostalgia.

Cyr's work is on display in "Re-Visited, Lea Cyr: Recent Work" until Friday in the Willard Gallery.

Lea Cyr moved to Manhattan last year from Boston when her husband, Michael Mastranardi, accepted a teaching position with the K-State Art Department.

Cyr's career was already in full bloom encapsulating many commissions, exhibitions, and installations when she moved here

Perhaps most important to Cyr's work is her experience with architecture. She attended the University of Cincinnati and the Boston Architectural Center as an architecture major. Then, in 1994, she graduated with honors from Massachusetts College of Art with a bachelor of fine arts in painting.

It is the architecture, though, that really stands out in her work.

Cyr is fascinated with shapes and geometrical forms. Her newest paintings are derived from experimentations with tetrahedrons on a small scale and some triangular influence from Siennese fresco paintings in Italy. From the tetrahedrons, Cyr took the separate triangles and transformed them into large paintings.

However, Cyr explained the triangular shape found in her recent paintings are also a response to having found it hard to paint on square canvas.

"I would always have one corner left over that I didn't know what to do with," Cyr said.

Cyr said she used the tetrahedrons as a responsive device. She said sometimes she would respond to the prints and colors covering the tetrahedrons and other times it was the shape of the object.

UGB: Why weren't we asked?

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

Subway in the K-State Union is official, despite the concerns of some Union Governing Board members.

Subway will open Feb. 1, but not without some controversy within UGB.

Jack Sills, Union director; Tim Lehmann, president of the Union Corporation Board; and Vice President of Administration and Finance and corporation treasurer Tom Rawson hope to sign the contract Thursday afternoon, Sills said.

Subway will be the first outside food contractor allowed in the Union by UGB.

UGB began looking into the possibility of signing an outside contractor when it was approached by Terri Eddy, Recreation Center manager, Sills said.

"They wanted to get something into the Rec Center," Meredith Mein, UGB president, said.

The invitation to submit a proposal was sent out to local sub shops. Mr. Goodcents, Rock-A-Belly Bar & Deli, Subs-n-Such, Subway, Kansas Sandwich Shop, which owns Dilly's Deli, and Arby's were invited. Blimpy's, a sub shop found in many university unions, was also invited to fill the space in the Recreation Center in the basement of the Union.

"I originally asked the governing board their concurrence for bringing in a pizza operation," Sills said.

Although permission to solicit businesses was given, UGB did not say a company could come in without the permission of the board, Patrick Carney, UGB member, said. The board never approved signing a contract, he said.

"We OK'd him to investigate bringing in a pizza operation," Carney said.

When the invitation was issued, no pizza operations jumped, he said. The terms of the invitation included the possibility of a five-year contract to operate in the Rec Center, Carney said.

Ventilation problems prevented any frying or baking in the Rec Center, Sills said. A pizza operation would also require more extensive

Paycheck change will cost K-State $1 million

WADE ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State employees will take home less monthly pay in 1995, but they will receive 13 checks instead of 12.

This is because the state of Kansas will implement its biweekly pay plan in 1996.

"The new changes will cost K-State about $1 million," said Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president for administration and finance.

The cost will come from new hardware, software, employee training and a consulting firm, Schellhardt said. The changes are designed to help employees.

Gary Leitnaker, director of human resource services, said, "Income for 1995 will most likely increase.

To avoid underwith-holding on federal and state taxes and associated penalties, the state is required to withhold extra moneys."

"Therefore, taxes withheld may increase, and net pay may decrease," Leitnaker said.

"K-State employees will receive their paycheck for the Nov. 18, 1995, to Dec. 17, 1995, pay period on Dec. 29, 1995, instead of Jan. 1, 1996. This will increase their 1995 income, as most employees will receive 13 checks in 1995," he said.

The change to a biweekly pay plan may inconvenience some of the almost 10,000 K-State employees. Some employees have arranged to have all their bills come at once. This will likely change for some people.

Shelly Broccolo, administrative officer, said she may need to have some of her bills moved to other times in the month.

There will likely be benefits to changing to biweekly pay. Employees will receive their paycheck two weeks earlier, making it possible to earn two additional weeks of interest on that paycheck.

Broccolo said she has a traditional account that pays no interest.

"I may look at changing to an interest-bearing account once I'm paid biweekly," she said.

Schellhardt said, "Biweekly is better for students because they are paid more frequently."

Schellhardt also said the longest new employees will have to wait for a paycheck under the biweekly system is four weeks — two weeks less than the present system.

Homeowners could also benefit from the payroll period change.

Schellhardt said if someone has a 30-year mortgage at 9 percent on a $100,000 home, they could save from $50,000 to $60,000 on interest if they paid their home mortgage biweekly instead of monthly.

Also, if a person started working for K-State this year on Jan. 23, his or her pay period would end on Feb. 17. They would be paid on March 1.

On the biweekly plan, if a person started working on Jan. 23, the pay period would end on Jan. 27. The person would be paid on Feb. 10.

Sixty-six K-State employees, along with a consulting firm, are working on changing to biweekly as well as replacing the entire payroll system.

Student in critical condition after City Park robbery

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

A K-State student is in critical condition after an aggravated assault and robbery in City Park Sunday evening.

Chris Reeves, junior in history, was hit on the back of the head and his wallet stolen at City Park in the area south of Fremont Street.

Patrol officer Les Horn said he was called to the scene of the assault and robbery about 11 p.m. through a 911 call from a concerned citizen.

"They said they heard screaming," Horn said.

"When I arrived, he was conscious, but not coherent," Horn said. "He couldn't give a description about what happened, but he said he was hit over the head by something,although he was not sure what it was."

Horn said there have been no arrests made in connection to the robbery and assault, but the police do have three suspects.

"There was apparently an attack by the same people 20 minutes later in the area of Eighth and Laramie," Horn said.

Reeves is in critical condition at Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka.

▶ ZOO TO ADD FREE-ROAMING AUSTRALIAN EXHIBIT, FREE-FLIGHT AVIARY

Manhattan's Sunset Zoological Park will be adding an Australian Walk-About Trail exhibit this spring.

The new exhibit will feature free-roaming red kangaroos, wallabies and emus.

Guests of the zoo will have the opportunity to explore the land down-under on the trail that leads through the exhibit.

Zoo guests will also discover several bird species in the new aviary and see Australian reptiles in their new outdoor habitats.

"This will be the first mixed free - flight aviary for the Sunset Zoo," Donald Wixom, zoo director, said.

Guests will view the birds of the land, sky and water living together.

"Each year, we try to add new exhibits and guest services to the zoo. We want to keep our zoo an exciting and always new experience," Wixom said.

Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director, said the zoo wants to create a new experience with the exhibit and let people learn while they enjoy the atmosphere at the zoo.

"We plan to add lots of graphics focusing on natural history of the animals. We want visitors to see and feel what the animals eat and how they act in their habitats," Fenstermacher said.

"We also want visitors to see the cultural side of Australia. We plan to have graphics that tell about the people who intermix with the animals," she said.

The new exhibit, which will be funded totally in-house, will be located in the central portion of the zoo, Fenstermacher said.

Tony Revak, senior in graphic design, said he was glad to see a new exhbit at the zoo.

"I think every business should try to add new things each year. It keeps things interesting," he said.

The new exhibit is expected to open at the zoo's annual ZOObilation Arts & Crafts Festival, May 27, 28 and 29.

▶ WOLF CREEK LAKE COULD BE AVAILABLE FOR PUBLIC FISHING IN 1996

Wolf Creek Power Plant, located near Burlington, plans to open Wolf Creek Lake for public fishing in early 1996.

"We want to share this resource with the public as much as we can," Neil S. Carns, president of Wolf Creek Nuclear Operating Corporation, said in a press release. "We've been working with Coffey County and the state of Kansas to open this facility for public fishing. We're pleased to be moving toward that goal."

Working with the Kansas Department of Wildlife & Parks Commission and Coffey County, Wolf Creek has drafted a proposal to construct public access facilities at the lake, including an access road, boats ramps, parking and rest rooms.

For state participation in the project, both the Kansas Legislature and the governor must approve the proposal. An exact date for opening the lake will depend on the availability of funds and the completion of construction.

"The Wolf Creek Lake has long been recognized as an outstanding fisheries resource," said John Stickler, acting secretary of the Department of Wildlife & Parks.

The plant discharge area, the area around the nesting bald eagles, the intake region for the plant and a 70-acre protected wildlife refuge will be off -limits to the public.

The rest of the lake will be open. Creel and size limits will be enforced to ensure the balance of different fish will be maintained.

Wolf Creek Lake, considered a good fishing site, was completed and stocked in 1982. A wide variety of fish can be found in the lake, including large and smallmouth bass, walleye, catfish and crappie.

Because of the limited amount of land that provides drainage to the lake, it is relatively clear, said Brad Loveless, superintendent of Resource Protection at Wolf Creek.

This allows more submerged vegetation to grow. These underwater plants, combined with standing timber and several miles of rock-lined shores, provide excellent fish habitat, he said.

▶ ACTIVISTS RALLY TO MARK 22ND ANNIVERSARY OF ROE V. WADE DECISION

(AP) Activists on both sides of the abortion debate rallied Sunday across the country to mark the 22nd anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision that gave women the right to an abortion.

The call for peace has been growing since two receptionists were killed at separate clinics in suburban Boston Dec. 30.

While leaders condemned violence, tensions flared by the killings at the two Boston-area abortion clinics showed no signs of abating.

In Boston, two people were arrested for disrupting an annual prayer service by Massachusetts Citizens for Life. At least 600 people attended the service, organized to condemn the high court's 1973 decision in Roe v. Wade.

Two blocks away, more than 2,000 people attending a rally organized by the National Organization for Women vowed to intensify their fight to keep abortion legal and protect the clinics that provide them.

"We're not going to be stopped by bullies," NOW President Patricia Ireland told the audience.

In Washington, D.C., about 50 pro-choice protesters gathered at the church President Clinton usually attends. Some waved white crosses and signs that read: "Excommunicate the Clintons," and "Repent, Clinton."

The president avoided the fray but not the criticism by attending a different church.

"We're here to ... say, 'Mr. Clinton, your policies are resulting in the deaths of innocent children,'" said Patrick Mahoney, director of the Christian Defense Coalition.

System helps AIDS research

Biologist uses parasites to further treatment discoveries

SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

Three Crayola pictures hang on the wall in Steve Upton's office. Each one is a child's representation of smiles, eyes and faces.

Ironically, these drawings by Upton's 3-year-old daughter actually resemble the parasite cryptosporidium that he has devoted the last eight years of his life to researching.

As an associate professor of biology, Upton spends 50 percent of his time at K-State researching and applying for multiple grants.

These grants have allowed him and a team of eight to 12 people to research the protozoan parasite cryptosporidium.

"About one in every three people has had it sometime in their life," Upton said.

Cryptosporidium is a distant relative to malarian. Once inside the human body, cryptosporidium causes severe abdominal cramping and weight loss.

However, if the body is infected with the HIV virus, cryptosporidium will result in death.

"For an immunocompetent person, it is just like having a bad case of the flu," Upton said.

But for the estimated 10 percent of AIDS patients who develop cryptosporidium, the research being done by Upton's team is urgent.

"Every day in the lab you see something nobody has ever seen before," Upton said.

The amount of discoveries and results found during the research increases everyday. The team has developed quicker in-vitro, or testing, systems that aid in studying the interactions of surface molecules.

This knowledge will help them stop molecule interaction which in turn will enable them to stop cryptosporidium interaction.

Research associate Keith Woods, is the team's in-vitro specialist. Woods has been working on the project since May and helped develop the faster testing process.

"In-vitro is basically using tissue culture cells to mimic a natural process," Woods said.

The process is very tedious because without the in-vitro system you would have to take several fields per sample and rely on your eyes, Woods said.

The new testing system is still in the development stages, but it is already proving helpful, Upton said.

Other key members of Upton's research team are Michael Nesterenko and Nikolai Khramtsov, both from Russia.

A protein biochemist, Nesterenko was brought from Moscow two years ago specifically to research the interaction of the parasites with cells. Khramtsov is the molecular biologist on the team.

These men and the graduate students who work with them face the daily risk of being infected by cryptosporidium.

In fact, the possibility is so real, Upton said, scientists learn to expect infection if they work with the organisms for a long period of time.

"We all get infected at one time or the other," Upton said.

Luckily, once the host is infected by the parasite, he or she will never contract cryptosporidium again.

Upton has already battled the parasite since he started concentrating his research on it in the early 1980s.

But, he said, it just lets him know he will never again have cryptosporidium.

"I decided to take this on as a main project because it is of human importance as well as agriculture importance," Upton said.

Cryptosporidium not only infiltrates humans but causes serious profit losses for cattle raisers.

But Sierra, Upton's 3-year-old daughter, doesn't know about the cattle losses or the people dying.

All she knows is that she drew some pictures and her dad wanted to hang them in his office, although Upton said he is sure her drawings will become more realistic in the future.

Upton also said he is feeling positive about future research the team is planning.

"This year will be a good year with breakthroughs in learning how to study cryptosporidium," Upton said.

And a good year for breakthroughs in Crayola drawings.

Old themes to return in address

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton plans to brush off his 1992 campaign message with a thematic State of the Union address that promises bold leadership to improve jobs, shrink bureaucracy and restore Americans' faith in their government.

Call it a new attempt at casting himself as a new Democrat.

The political landscape has shifted drastically since this time a year ago, when Clinton vowed before a Democratic-controlled Congress to veto any health care bill he didn't like.

Now, Republicans are in charge — and Clinton hopes to seize the moment and get his presidency on track for his 1996 re-election campaign.

"The president is really going to target a vision for this country about where we need to go in these next two years, and where we really need to go into the next century," White House Chief of Staff, Leon Panetta, said Sunday on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley."

The address, scheduled for 8 tonight, comes after weeks of soul-searching by Clinton, who sought guidance from a wide variety of people — including governors, deans, retired generals and admirals, old friends, religious leaders and a few new-age motivational coaches.

What resulted are plans for a speech that returns to three broad themes that surfaced first in his campaign, but they got lost in two years' of chaos, controversy and the President Clinton's own lack of focus.

- A "New Economy," bolstered by lower interest rates, 5.5 million new jobs and a deficit-reduction plan Clinton says took $11,000 in debt off every American family.
- A "New Government," evidenced by 100,000 fewer government employees and Vice President Al Gore's ongoing plans to eliminate or restructure scores of federal programs.
- "New Covenant," the 1992 campaign slogan that promises a commitment between a caring government and its responsible citizenry.

$15 graduation fee issued too late in semester

If the Provost's office could budget money for each graduate before, then why can't it in the future?

The concept of paying $15 to apply for graduation seems logical at first: a senior graduating from K-State pays the amount necessary to cover the price of facilities, printing the diploma and the diploma cover.

In May, the graduating senior walks down the aisle to receive a diploma, leaves K-State and lives happily ever after.

Unfortunately, it's not quite that simple.

Many students may be left wondering why they are required to pay a $15 fee to graduate starting in spring 1995, when no other class before them has been required to do so.

If the Provost's office could budget money for each graduate before, then why can't it in the future?

If graduation is denied or problems develop over the course of the semester, making graduation impossible, then applying for a second, or possibly third time will be necessary.

In addition, another problem has developed. Many students who have already applied for graduation were not asked to pay the $15 fee.

Now, the University controller's office will have to determine a way to collect the money that each of these students owe.

Perhaps it is necessary for all parties involved to reconsider the decision to charge a $15 graduation-application fee.

A prophetic lineup from PBS's ugly future

MARK HARMON GUEST COLUMN

It's now clear that one of the targets of Republican congressional extremists is, of all things, non-commercial television. Never mind that public television serves an important educational function. Ignore that public television, catering to corporate underwriting, offers us three weekly or daily business programs while offering no regular consumer or labor programs. Put aside the fact that PBS for years has been home to William F. Buckley and John McLaughlin.

The wacko fringe of the Republican party is upset because public television isn't conservative enough. Occasionally, a non-traditional theme or progressive viewpoint will get through. Most folks would celebrate this diversity of ideas, but we must remember the whole extremist right agenda is based on fear of ideas. So now the Newt brigades are threatening to pull all public money out of non-commercial broadcasting. The political extortion is clear: conform or die.

One could present several reasonable arguments about why the threats are a bad idea:

1. U.S. non-commercial broadcasting already is underfunded compared to most developed nations.

2. Public money is only part of the non-commercial system budget. Removing it will only lessen program quality and make life tougher for other worthy causes who now must compete even more with public broadcasting for the limited pool of charitable giving.

3. Such a move destroys the independence and diversity of public television as set out by two Carnegie Commission reports and a 1967 Act of Congress.

Instead, however, let's look at what a typical daily PBS schedule might look like if public broadcasting leaders cave in to the pressure:

8 a.m. Morning Stretch: Arnold Schwarz-enegger does squats while reciting passages of "Atlas Shrugged."

9 a.m. Mr. Rogers' Segregated Neighborhood: King Friday sings "Elitism is Neat." The House Un-American Activities investigation of Mr. McFeely continues. Mr. Rogers explains why certain kids can't be his neighbor.

10 a.m. Sesame Street: Jerry Falwell teaches Big Bird to be more judgmental. Oscar the Grouch plays substitute host for Rush Limbaugh. Bert and Ernie are kicked out of the military. Jesse Helms bleaches all the Muppets until they are white.

"1 p.m.: Where in the World is Carmen San Diego? Guest detective Patrick Buchanan helps kids build a wall around the U.S."

11 a.m. Square One: A MathNet episode "Ernest Does Trickle Down." Jim Varney explains how cutting taxes for the rich and spending more on the military will balance the budget.

11:30 a.m. Reading Rainbow: Part IV of Mein Kampf.

Noon. Washington Week in Review: special guest is U.S. Sen. Bob Dole. He explains why the current pension crisis, budget deficit, bank closings, farm foreclosures, S & L bailouts, inflation, recession, job loss and trade deficit all can be blamed on someone else.

1 p.m. Where in the World is Carmen San Diego? Guest Detective Patrick Buchanan helps the kids build a wall around the U.S.

2 p.m. William F. Buckley's Firing Line: Guests George Will, Rush Limbaugh, John Sununu, Patrick Buchanan, James J. Kilpatrick, Mona Charen, G. Gordon Liddy, Robert Novak, Bay Buchanan, Pat Robertson, Joseph Sobran, Paul Harvey, Rush Limbaugh, Phyllis Schlafly, Maureen Reagan and John McLaughlin bemoan the need for more conservative media voices.

3 p.m. Nature: Join James Watt and Charlton Heston as they use machine guns to bag endangered species.

4 p.m. Nova: "Creationism, discredited but what the hell?"

5 p.m. Newt Gingrich News Hour: Clarence Thomas and Bob Packwood present in-depth personal reports on sexual harassment. Patrick Buchanan says he is being shut out of national exposure.

6 p.m. Mystery: Hercule Poirot, Miss Jane Marple and Sherlock Holmes team up to investigate Whitewater.

7 p.m. Great Performances: Patrick Buchanan is guest conductor of Wagner's "Prelude to a Cultural War," plus a medley of Holocaust material.

8 p.m. Masterpiece Theater: Ibsen's "A Doll's House." Phyllis Schlafly adds a new twist to this classic with an added scene where Nora gladly gives up her independence while her husband chains her to the stove.

9:30 p.m. Washington Week in Review: Guests George Will, Rush Limbaugh, John Sununu, Patrick Buchanan, James J. Kilpatrick, Mona Charen, G. Gordon Liddy, Robert Novak, Bay Buchanan, Pat Robertson, Joseph Sobran, Paul Harvey, Rush Limbaugh, Phyllis Schlafly, Maureen Reagan and John McLaughlin discuss liberal-media bias.

10 p.m. Adam Smith's Money World: How to Profit from Ozone Depletion.

10:30 p.m. Nightly Business Report: Wall Street celebrates the end of all laws regarding antitrust, consumer protection, workplace safety, environmental protection, minimum wage and child labor.

Save the gripes, send us a letter

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

I was sitting in class the other day, not far from a young man who was reading that day's Collegian. I watched him barely glance at the front page and thumb straight through to the comics. When he finished, he threw the paper beneath his desk, turned to the guy sitting next to him and said that the Collegian was really worthless. There was absolutely nothing worth reading in it.

Normally, I would ignore such comments. Having worked on the paper for the better part of a year and a half, I've developed a pretty thick skin about what people say about our work. But this time, I am tired, and I've had just about enough of the caustic remarks, snaps, snide comments and slurs I am going to take.

Let me make this very clear.

We are a student newspaper. Almost every job at Student Publications, from the editor in chief straight down to the receptionists, are done by students — students who have classes, jobs and families outside of Kedzie Hall and yet who still manage to spend an inordinate amount of their time on the phone, at the computer and in the darkroom trying to keep you, our readers, up to date.

Yes, we make mistakes and yes, we have made bad decisions in the past, but we are still learning our craft and are getting better every semester. It bothers me that people who have never spent half their evening proofing a column the length of your leg or covering a meeting of the Manhattan Ditch Diggers Union can think that all the effort we put into this paper is without validity.

People at this paper are proud of what they do. And they should be because, believe it or not, we're one of the best student newspapers in the country, having won the Pacemaker, a prestigious award given to the top five collegiate newspapers, two years in a row.

More than 12 hours a day, up to six days a week, we do our best at Student Publications to fulfill our responsibilities as journalists, photographers and advertisers. And we enjoy our work. It may make us drooling, chain-smoking schizophrenics, but this isn't about us. It's about you, the reader.

Now, if you don't think we're doing our job, or that we are doing it in a substandard method, it is your responsibility as our readers to let us know what you have a problem with.

Write us. Phone. Send us a fax by slow boat. We'll be courteous. We won't pee on your shoes. Most of us have a modicum of manners. As long as it isn't a letter bomb or graffiti on the side of Anderson Hall, we will read and take into consideration every constructive suggestion you send us, recommending ways we can improve the Collegian.

Or if you're the more adventurous type and think you could do it better, I suggest you fill out an application for the Editorial Board or for any of the other positions we have available every semester and get your ideas in more directly.

If you'd rather not, if you'd prefer to bitch and moan and whine about what we aren't instead of what we are, I suggest you do it where I can't hear it or shut up altogether.

▶ RELIGION

Beliefs are personal

Dear editor,

I would like to respond to Greg Adams' letter. Mr. Adams, I would like to remind you of the reason the Pilgrims came to this strange new country: to escape the persecution for religious beliefs which you now propose. America was NOT founded with the idea that all people should hold the same beliefs and ideologies. This country was founded on the firm foundation of free exchange of ideas and respect for different ideas. In the spirit of the week of celebration for Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., I ask you and all people to celebrate different ideas, religions and beliefs. Everyone on this campus has the right to worship any god they choose, or no god at all.

Respect their beliefs by keeping religion out of public school. You are free and welcome to praise God, pray, and worship Him as you choose at any time, just don't force others to follow you. Look at it this way, Mr. Adams, if you were a student in a different country that tried to force you to become a Muslim, Jew or Satan worshiper, you would object. Would you let someone force you to worship a God you did not believe in? I think not, and you cannot expect your peers to change their religious beliefs just for you. If you believe so strongly that religion should be in school, go to a private school. I did for three years, and they are excellent schools. By the way, how can I be anti-Christ just because I am a liberal, if I went to a private Lutheran college and am a confirmed Christian?

▶ MULTICULTURALISM

Society must be divisive

Dear editor,

I have a suggestion for columnist John Hart, who enlightened us Thursday with his informative commentary. Take a vacation.

Go find your Utopia, John, the one whose citizens have never learned diversity, yet there is no hampering divisiveness present among the people.

When you get there, send me a post card. I want to know how a diverse nation can exist without its citizens constantly dividing among themselves. Taking a good hard look at the world as we know it, without multiculturalism as part of society, there is no incentive to work out and understand fundamental differences.

When differences arise among the populace, separatism abounds. In this "monoculturalist" society of which you speak, how will it be guaranteed that everyone will accept this "shared set of values"?

For that matter, you really don't say if one person's values are healthy and strong enough, how they can be swayed in a multiculturalist society. Most important of all, who will be the ones to say what the "shared set" will be? Your rhetoric has not changed much in a semester, and it still has moral loopholes big enough for an elephant to jump through.

I think we'll all be glad when you take the time necessary to think through the many sides a single issue may have, instead of being completely self-serving.

By the way, I hate "Crossfire."

John Henderson

▶ CAMPUS SAFETY

Door locks won't help

Dear editor,

I disagree with the editorial written by Scott Allen Miller in the Wednesday Collegian. I am a resident of Ford Hall and have lived there for four years.

I have seen new people every year who are formed into adults by their environment. This is why I feel that the editorial is misguided.

I do not think that making every door lock automatically is going to solve any more problems than just locking the entry doors.

I believe that would lead to an even falser sense of security and lets people think they don't need to worry about safety.

It might feel like now, instead of a family member looking out for them, Housing and Dining Services does. Then they are delivered to the "real" world believing everyone else will look out for them.

Why not educate them? Why not teach them about depression and suicide so they can help others?

Let's teach them about rape and how to deal with it or prevent it through programming and activities.

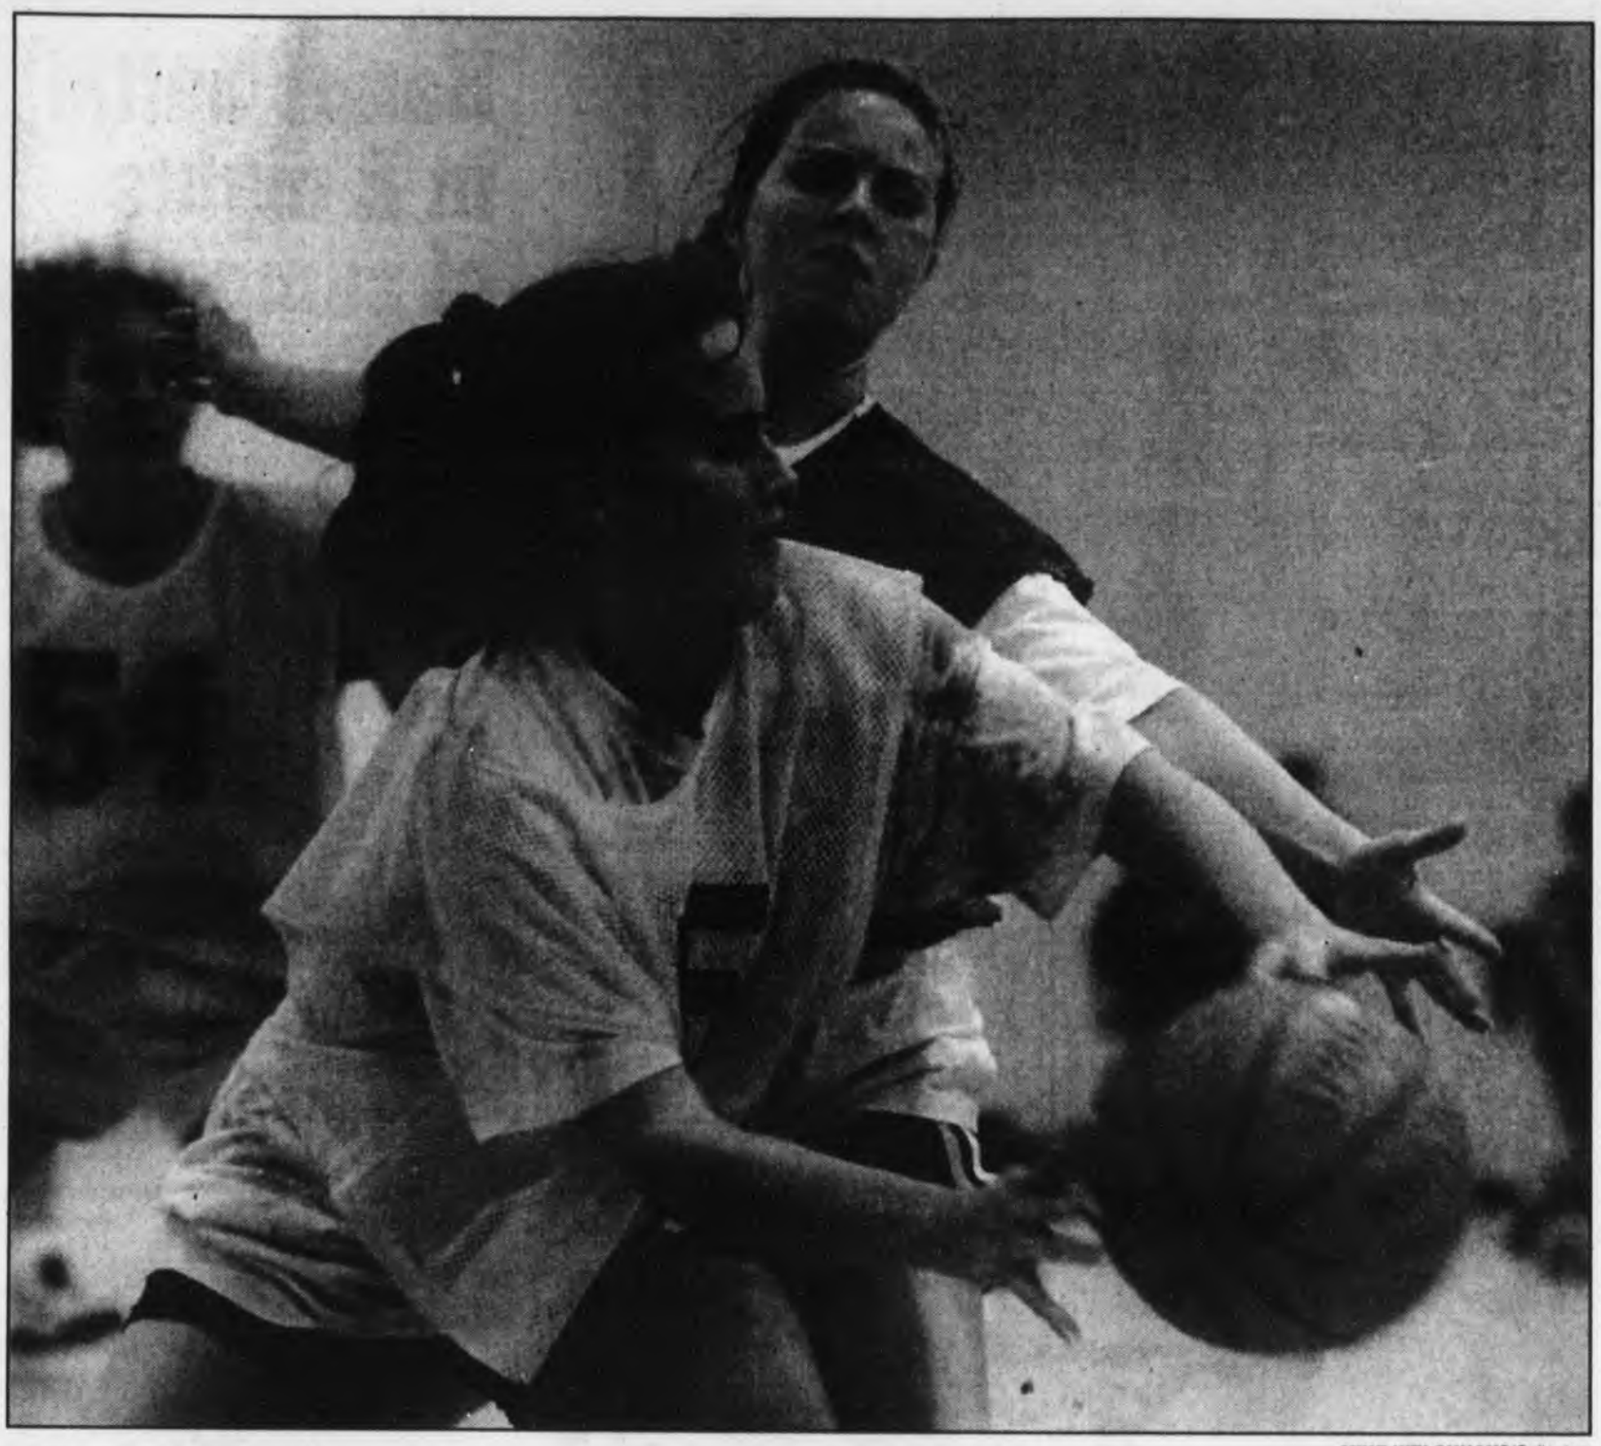
Education is a powerful tool to give residents that no one can take from them.

They can only give it to others. What about the people who don't attend programs?

The people who learn at programs go out and tell others what they've learned. I have seen it happen on the floors I've lived on.

It is a powerful tool when peers educate peers.

So make the goal an educational one, not a guardian for residents.



They will have a better chance in the "real" world.

Green placed in expansion draft

SCOTT REYNOLDS
Collegian

Former K-State defensive back Rogerick Green was one of six Tampa Bay Buccaneers the team made eligible for the NFL expansion draft.

The expansion draft, which is on Feb. 15, will allow the new franchises, Jacksonville and Carolina, the chance to fill out their rosters with NFL veterans.

Green

Green, who played at K-State from 1988 to 1991, was drafted by Tampa Bay in the fifth round of the 1992 NFL draft.

He spent most of his first two years with the Bucs on injured reserve nursing elbow and knee injuries.

Green, who plays cornerback and free safety, saw little action in 1994. He was primarily used on special teams where he blocked a punt in the week-five victory over the Detroit Lions.

"I credit that block to Coach Bobby Stoops back at K-State," said Green after the Lions game. "People from the K-State secondary have blocked a lot of kicks over the years, and Coach Stoops is the reason."

Green, who also blocked a field goal to key the preseason win against the Cincinnati Bengals, recorded two special-teams tackles in "94.

At K-State, he blocked five kicks and tallied 95 tackles in his career. He also had eight career interceptions, five of those during his junior year, earning him second-team All-Big Eight honors in the 1990 Coaches poll. Green's coverage and special-teams ability, combined with his 4.40 speed in the 40-yard dash, are what made him so attractive to Tampa Bay.

"Rogerick Green has the tools and the speed to play in the NFL," said former Bucs' defensive coordinator Floyd Peters. "He's just got to stay healthy and make the most of his opportunities."

The Buccaneers brought in three veteran cornerbacks in the "94 off-season to team with starter Martin Mayhew. There is also a log jam at Tampa Bay's safety positions as well, leaving Green the odd man out.

Rice considers early retirement

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Jerry Rice says he's approaching the Super Bowl as if it's his last game, and it just might be.

"This is something I feel a professional athlete goes through every year when the season is over," the San Francisco 49ers' great receiver said Monday.

"The fire that burns inside you is something you think about.

"If it's still there, you come back next year. But if it's not, then it's time to walk away. I don't think I'd have any problems doing that."

Rice, who became the NFL's all-time touchdown leader this season, said he has made no decision.

San Francisco coach George Seifert, whose team plays San Diego on Sunday for the NFL championship, seemed taken aback by Rice's talk of possible retirement.

"That's the first I've heard any mention of that with Jerry Rice, but I don't think it's an issue right now," Seifert said.

San Francisco quarterback Steve Young said he understood where Rice was coming from.

"I think any time you reach a peak you think about it," Young said.

"It's a natural thing."

But Young also downplayed Rice's remarks.

"He wants to set every receiving record," Young said. "I know he's possessed to be the greatest receiver in football history."

Rice, 32, is coming off a career-best 112 receptions during the regular season, and he led the league with 1,499 receiving yards.

He surpassed Jim Brown as the NFL's all-time touchdown leader with three scores in an opening win over the Los Angeles Raiders and now has 139 touchdowns.

Asbury discusses other coaches

TODD STEWART
Collegian

After Wednesday night, round one of the battle of Big Eight freshman coaches will be complete.

Those coaches include Iowa State's Tim Floyd and Oklahoma's Kelvin Sampson.

K-State coach Tom Asbury said that there is some similarity in the three situations.

"You come into a situation that's brand new, and you're in a great conference - there's pressure to win," Asbury said. "And if you got guys you don't like, now's the time to ship them out."

Saturday's 79-73 loss to Iowa State, in which Cyclone frontcourt stars Fred Hoiberg, Loren Meyer and Julius Michalik poured in 58 points and almost single-handedly beat the Cats, seemed like an opportune time for Asbury to ship them out.

"I told Floyd to get rid of Hoiberg. I told him he's a real bad attitude guy," Asbury said Monday at his weekly press conference. "I told him Michalik didn't speak very good English and Meyer can't stay away from trains."

But Asbury did like the sense of discipline Sampson brought to the Oklahoma Sooners — discipline and class Asbury never saw during the Billy Tubbs era in Norman, Okla.

"I don't want to put a knock on Tubbs, except he's a jerk and an idiot, a negative recruiter and a real turd," Asbury said. "Other than that, he's not a bad guy.

Probably way overrated as a coach," he said. "Other than that, he's just a terrific human being. You won't hear me say that about another coach, ever, before or ever after. Write that down."

But Asbury had nothing but positives to say about Sampson, the current Oklahoma squad and their standout junior forward Ryan Minor.

"They probably have the best player in the Big Eight — that's always a dangerous situation," Asbury said of Minor. "I talked to Kelvin before the season, and he knew that Ryan Minor was going to be the best player he ever coached."

With nine regular-season games left on the slate, Asbury said he knows how important it is to play well in this stretch of the season.

Asbury said he saw some good things Saturday against Iowa State.

"We probably didn't play any better than we did in the first half," Asbury said.

Asbury said the Cats always made mistakes during key points in the second half.

"If you try to go through and strategically pick key times to miss free throws, that's exactly when we missed them."

But one player in particular who has impressed Asbury of late freshman Aaron Swartzendruber.

"He's made five straight shots, two are threes, all on the perimeter - that's not easy for a freshman to do," Asbury said. "Felipe Lopez hasn't gone in and made five straight shots."

But Asbury is quick to point out Swartzendruber has a way to go.

"I'm not quite ready to label him as the next Anfernee Hardaway."

Wednesday's game against Oklahoma would seem like a perfect time for Asbury to end the Cats' four-game skid.

"If we know we're good enough to be close, then we've got to be confident to know that we can play with anybody," Asbury said.

Hawks hammer Huskers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Jerold Haase hit five of his first six three-pointers Monday night, and No. 7 Kansas took charge early and rolled to an 84-67 victory over Nebraska.

Kansas, which complained about having to play in Colorado on Saturday and then come right home to host Nebraska, unleashed a 23-7 run to post its 13th straight home victory over the Huskers (14-4 overall, 1-2 Big Eight), who had been off for five days.

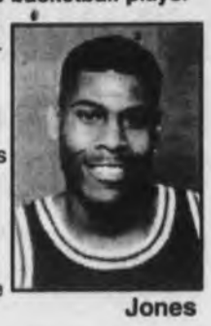
Haase's three-pointer at the buzzer gave the Jayhawks (14-2, 4-1) a 46-30 halftime lead. Then Haase and freshman Raef LaFrentz keyed a 12-5 run to begin the second half.

Nebraska's Jason Glock canned a three-pointer to shave the margin to 71-59 with 5:31 left, then Greg Ostertag sank a pair of free throws, and LaFrentz made it a 16-point bulge with a 12-footer from the lane.

The Huskers shot a season-low 32 percent.

Haase, a transfer guard in his first season at Kansas, wound up with a career-high 25 points, his fourth 20-point game. The 6-foot-3-inch guard sank two 3-pointers during the take-charge run in the first half, which ended with Greg Gurley, who had missed only one of 18 foul shots all season, missing badly on two. Haase hit seven of 12 three-pointers for the game.

Erick Strickland, who had been leading Nebraska with an average of almost 18 points, hit only one of his first 10 shots from the field and wound up with eight points.



Ron Boone led the Huskers with 18 points, and Glock had 10.

Sophomore point guard Jacque Vaughn had seven points, eight rebounds and eight assists for the Jayhawks. LaFrentz had 11 points.

▶FOOTBALL PLAYER HOSPITALIZED BECAUSE OF VIRUS INFECTION

K-State junior wide receiver Tyson Schwieger has been hospitalized in Iowa City, Iowa, the past week with a virus infection.

Schwieger

Schwieger was back home in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, during the extended Martin Luther King Jr., holiday weekend when the illness set in.

"Tyson was admitted to the University of Iowa hospital with a virus infection," K-State head coach Bill Synder said. "He has progressed quite well and is expected to be released soon."

▶K-STATE HIRES NEW ASSISTANT BASEBALL COACH

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark announced the hiring of Rocky Ward to his staff. Ward replaces David Chadd, who accepted a position with the Florida Marlins.

Ward will handle K-State's hitters, infielders and primary recruiting duties.

"We're real happy to get someone of Rocky's caliber, Clark said. "He's an excellent coach, and he brings a knowledge of what it takes to get to the next level in the Big Eight Conference having played and coached at Oklahoma State."

TV junkie should try psychology

Dear Cassandra,

I'm addicted to the boob tube. I tell myself every morning "no more TV." But not even an hour into my promise, I'm back on the couch watching the line-ups. Could you please tell me what I can do?

Hopeless couch potato

Dear Hopeless,

You're obviously not as hopeless as you think, because you're trying to get help. That's the first step towards recovery. Have you ever heard of operant conditioning? It's a well-known technique, used frequently in psychology, based on reward and punishment. You could reward yourself for every hour of TV you abstained from, with a dessert, or anything pleasurable to you. The negative reinforcement (if you happen to slip up) could be to abstain from something you enjoy, like Pepsi. Just remember to start with slow-baby steps.

Bands battle in 2 nights of competition

MARK GOODWIN
Collegian

If the first five-day school week is taking its toll on you, it may be time to skip that painfully early Thursday or Friday morning class and take advantage of a great opportunity to stay out late and damage your eardrums.

Ken Snook, owner of Snookie's Bar, said Snookie's is having a Battle of the Bands Wednesday and Thursday nights in Aggieville.

"There'll be six bands each night, with a grand prize of $400 each night," Snook said.

The first band will begin playing around 9 p.m.

The bands will be selected in random order, with three local and three regional bands competing each night.

Snook said between three and six judges will determine the winner each night.

The winning band will receive the $400 grand prize.

LIVE MUSIC

A Battle of the Bands will be at Snookie's from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. on Wednesday and Thursday. The competition will feature six local and regional bands each night.

At least one participating local band is looking forward to the competition. Bill Hughes, bassist for the Manhattan band, The Invisibles, said the grand prize will be a motivating factor.

"Right now, three-fourths of the band is unemployed, so $400 would be nice," Hughes said.

Hughes and The Invisibles' guitarist, Derek Macy, said theatrics and personal appearance play a big role in the band's performance.

"The first time you ever saw us you'd think we were complete assholes, but it's all a total joke," Macy said.

"We're pretending to be everything in the music industry we hate," Hughes said.

"And we've got great hair," added Macy.

The local bands participating in the Battle of the Bands are as follows: The Invisibles, Billy Danger and Sufferbus on Wednesday, with Spine, Flux and Ten Thumb performing Thursday. Four Kansas City and two Columbia, Mo., bands will complete the 12-band, two-night lineup.

To organize six bands' performances in a four-hour period each night, each band will be limited to about a 40-minute performance.

"We'll have two stages set up, one where the regular stage is and one at the other end of the bar. While one band is playing, the next band will be setting up on the opposite stage, so the turnover between bands will be quick," Snook said.

Snook also said the Battle of the Bands could become a recurring event.

"This is something we'd like to do once or twice a semester. And if it works out, the prize money will go up," Snook said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

equipment changes and renovations than a sub-sandwich shop, he said.

Tim Lehmann said he thought UGB's role was to make the policy allowing the food contractors in and then giving the go ahead for contractors to be found.

"My assumption was that we were giving them permission to look for a food contract," he said.

Lehmann said he assumed that one of the contractors would be chosen to fill the vacancy in the Rec Center, but he did not know if UGB or the Union director would make that decision.

At Sills' suggestion, UGB then gave permission for him to check into the possibility of a sub-sandwich shop and to give the possible contract length of three years, Carney said.

Although Carney isn't upset that Subway was chosen, he said he thought the proposals submitted should have been reviewed by UGB before the final decision was made.

"At no time were those proposals brought back to the Union Governing Board," Carney said.

Carney said even though outside food contractors may be a part of the Union enhancement plan, UGB hasn't accepted the plan yet.

"Jack Sills is jumping out there and establishing a precedent," he said.

Trent LeDoux, second year UGB member, said he thought the decision to sign the contract was fine.

"We should probably have had a vote on it," he said.

UGB had discussed the possibility of an outside food contractor before, but permission had never been granted, LeDoux said.

"We have dealt with this issue before. The board knew where it would go and what we wanted," LeDoux said.

UGB is in a period of transition between an advisory position and a policy-making position, he said. Before 1993, the board didn't have any elected students on it. Now students with their own agendas are getting elected to the board, he said.

"Signing contracts and stuff like that is more management's decision," Mein said.

The Union Enhancement Steering Committee, which Mein and Sills lead with Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement, was already looking into bringing in outside food contractors, she said.

Since the Rec Center's snack bar was closed, Subway's proposal was attractive to the Union. The owners are two K-State alumni. They own the largest Subway chain in Kansas, Mein said.

"They want to gear toward students," she said.

The Rec Center Subway will accept coupons other Subway's won't in an effort to reach out to the students, Mein said.

"They want to be a win-win partner with us, and that's what we want as well," Sills said.

The opening of Subway will mean some changes for the Stateroom and Union Station, but Sills didn't think Subway was direct competition.

Artist evolves using shapes, colors

Color is the other significant contributing factor to her work.

"I don't do a lot of light in my work — mostly color and shape," Cyr said.

In the middle of the gallery lay three floor installations related to Cyr's family.

Two of them, "Flower 1959-1982" and "Flower 1982-1992," appear as cloth circles surrounded by inscriptions on the floor. The cloth circles consist of apron scraps Cyr recently collected.

The apron circle symbolizes the constant cycle of provision — cooking breakfast, cooking lunch, cooking dinner, and then beginning again with breakfast, Cyr said.

Cyr said the cloth circles are really images of flowers, or wall flowers, to be exact. Wall flowers, meaning the domestic work is done in the background and not fully appreciated by all.

Her triangular paintings, all from 1994, such as "Easter Without Christopher" and "Two Sisters and a Fireman," are very monochromatic.

After working through triangles, Cyr is back working with a square canvas.

In fact, the whole gallery is somewhat a morphing trip of geometrical shapes. From the triangles, tetrahedrons, and checkerboard squares, to the donut flowers and simple squares, Cyr is still very much evolving as an artist.

"I can't stick to one thing," Cyr said.

In two months, Cyr will be having her first baby. That experience is likely to take shape in her art.

Graduation fee required will be difficult to collect the fee.

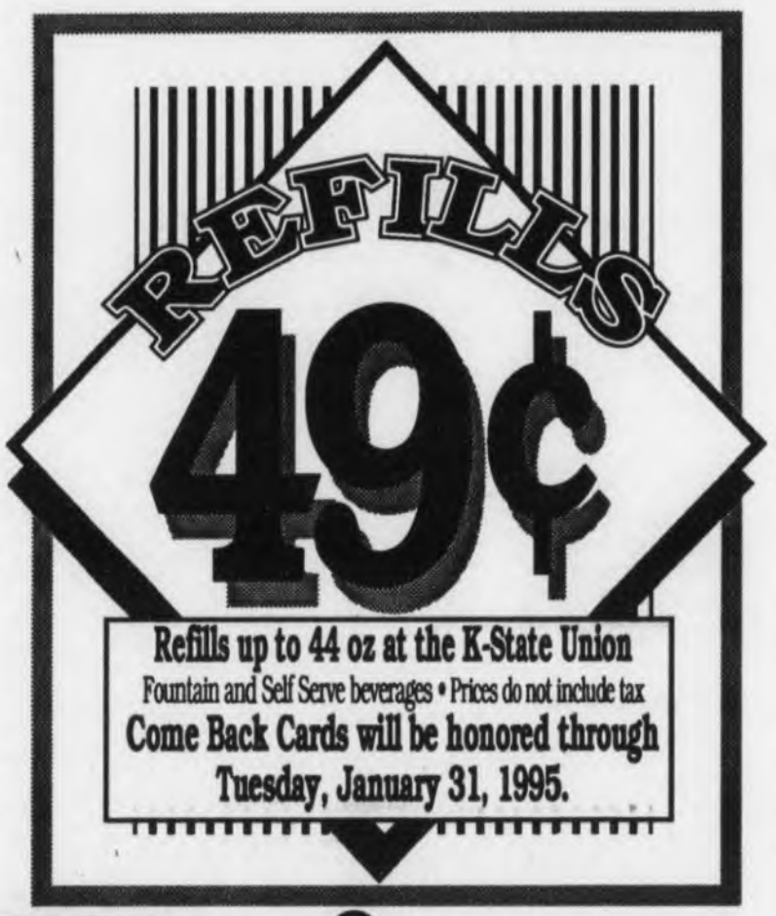
"Some students have already turned in their graduation applications," Ratzloff said. It is not known how they will collect the fee from the applications already turned in.

Students will have to pay the fee for each graduation application that they fill out.

The graduation fee is nonrefundable and is a one-time-only fee.



"If someone is not accepted for graduation, the fee will still go into the commencement account," Ratzloff said.

Coffman said the $15 fee is mandatory for everyone who is graduating.

"All students, not just undergraduates, will be required to pay the fee," Coffman said.

Instead of the graduation fee being included as an activity fee, like other fees students pay during enrollment, it's included as an academic fee.

"It is a specialized fee for a specific purpose," Ratzloff said.

winterizing That works

Tire care-Underinflated tires waste gas and wear rapidly. For maximum tire life have them rotated and balanced twice a year.
Engine efficiency- To avoid wasting a quarter tank of gas each time you fill up, make sure to have a periodic check-up and tune-up.
Oil and filter change- When you change the oil, change the oil filter, too. Make sure to change oil at least as often as recommended in your owner's manual.
Keeping up appearances- Keep your car washed and waxed, take care of upholstery and repair body damage ASAP. This will ensure top dollar when it's time to trade.
Battery and electrical system- If your car has been slow to start, have the battery checked. The problem may be as simple as a loose or corroded battery cable.
Cooling system- Proper cooling system service, including flushing and refilling with the correct antifreeze mixture, will protect your engine and mazimize the system's efficiency.
Air filter- Is your car gulping more gas than usual? Check the air filter; it may be dirty. It should be replaced every 24,000miles.
Brakes- Have your brakes inspected annually by a qualified technician.
Transmission-Check automatic transmission fluid regularly, especially when driving under severe conditions. Replace fluid and filter as needed.

▶ LANDON LECTURE

PEROT LIVE

Perot says hard work is the key to happiness

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Just do it.

That was the message that Ross Perot, billionaire and former presidential candidate, delivered to a crowd of about 5,500 at the 99th Landon Lecture at Bramlage Coliseum Tuesday.

Instead of focusing his speech on economics or political issues, Perot targeted his speech toward the college students in the audience.

Perot used the success stories of the Wright Brothers, Steve Jobs of Apple Computers, Bill Gates of Microsoft and his own personal success story to motivate the students and show that it takes failures to gain successes.

Melissa Dugan, sophomore in criminal justice, said she enjoyed Perot's stories and the topic of his lecture.

"I'm glad he talked about stuff that affected us," Dugan said. "It kept us interested and was more appropriate than economics would have been. He really made sense and brought it down to layman's terms."

Don Kellogg, the membership chairman of the Shawnee chapter of United We Stand America, said he was pleased to see the amount of young people who attended the Landon Lecture.

"It's real good that they're here, because they'll be the ones who we'll be turning over the $4.6-billion debt to," Kellogg said.

"The politicians better do something about the terrible deficit, because we're not going to be the ones who are going to have to pay for it later on," he said.

In addition to the college students who attended, 15 busloads of United We Stand America supporters and high-school and grade-school students packed the seats and aisles.

Gov. Bill Graves also made an appearance at the Landon Lecture.

Perot began his Landon Lecture by stressing the importance of a college education.

"You all have good luck to live in a country where everyone dreams of coming someday," he said. "You're also going to college. Those in America who have a high-school diploma or less would do anything to get a college education."

▶ ATTENDANCE POLICY

Students attend class, not lecture

CHRISTI WRIGHT
Collegian

K-State takes a great deal of pride in its Landon Lecture Series, but some students were prohibited from attending the lecture because they had to attend class.

There is no University policy forcing teachers to cancel class for the lectures, but they are strongly encouraged to do so.

"We send out a letter about once a year encouraging the administrators, faculty and key people to let the students out for the lectures. We don't want to infringe on their rights; we just do it to encourage them to let the students out," Lavon Wells, administrative assistant in the office of the Provost, said.

One faculty member agrees with the current policy and said he feels it should be up to the individual instructor.

"The instructors should not be told to cancel class for a lecture. Right now, the instructors are encouraged to let the students go, and I think it's a good system," George Clark, professor of geology, said.

"I think the students should have every opportunity to go to the lectures. I have no problem if the students are absent two times during the semester. If they want to spend one absence going to a lecture, I think that's fine," Clark said.

Clark did not cancel his class, but he gave his students the option to go to the lecture.

"Probably one-third of my class was gone, and some walked in late after the lecture," Clark said.

Some students in History of Aviation at 11:05 p.m. wanted to attend the lecture but couldn't because their class was not canceled.

"I would have gone, but I couldn't afford to miss the notes he gave us in class," Drew

▶ AGGRAVATED ROBBERIES

Police searching for suspects

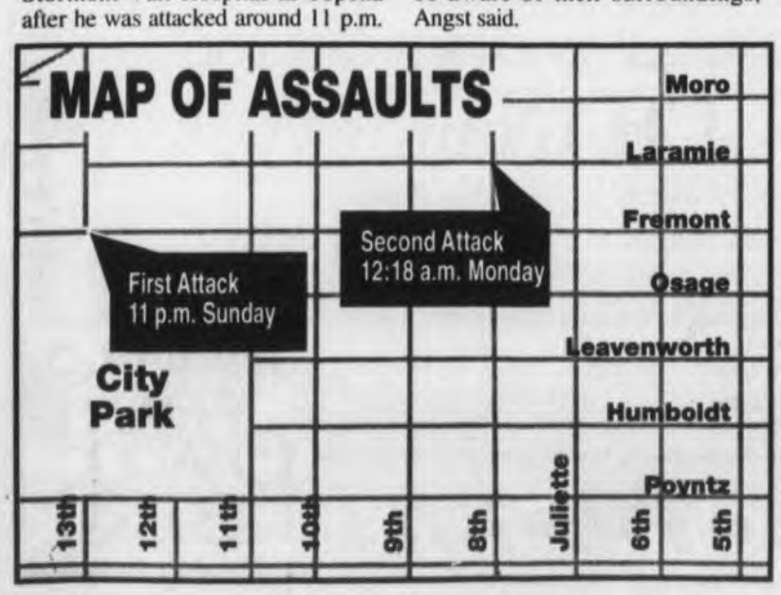
SARAH LUNDAY
Collegian

The Riley County Police Department is searching for a suspect or suspects involved in two related aggravated robbery and battery incidents in city park.

"Several people or groups are being interviewed concerning the two robberies that are believed to be connected," Sgt. Doug Howser said.

The two victims involved in the separate occurrences sustained injuries to the head, and their wallets were taken. Howser said the investigation is still looking at evidence and waiting for an interview with victim Christopher Reeves.

Reeves, senior in history, is at Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka after he was attacked around 11 p.m. Sunday.



The aggravated robbery and battery happened at the 1300 block of Fremont in City Park. Reeves condition is reported as stable.

Reeves' father, Ron Reeves, said the doctors are optimistic about the student's condition and expect him to be in rehabilitation soon.

At 12:18 a.m., an hour after the first attack, Ralph Reichert, a Manhattan resident, was reported as the victim of an aggravated robbery at Eighth and Laramie streets.

Lt. Adam Angst of the Riley County Police said the investigation department is working on the case.

"Any time an individual is out in an open area, they should constantly be aware of their surroundings," Angst said.

▶ CONSTRUCTION

Mill closes to make room for new bridge

MELISSA HOYT
Collegian

The calendar on the wall of an empty shell of an office showed November 1994, the month Manhattan Milling Co. shut its doors forever.

The large storage buildings that were once full of grain, feed and flour echoed with emptiness as they were sold in a state auction Saturday.

The 120-year-old mill has withstood four owners, the flood of 1951, a fire and the elements of Kansas weather, but it could not withstand a four-lane bridge.

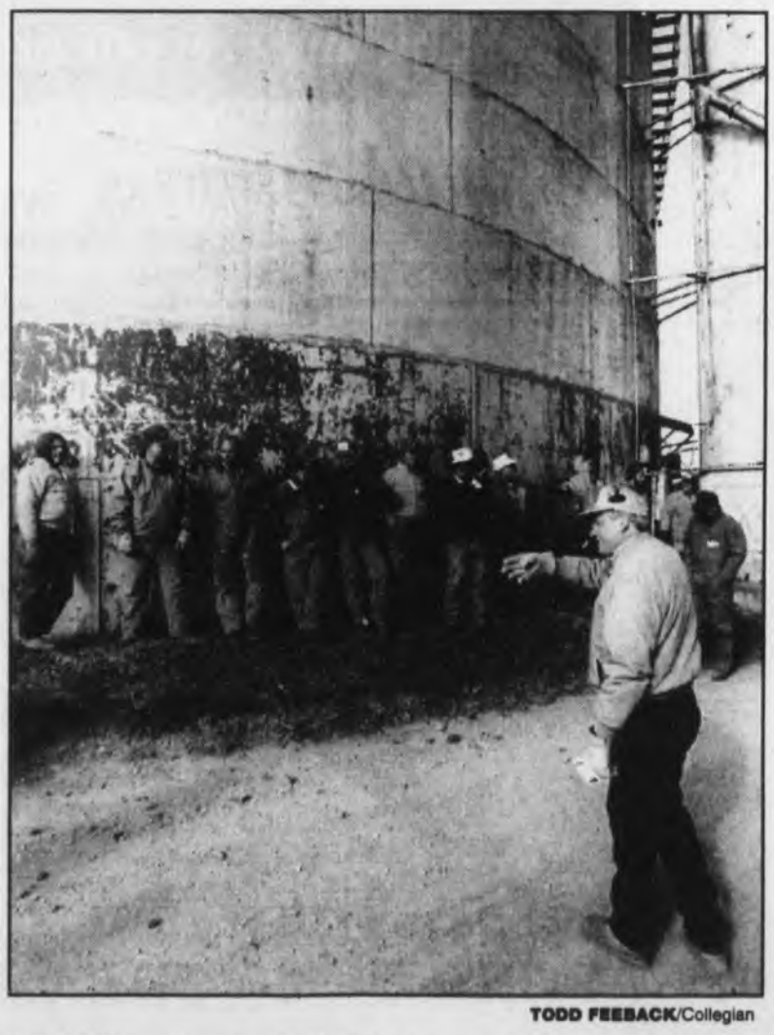
The bridge is being constructed over the Kansas River. It will be using the land Manhattan Milling occupies for an access ramp.

The State of Kansas purchased the building and the land for $609,000 in September from Bob Rousey, owner and manager.

The mill was the only business in the area that could not be relocated.

This was because the grain bins, concrete storage facilities and feed mixers would cost more to relocate than they would be worth.

"You just don't move something like this," Rousey said. "There has been political talk for four years to get rid of us. I think a Red Lobster and a Luby's are going in at the mall. They need this land for the ramp and new accesses to the mall for those restaurants."



MAKING WAY FOR K-177

Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said he knew nothing of the political talk but that he knew the Kansas Department of Transportation was planning the bridge project three years ago.

Manhattan Milling was a flour mill before it was changed to a feed mill, Rousey said. It was one of the first businesses in Manhattan.

The old, four-story limestone building was once on the Kansas register for being a historic site, but it was taken off after the limestone portion of the building burned to the ground in 1982. It was rebuilt to its present

▶ K-STATE BOTANICAL GARDEN TO BE HOME FOR GREENERY, TEACHING UNIT

The first phase of the Kansas State University Garden is under way.

The 30-foot by 75-foot maintenance building for the garden has been started and is located behind Lot B-3.

The building will house the office of the assistant director of the garden, small vehicles and gardening tools, Phyllis Lamont, project manager of the garden, said.

"We laid the slab a couple of months ago, and have been erecting the building the past three weeks," Marcus Nelson, leader of the maintenance building project from Construction, Inc., Wamego said.

"This is going to be top-notch," Lamont said. "This whole thing is going to be kept nice and neat."

The maintenance building was included in the first phase because the garden needs to be properly maintained after it is in place, said Alice Le Duc, acting chairperson of the garden advisory committee.

The 12-acre garden is developed as the funds become available, she said.

Funding for the garden is received from the garden foundation and through fund-raising. The garden is a self-sustaining entity, Le Duc said.

Concrete bulk storage bins that will contain soil and mulch for the garden are another part of phase one. Both the maintenance building and the bins should be finished by fall 1995, she said.

"The maintenance building was designed by the facilities' architect at the KSU engineering and architecture service," Chip Winslow, associate professor of landscape architecture, said.

When the garden is completed, it will be departmentalized into smaller gardens for use as an educational tool.

"The gardens will be used as a teaching facility maintained by horticulture students," Le Duc said.

The botanic garden is a project of the horticulture, forestry and recreational resources department.

"Not only is the garden beautiful and serene, but everything will be properly labeled for educational signage," Le Duc said.

Lamont said the maintenance building is a center of organization. Students will receive their work assignments from their supervisors at the building.

In addition to the maintenance building, a garden visitor center is in progress.

An existing building attached to the former dairy barn location is being renovated by construction science students for use as the visitor center.

The remodeled building will include the director of the garden's office, a general information center, gift shop and conference room.

▶ EPA RECOMMENDS TESTING HOMES FOR DEADLY, ODORLESS RADON GAS

Death comes silently from the basement.

As it presses close against you, you can't see it. You can't even smell it.

It's radon, the second-leading cause of lung cancer.

Radon is a naturally-occurring gas created by the decay of radium in the soil, which in turn is created by the decay of uranium.

"The radium emits energy and/or particles, and when it emits that energy or particles, it causes a change in the nucleus," Bruce Snead, state extension specialist, said. "That atom becomes radon."

These particles get trapped in your lungs when you breathe and release small bursts of energy.

This results in lung tissue damage and lung cancer over the course of a lifetime, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

Radon is measured with units called picocuries per liter.

"A picocurie is literally the number of radioactive decays in a period of time," Snead said. "2.22 radioactive disintegrations per minute in a liter of air is one picocurie."

The EPA recommends that you fix your home if the radon level is four picocuries per liter or higher.

About 600 homes have been tested since 1986 in Manhattan.

"Approximately half the homes tested have shown levels equal to or greater than four picocuries," Judy Willingham, environmental health supervisor, said.

Willingham said the environmental health department always has radon test kits available for $10.

"It's a public service," Willingham said. "They come available at basically cost."

According to the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, 4,943 of 13,706 homes tested for radon statewide showed elevated levels of radon.

▶ GRAVES GIVES WASHBURN UNIVERSITY 3.5-PERCENT BUDGET INCREASE

TOPEKA (AP) — Gov. Bill Graves said he has changed his mind and decided to provide Washburn University of Topeka with the same 3.5-percent operating-budget increase as he recommended for the state Board of Regents universities, Budget Director Gloria Timmer said.

When he presented his proposed budget to the Kansas Legislature two weeks ago, Graves did not increase the amount of state aid going to Washburn for the fiscal year that begins on July 1.

His budget amendment sent to the appropriations committees would increase Washburn's state operating grant by $238,232, to $7.04 million for fiscal 1996.

"He thought about it and decided that was the only fair and reasonable thing to do," Timmer said.

However, she added, Graves has not embraced Washburn's proposal that its state aid be based on a percentage of its total public-funding base — which would include revenue the school receives from a local property tax.

David Parks, junior in business education, auditions for a spot on the Worlds of Fun 1995 show program, while Walter Bryant (left), manager of show productions, and Gary Noble, director of creative services, evaluate his performance. Parks played excerpts of "That's the Way Love Goes" by Merle Haggard and "Dreaming with My Eyes Open" by Clay Walker.

Worlds of Fun auditions students to fill summer shows

Singing could be heard resonating from the K and S rooms of the K-State Union Tuesday afternoon.

Worlds of Fun had auditions for its 1995 show program, which includes a country music show in the Tivoli Music Hall and Stax of Wax, a show featuring rock 'n' roll from the 1950s, '60s and '70s.

More than 1.3 million people annually attend these shows, Gary Noble, director of creative services for Worlds of Fun, said.

Noble said a large number of people audition for a relatively few number of positions.

"Generally, we'll have about 250 people audition for 22 jobs," he said.

Additional auditions are scheduled at the University of Kansas, the University of Missouri and the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, Noble said.

He also said performing during the summer at Worlds of Fun helps people refine their skills.

"It's wonderful professional experience in that you find out if that's a career you want to pursue," Noble said.

Noble said these particular jobs are ideal for college students because the shows start in late May and end in mid-August.

He also said if someone works 35 hours per week for 10 weeks this summer, the performer could earn up to $3,700 this summer, including a housing stipend.

Worlds of Fun has had auditions for these shows for the last 23 years.

"After 23 years, we've probably seen 12,000 auditions," Noble said.

Noble said auditioning is tougher than performing because you're competing against others who would be happy to see you fall down or sing a wrong note.

"It's a little bit different when you're competing for a paying gig," Noble said.

David Parks, junior in business education, sang on TNN's "Be a Star" in 1993 and also at Bowinkle's, Rambler's and Kickers Bar & Grill.

He said he wasn't nervous about auditioning in front of other people.

"If I don't get this, I'm still where I am if they don't pick me," Parks said.

Melinda Rogge, sophomore in vocal performance, said the audition has more bearing on her life.

"Basically, I need to decide if this is where I really want to head in my life," Rogge said.

Rogge, whose hobby is singing karaoke in bars, said she hoped to do well during her audition.

"If I mess up, it will affect my whole summer," she said.

Clinton speech stresses partnership

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton went before a Republican Congress Tuesday night and asked his political opponents to join him in bringing about "dramatic change in our economy, in our government and in ourselves."

Looking back on the GOP election landslide last November as well as the 1992 vote that put him in the White House, Clinton said in a nationally broadcast State of the Union address: "We didn't hear America singing. We heard America shouting. Now we must say: We hear you. We will work together to earn your trust."

Clinton was the first Democrat since Harry Truman to face a Republican Congress, and the White House viewed his speech as a crucial step in rebuilding his troubled presidency.

Clinton used his speech to launch a national campaign to combat teen pregnancy.

To cut down on illegal immigration, Clinton proposed creation of a national data bank to help employers verify the identification of prospective workers.

He also pledged to seek a raise in the minimum wage from the current $4.25 an hour but shied from mentioning a specific pay scale; GOP leaders oppose it. Clinton favors a boost to $5 over two years, aides said.

Over and over, Clinton stressed conciliation and partnership, but he sketched out sharp differences with Republicans on how to cut taxes, shrink government and help the middle class. "Let us put aside partisanship, pettiness and pride," he said.

"As we embark on a new course, let us put our country first, remembering that regardless of our party label, we are all Americans."

New Jersey Gov. Christine Todd Whitman, who has rocketed to political stardom with a tax-cutting plan, was chosen to give the Republican response.
